"THIS RECKLESS AGE"

A page from real life with a big box-office future!

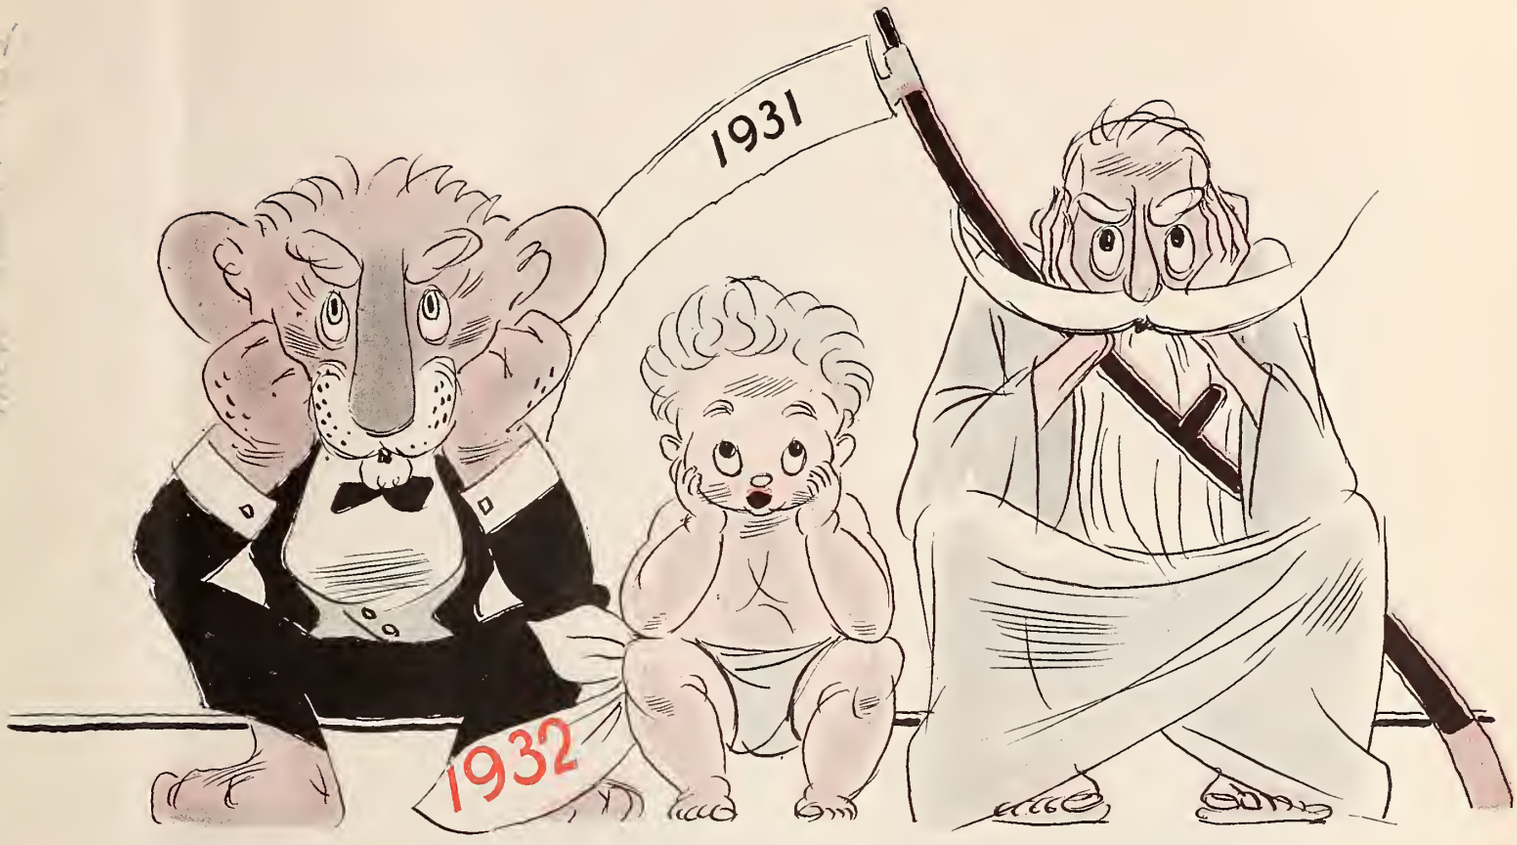
Big names in a big story of modern life! A picture full of laughs and romance and pathos that'll hit home! The kind of picture that makes people feel they are on the screen; one they'll understand and like! Swell entertainment that's bound to swell box-office grosses!



CHARLES "Buddy" ROGERS

Directed by Frank Tuttle

PARAMOUNT

Think it over carefully, boys.
It's important for the whole industry:

HOW TO START the NEW YEAR RIGHT!

Let's get 1932 off on the right foot! Let's give the kid the best send-off any New Year ever had in this industry's history.

Wouldn't it be great if there were one of those whopping BIG pictures handy—one of those once-in-a-decade smashes that headline the papers—a show that's a credit (and cash!) to the entire film business! Well, bless your soul, take a look here—

It's METRO-

HELLO 1932!

—what a break for you, kid—

Here comes

Marie DRESSLER

in a heluva hit EMMA

We're pleased that it happened just at the New Year! A tonic for this whole industry is the arrival at the psychological moment of Marie Dressler, to pack houses, to stir up a renewed enthusiasm among picture-goers. She will do it with "Emma" because it is her greatest contribution to thrill and and joy on the screen. Thousands of exhibitors who attended nationwide preview trade screenings know about it already. Take our sincere word for it here, that no matter how much success you have had with previous Marie Dressler attractions, "Emma" will sweep those records into the discard!

"EMMA" is a CLARENCE BROWN production, with Richard Cromwell, Jean Hersholt in the cast. It was written by Frances Marion, author of "The Champ"

GOLDWYN-MAYER'S Pride and Joy!

Give them LAUGHS and YOU'LL be happy!

It's a great laugh—and it never weakens. Down-to-earth comedy that makes 'em howl, scream, and cry for more.

THE PREVIEW WAS A PANIC. At the Karlton Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., laughs burst out at the rate of ONE-A-MINUTE (actually clocked.)

STEPPING SISTERS

with LOUISE DRESSER, MINNA GOMBELL, JOBYNA HOWLAND (a howl) WM. COLLIER, SR. Howard Phillips, Stanley Smith, Ferdinand Munier, Barbara Weeks. Directed by Seymour Felix.

Not so social — but, boy, were they sociable!

FREE SHOWS AND MORALE

THE skippers of the ships of state and the captains of industry gazing upon sullen skies over the troubled waters of commerce have appointed a committee to attend to the matter of unemployment and its griefs. The committee, in strict adherence to the technique, has appointed other committees and sub-committees, ad infinitum. And from among these committees have come many ideas calculated to make the motion picture an important contributor to pots of anodyne. Some weeks ago the industry—meaning, as usual, mostly the theatre—engaged in the presentation of benefit shows in behalf of community funds, across the nation.

Now from among the maze of committees, as related elsewhere in the news pages of this issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, with what is either extraordinary daring, or else extraordinary naivete, is forthcoming a suggestion that the exhibitors across the nation should contribute free admissions to supply entertainment to the poor and needy, in behalf of public morale.

To those who know enough about the amusement business, the conduct of theatres and the nature of the intangible wares they must purvey, it is painfully obvious that this scheme, besprayed though it may be with the sanctified aroma of charity, is tantamount to inviting John Wanamaker, Sears, Roebuck & Company, and Swift & Company to take merchandise from their show windows, their shelves and their warehouses and distribute it to the needy.

It will be found that in every community the showmen, the exhibitors who operate the local theatres, are loyal, generous members of society, givers to funds and causes in just such terms as other well minded business men. That is their proper participation.

Consideration of the proposal of free motion picture admissions for the unemployed and the impoverished would be a deal more logical if the status of the motion picture were such that the administrators of community chests and like funds were so convinced of the public necessity that they were given to allotting a portion of their expenditures to the purchase of theatre seats along with clothing, coal and food.

In some official and quasi-official quarters it has been falteringly suggested that this present movement for free seats for the unemployed constitutes in itself, here and now, an important recognition of the motion picture on a new basis as a necessity. That is a lot of what Mr. Will Rogers used to call applesauce. It means rather an invitation and suggestion to the industry of the screen to buy itself some respectability and status by good deeds in a national emergency. That smacks too much of the ancient situation wherein Casey, proprietor of the corner saloon, always had to put himself down for a handsome figure, whether the cause was an alderman's picnic or carillon for the parish.

The status of the motion picture is better than that. Further, an improvement of the status of the motion picture in the public mind will be attained by its conduct as a business and by what it presents on the screen in terms of expression, and in no other manner.

Another obvious, but widely ignored fact is, that in such situations we all too often find acting as spokesmen and promisers for the industry persons decidedly remote in power and authority from the real institution of contact between public and screen, the theatre. There is much confused thinking about the institution of the motion picture. What is termed the industry of the motion picture, what is discussed and dealt with in the public mind, in the minds of writers, legislators and others concerned, is the business of making and selling motion pictures to the theatres. In terms of public concept, the motion picture industry is a great national or international enterprise, while the theatre on Main street is an individual local institution, purveying the wares shipped into town from Hollywood and invoiced from New York. Neither Hollywood nor New York can speak for, promise for or otherwise commit the exhibitor on Main street, U.S.A., but he is their only important avenue to the public. The easy but unworkable consequence is that when the motion picture industry is asked to do something in the way of public relations it says "Yes" with ready hopeful compliance, takes the bow and then passes the job to the retailers of the screen, some ten thousand or so theatre owners and operators between Eastport, Maine, and Point Loma, California.

The question of relations between the motion picture theatre, its seats, and the unemployment situation, is a local question for each of the localities where the thirteen thousand theatres are in operation. The motion picture industry can no more speak for them than the American Woolen Company can dictate the credit policy of your tailor.

Another softly spoken word may also be uttered for the public which continues to buy motion pictures and support the whole structure. The buyer of amusement, aware of a free seat campaign, would be likely to enjoy it just as much as he would taking the family out to dinner in the novel role of being a paying customer in the breadline. That would be too funny to be entertainment.

EXHIBITORS URGE QUALITY FILMS TO BOLSTER BOX OFFICE FOR 1932

Leaders Agree That "Healing Processes Already Are at Hand"; All Branches Must Adapt Selves to New Order

"Healing processes already are at hand; there are encouraging signs."

In the single foregoing sentence President Abram F. Myers, of Allied States Association, impressively and most accurately describes the majority opinion of motion picture theatre leaders regarding the outlook for exhibitors in 1932, as voiced by ten of the industry's foremost operators "in the field," all of whom are authorities on and pioneers in exhibition.

In practically concerted voice they call upon Hollywood for quality pictures in the new year in order to bolster the nation's box office against further effects of the general economic situation and they place squarely upon the shoulders of producers a considerable share of the responsibility for successfully readjusting the industry's structure.

There is an occasional word of pessimism voiced by the group of important exhibitor leaders, who, upon invitation of Motion Picture Herald, address a message to all theatre owners, but on the whole their opinion for the future is bright, provided all factions take seriously the economic lessons taught in 1931 and readjust their operation accordingly. This means, they say, complete acclimatization to the new order and only those executives and leaders in production, distribution and exhibition who acclimatize themselves can emerge on top.

Urge Continued Readjustment

There must be a continued readjustment of costs, several in the group say, with economy and thrift the keynote of operation.

Quality pictures, establishment of a new economic order, "whole-souled" cooperation among all factions and, in the words of E. V. Richards of New Orleans, "our business will roll along to success as quickly as any other on the recovery."

All theatre owners are urged by several of their leaders to bear in mind the fact that motion pictures still have more mass appeal than any other phase of amusements, and, they say, will continue so.

"1931 has clearly demonstrated that 'cluck' talkies spell box-office disaster," says M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, who already accepts as an established fact improvement in future pictures because "producers will profit by this terrible experiment and will put forth every effort to make bigger and better pictures." "Upon that, and that alone," he writes, "stands our hope of coming through 1932 in a healthy manner. The coming year will see a decided increase in partnerships between affiliated and independent exhibitors. This will be most fortunate if the independent exhibitors will be given authority to manage the towns."

Harold B. Franklin, one of the foremost operators in exhibition, believes "significant of better things to come is the change of spirit that can be felt throughout the industry. Economy and thrift are becoming the rule and top executives recognize that there must be continued readjustment of costs to meet new conditions. They have ceased to look back to the boom days for comparison.

"Executives who do not acclimatize themselves to the new economic order will eliminate themselves. Those producers who do not let down on quality will continue to give a good account of themselves. Present box-office prices can only be maintained if higher quality is forthcoming; otherwise lower admission prices must come."

In conclusion, Franklin predicts "mergers and eliminations during the year."

M. E. Comerford, president of Comerford Theatres, which operates extensively in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and surrounding territory, fears that "too many people in our line of endeavor today are analyzing the motion picture business solely on the basis of stock quotations. I have no patience with that sort of thing."

"Basically, the industry has borne up comparatively well during the first serious storm that has beset us in our history," he says.

Must Retain Mass Appeal

"Let us not forget that we still have with us the only form of entertainment that has the mass or universal appeal. Retaining this universal appeal is our real problem.

"Despite the torrent of criticism that has come upon our leaders, I am convinced that we have a host of able and highly efficient executives who can and will make further strides in the development of real, worthwhile production.

"A whole-souled spirit of cooperation should animate producer, distributor and theatre owner. This would mean for progress, and ours is a progressive business.

"I still have an abiding faith in the motion picture industry."

The Southwest expresses itself through

By MARTIN QUIGLEY

In the year just ended there occurred the only serious business recession in the history of the industry.

The obvious causes of this recession were the adverse conditions affecting the world of business, coupled with the fact that the rapid growth of the industry had been such as to intensify those evils which inevitably attend a period of readjustment.

The soundness of the industry is not a matter of speculation or argument; it is simply and plainly a matter of fact.

The position of the motion picture as the world's dominant medium of public entertainment has not and cannot be assailed. The motion picture's grip upon public interest remains firm and secure. Those factors and influences which have made the record of the past year a distressing one are each and severally of a passing character.

General conditions will improve and with their improvement the heaviest burden of adversity which the industry is carrying will be lifted.

Those internal conditions which needed readjustment have received sharp and thorough attention and this attention has already yielded gratifying results.

The adversities of the business cycle are the inevitable accompaniments of business life. No further reference need here be made to them.

But—it is very important to note—those internal conditions which needed correction had not merely come into the industry during the past year. They had been gradually creeping, like a fungus growth, over the body of the industry, many of them having commenced their devastation more than a decade ago. Their existence, of course, was known. But that aggressive quality of determination, necessary to deal with them, awaited the stimulus engendered by the adverse conditions of the past year.

Without this stimulus those matters might have—and probably would have—gone on unattended to. Meanwhile the situation would have grown more aggravated and the eventual outcome, in this instance, would have been a great deal more serious.

There is, consequently, a considerable debt of gratitude due from the industry to those conditions which rendered imperative the introduction of the corrective measures which enable the industry to face the New Year as a better and sounder business.

As a consequence of its still impregnable position as the world's most popular form of entertainment, together with the needed readjustments which have taken place, the industry may properly approach the coming twelve-month period with both confidence and optimism.

IMPROVEMENT DECLARED DISCERNIBLE

Col. H. A. Cole, leader in exhibitor organization in Texas, who says:

"Depression has taken half of our box-office; protection has cut another 25 per cent and copyright protection has grabbed another large part of the balance. Metro wants 35 per cent and now Uncle Sam demands 10 per cent. How old is Ann?

"However, we are still fighting and will continue through what looks like a tough year."

W. A. ("Al") Steffes, president of Northwest Allied Association, believes "the only thing that is going to save the industry is the defeat of the tax measure proposed, and the release of worthwhile pictures. If pictures are of the same quality that they have been for the past six months, the outlook is very, very discouraging."

In the opinion of President Myers of the National Allied group, the year just passed has been meager in returns, but rich in experience.

"It has taught bitter lessons," says Myers, "which, if well learned, may yet save the industry from itself. It has demonstrated that the motion picture business is neither depression-proof nor fool-proof. These discoveries may be worth all that they have cost. If they bring to an end the reckless expansion, wild extravagance and unfair practices of the past, the year may yet be entered on the credit side of the ledger.

Calls Improvement Discernible

"In view of this experience it is unlikely that the producers will continue to acquire theatres; indeed the facts call for a gradual relinquishment of theatre holdings. It also seems unlikely that extravagant methods, adding to the burden of everyone in the business, will be continued. Certainly the abominable practices that have resulted in so many government prosecutions will be abandoned. And last, but not least, it would seem that the need for real cooperation—not one-way cooperation—between the several branches of the industry has been demonstrated.

"The exhibitors have had a tough time and their problems will not be solved by merely crossing the threshhold of a new year. But they can take satisfaction in the knowledge that many of their most vital problems are in the way of solution. Disclosures of the weakness of chain operation and the disadvantages of a closed market are in their favor. If the producers will act to strengthen these weaknesses in their own position, it will also be the salvation of the exhibitors. There is reason to believe that unreasonable protection and other abuses will go the way of compulsory arbitration. In many ways the prospects for the new year are truly encouraging.

"While there may be no rapid recovery in business, conditions will not get any worse and may even become appreciably better. Healing processes already are at work. Improvement is discernible in the initial as distinguished from the ultimate phases of industry. The life-giving sap starts at the roots and its ascent, while steady, is slow. But, best of all, the business men of the country (even those in the picture business) have begun to think—and to plan. Once out of this rut, they may devise means for gearing production to consumption so as to avoid a like debacle in the future.

"There are encouraging signs that the theatre owners also have gained in knowledge in the days of their travail. They are exercising greater care in buying and exhibiting, better showmanship than ever before. They have learned the value of co-operation through organization and are in a stronger position to defend their rights. They have a keener appreciation of the value of money and realize that prosperity consists not so much in the amount of money they earn as in what that money will do for them. Returning prosperity will find them prepared to make the most of it.

"And so, as the old year prepares to die, we find the theatre owners standing hopefully, courageously, 'with their faces turned toward the day'."

"Getting Down to Earth"

E. V. Richards, of Publix-Saenger circuit, and for many years an important theatre executive in the South, feels that "the show business, like all other businesses, is getting down to earth and will roll along to success as quickly as any other business will on recovery."

"Give the public good pictures and they will respond," in the opinion of Fred S. Meyer, exhibitor leader in Milwaukee. "'Frankenstein' proved this and Carroll's 'Vanities' at $3.85 doing capacity during the week before Christmas substantiates it."

Meyer is much against the reduction of admission prices as a means of readjustment, holding that "reduced admission prices is one of the biggest follies of the industry. If only one thing is accomplished in the new year, let that be the elimination of the double feature policy and the running of theatres as places of amusements instead of grocery stores."

Talkers to Stay: Butterfield

W. S. Butterfield, president of Butterfield Theatres, Inc., of Michigan, finds it difficult to foretell what 1932 may bring.

"In 40 years of operation in the theatre business," Butterfield says, "this is the first time that it is difficult to look ahead and see what the public is likely to demand in the way of theatre entertainment.

"At the present time talking motion pictures are the popular form of amusement and, from the general outlook, will be for many years to come.

"The stress times through which we are now passing have brought clearly home to us many mistakes that we have been making.

"In the past four weeks it has been proved to my satisfaction that, while the public has not the money to spend at this time, as in the past they will patronize a good motion picture. In other words, during these times the public has learned to shop; and if a picture is not spoken well of at its first performance, the general business will not be profitable. This, to the producers, should be a clear lesson, and instead of making a lot of pictures, they should lay out a campaign for fewer pictures but better ones.

"The present conditions have proved to the theatre owner conclusively that in the boom times we built too many theatres. The solution to this problem is the keeping of the brand new theatres and the disposing of the smaller 'store-room' theatres and the old obsolete, badly-ventilated, acoustically-poor theatres. While it will take some years to revamp conditions in the large cities, it should not be long before the owners of theatres in the medium-sized and smaller cities see their mistakes and work out a happy solution.

"So our slogan for 1932 should be: 'Better pictures, with more attention to details and a lessened overhead where possible'."

H. M. Richey, pioneer organizer and leader of exhibitors in Michigan, says: "I think we have passed the time for unfounded optimism. While 1932 may, and I believe will bring business improvement which will be reflected in the motion picture business, it's not going to be an easy pull and there will be no speedy returns to the former normal business. General reductions in all overhead to meet a market that will not change soon will see everyone through."

"While none of us are greatly enthused over the net returns for the past twelve months, the motion picture business is not alone in this and, when all is considered, we have actually fared better than we might," writes E. Van Hyning, president of the MPTO of Kansas and Missouri.

"Along with other industries, we find ourselves in a period of change, a process that is not yet complete."

"Give Public What It Wants"

A New Year message to the industry by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, outlines what executives of that association believe to be the three major needs of the industry in 1932, as follows:

"1. Give the Public What It Wants. More "hoke" and less sophistication. Reestablish the contact with the box office. Art may enhance the star's and director's reputations, but it's often hell on the box office. Tap the vast reservoir of source material in the classic melodramas of a generation ago—'The Silver King,' 'The Middleman,' 'Hoodman Blind,' 'The Two Orphans'—to mention but a few. Modernize these and give them star leads.

"Give the public what it wants! Not what the star and director think it ought to have. The public is fed up on polite drawing room comedy, on one-reel plots stretched to eight reels. End the era of society page drama.

"Give the public what it wants! Not what the screen's high-brow critics think it ought to have. Don't try to educate them, propagandize them or elevate them. It can't be done!

"2. More Deflation in the High Places. There has been too-little deflation in the high places! Too much head-cutting and salary slashing among stenogs and ushers and not enough readjustment in the millionaire income class. And end the crazy competition for story material that gives every author with a Broadway hit a field day in Hollywood.

"3. Unite to Repel Tax Attacks! The politicians of nation, state and city in 1932, are going to try and levy tribute in the form of additional taxation of the movies to take care of their henchmen in office.

"Launch a nationwide counter attack, nonpartisan and non-political on our screens against the menace of the rising tide of taxes and the extravagance in government."

GIFFORD PROPOSES FREE TICKETS TO JOBLESS TO IMPROVE MORALE

MPPDA Executives Withhold Action Until Official Request Is Received from New York Branch of Hoover Board

Walter S. Gifford's New York branch of President Hoover's national unemployment relief committee has made overtures to the motion picture industry for its aid in alleviating the mental distress of penniless unemployed by allocating free tickets to the various relief committees for distribution to "worthy cases." The overtures are in the form of an unofficial suggestion made a few days ago to the MPPDA, and until complete dtails of a plan are worked out—if and when—and an official request is forthcoming from the Gifford committee, executives at the Hays organization will take no action, nor will they present the plan before member companies and the industry in the East.

Indicating a realization that motion pictures are a necessity and not a luxury to the masses, as anti-industry legislators have said on occasion, the committee headed by Gifford, who is president of American Telephone and Telegraph, would have the industry bolster morale of those unemployed who have been made penniless in the present economic depression. Films are next in importance to food and clothing, the relief committee has stated.

Through Organized Channels

Basically, the plan calls for the distribution of tickets through the channels of organized relief agencies now in operation, which would issue an order on a theatre—not in the form of passes as used at present—to those whose circumstances have been checked and who have been found to be in dire straits. If and when the plan becomes operative, those in charge of distributing the tickets would undoubtedly be forced to work out a plan which would prevent tickets from reaching those popularly classified as "bums," "petty grafters" and professional "panhandlers."

Until this obstacle is hurdled, exhibitors, it is believed, will not seriously consider the plan. Whether or not the plan would be made applicable to matinee and evening shows, or to the former alone, is another matter to be ironed out. Also, the type of theatre to be included presents a problem. A few leaders in the industry who are aware of the Gifford committee's "suggestion" say that the issuance of "dole tickets" to de luxe runs would be distasteful and impractical, pointing out that the plan should be confined to neighborhoods, if used at all.

The Gifford committee handles relief work and collects funds for unemployed only in New York territory, and although its recommendation is intended to include only New Yorkers, many believe that such a plan might work its way throughout the nation, particularly where communities are without community "chests" and are unable to purchase the motion picture entertainment which Gifford's organization claims is so essential.

Executives in New York have not yet been informed officially of the suggestion, and details will not be made known until it materializes—if at all. However, a few believe that it has possibilities if established on a fool-proof basis, declaring that penniless unemployed now unable to attend picture shows would be kept in the theatre-going habit, and that a certain amount of "goodwill" would be won by the industry through its adoption. Several others are skeptical, pointing out that so many obstacles would have to be overcome as to make its practicability extremely improbable—if not impossible.

The plan as suggested by the Gifford unit of Hoover's national committee is not a new one. Berlin theatres for many months have been placing 60,000 free tickets monthly at the disposal of relief agencies, which have undertaken the responsibility of preventing abuse of exhibitors' charity.

Fay Tests Similar Plan

A plan to test the use of the motion picture theatre for the betterment of the morale of the unemployed has been undertaken by E. M. Fay, of Fay's theatres, Providence.

Convinced that there are several dangers to any general adoption of such an undertaking, Fay determined to try out a plan in cooperation with three relief agencies of Providence.

A thousand tickets have been placed in the hands of these three agencies for distribution by them to unemployed adults. The tickets are to be distributed in pairs. They are to be good for any matinee show, and are distinctly marked non-transferable.

The results of the distribution are to be checked closely to find out whether the recipient of the ticket uses it himself or gives it to children or neighbors, in an effort to ascertain what percentage of the selected cross-section of unemployed is interested, personally, in attending theatres.

On the basis of the results, it is to be determined whether the plan is to be put in effect in the Fay theatres.

Sees Local Publicity Danger

"One of the stipulations that I have insisted upon with the agencies who are cooperating is that the plan have no local publicity," said Mr. Fay. "I feel that publicity is the greatest danger to the usefulness of the theatre to help build the morale of the unemployed because, in the first place, if any such plan is given widespread local publicity, the really deserving unemployed are apt to be too sensitive to accept tickets. On the other hand, every community has a percentage of grafters who would take advantage of free tickets, people who have money enough to go to the theatre and pay for their seats, but who would stop at nothing to get in free.

"If the theatre can contribute to the morale of the legitimately unemployed by the distribution of free tickets, I am for it, but there is a grave danger that, unless such relief is intelligently handled, it will seriously hurt business."

Division heads of interests referred all inquiries to home office executives.

Problem Seen in Limiting Privilege to Worthy Cases; Exhibitors Await Details; E. M. Fay Tests a Similar Plan

Although the plan as it now stands would embrace only New York, because of the possibility that it might spread to other territories, Motion Picture Herald sought the reaction of exhibitor leaders in the field. Col. H. A. Cole, head of the Texas exhibitors' unit, replied that his "association and its members promise full cooperation in distributing free tickets through regularly organized unemployment civic relief committees in order that morale may be lifted in this time of stress. Many of our theatres are doing this, but I think all of them should and will. I believe this is a great movement."

M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA and operator of a dozen Tennessee theatres, said that the "plan is excellent if functioned properly. Its danger lies in imposing greatly on theatre owners if misused. If only the penniless unemployed are assisted through this means, it will have a great psychological effect and is very commendable. Our theatres would subscribe to such a plan."

Urges Producer Co-operation

President Abram Myers of Allied States Association "wants to know something of the details before undertaking to commit" his association to the plan, although he believes "the conception is fine."

"I would suggest that such a plan be referred to either Will Hays for producer-owned theatres, or Abram F. Myers for Allied theatres and we will abide by their decision," H. M. Richey said. Richey is the leader in Michigan exhibitor ranks.

W. A. ("Al") Steffes, president of Northwest Allied, declared that the plan requires "considerable thought." Steffes said he would prefer meeting the situation if and when the request is made. He said that it would be impossible for independent or circuit theatres in the Northwest territory to assume "this loss of business and still stay open unless producers are willing to accept unemployment tickets as part payment for film rental."

Steffes' own theatre has been distributing tickets to penniless unemployed since last January, and so are other individual theatres in Minneapolis territory, but, he says, "to give it national publicity will close 80 per cent of theatres now open. However, this and all other Allied territories will be guided in the matter by what Abram Myers, Allied's national president, recommends."

10 STUDIOS TO MAKE ALL BUT 22 OF 386 FEATURES AS ANNOUNCED

Only 12 of the 22 Definitely Set, and These As Result of Radio-Pathe "Merger"; 50 Substitutions Now Indicated

The ten leading studios, as represented by the statements of New York distribution managers, will deliver all but 22 of the 386 features announced for the 1931-32 selling season.

Of the 22 probable eliminations only 12 have been definitely decided upon to date, and those 12 are a direct result of the Radio-Pathe "merger."

The number of schedule changes admitted by the distributing offices is surprisingly small, in view of the developing conditions of the market and the season. The general view in New York home offices is that there is little likelihood of important curtailment of production schedules for the industry until plans are laid for next season.

50 Substitutions Indicated

Meanwhile, present indications are that a total of 50 substitutions may be made in the revised list of 364 or more productions which will be released this season. Producers already have indicated 31 substitutions as virtually certain to be made. The number of substitutions, estimated to reach a higher total than in other years, is said to be due to the waning in popularity of crime and newspaper themes which caused producers to strike from their schedules productions of this type, substituting for them themes considered of greater popularity.

Universal, having a large number of productions of this type scheduled, leads in the number of substitutions to date. Among other substitutions announced by the company are those which will supplant such productions as "Gallows," "Bullet Proof," "The Great Air Robbery," "Barbary Coast" and "A Lady of Resource." To date, there have been six substitutions in Universal's list of 26 as originally announced. Five or more substitutions may be made in the original 70 announced by Warner-First National; four or more among Paramount's 70; three or more each by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fox, Columbia and Tiffany; probably two or more each by Radio and United Artists, and likely one or more by Pathe.

RKO Drops 11 Features

Eleven features are being eliminated by RKO from among the original 36 scheduled, and one elimination from Pathe's original 21 is contemplated. This production curtailment comes as a result of the "merging" of Radio and Pathe. Paramount, which scheduled 70, will actually make fewer than 65 features, although the exact number has not been determined as yet.

Two or three eliminations from among Universal's scheduled 26 are regarded as likely, although the full numerical schedule may be made in the event suitable story material is found available. The same situation holds true for Tiffany which, however, may make up its numerical quota of 26 by increasing the number of Westerns planned at the beginning of the season. Tiffany's production plans were somewhat upset by the company's financing difficulties which led to the transfer of production of six of the company's features to Quadruple Productions, Inc., which is headed by William Saal.

Production Status Summarized

Following is a summary of the production status of the ten leading companies:

COLUMBIA: Seven of 26 features completed; six of 16 Westerns completed. Probable substitutions: three. Probable eliminations: none.

FOX: 22 of 48 features completed. Probable substitutions: three. Probable eliminations: none.

MGM: 15 of 48 productions completed. Probable substitutions: three. Probable eliminations: none.

PARAMOUNT PUBLIX: 42 of 70 productions completed. Probable substitutions: four. Probable eliminations: eight.

RKO PATHE: 12 of 21 features completed. Probable substitutions: one. Probable eliminations: one.

RKO RADIO: 16 of 25 features completed. Probable substitutions: two. Probable eliminations: 11.

TIFFANY: 6 of 12 specials completed; 10 of 12 Westerns completed. Probable substitutions: three. Probable eliminations: none.

UNITED ARTISTS: 10 of 15 completed. Probable substitutions: two. Probable eliminations: one.

UNIVERSAL: 10 of 26 completed. Probable substitutions: six. Probable eliminations: three.

WARNER-FIRST NATIONAL: 27 of 70 completed. Probable substitutions: five. Probable eliminations: none.

Pathe Moves To The Radio Plant

The RKO Pathe plant in Culver City, on the Coast, has gone dark, at least temporarily, except for one production, a Tom Keene western. Finishing touches are being put on the latest Constance Bennett vehicle, "Lady With a Past," and on Ann Harding's most recent, "Prestige."

The entire Pathe production staff has taken up quarters at the Radio plant, with Charles R. Rogers, vice president, and Harry Joe Brown, assistant, heading the group.

First Pathe production to go into work at the Radio studio will be "Veneer" starring Helen Twelvetrees.

"Startling Developments" in Television Are Reported Due

"Startling developments" in the field of television will be announced early in 1932 by a large electric company in the East, according to word received in Kansas City this week by a man prominently identified with the film industry.

The company has a branch in Kansas City but its identity and that of the informant cannot be revealed at this time. It is understood the announcement will concern visual transmission and reception in homes and public auditoriums. The disclosures, it is said, will be of utmost importance to the motion picture business of the future.

Warner Sales Heads To Meet

Warner and First National district managers will meet on January 17 for a three-day conference in New York to discuss the selling policy for next year. Edward Alperson will preside as general sales manager. Other addresses will be made by Andy Smith and Gradwell Sears, East and West sales chiefs, respectively.

THIS photograph presents the camera record of the display to the world of Broadway made this week by the world's greatest motion picture theatre, controlled and operated by one of the great motion picture producing and distributing concerns—namely the Roxy theatre of the Fox Film Corporation. Proclaimed to the skies are a singer who warbled to an audience of a few hundreds in a stage show which failed, and two other personal attractions, who may be world famous, but not in this world. Incidentally and casually the lights also admit that this motion picture theatre is presenting a motion picture. It chances, casually, that the motion picture is "Delicious," one of the best and most pleasantly artful productions of the year, with Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, two of the best box office stars of the contemporary screen.

The judgment involved in this manner of presentation and management can hardly be discussed in terms of showmanship, not even very bad showmanship, because it is so remote that the language of the art and the theatre can not apply.

Scanning the newspaper amusement page copy for the week at the Roxy one finds also that approximately fifty per cent of the space, and in some copy more than fifty per cent of the display, is devoted to telling the New York amusement seeking public that Ruth Etting, the 4 Mills Brothers and Patricia Bowman are on view.

If an exhibitor customer had the temerity to tell the Fox Film Corporation that "Delicious," with Gaynor and Farrell, was only half a show, it would probably be resented.

The Roxy show and its exploitation, as represented in the lights and the newspapers, is an interior attack on the motion picture as an institution of entertainment. It is also an impairment of the potentialities of a well made production and an invasion of the value of two widely accepted and popularly established stars. Aside from that it is the greatest job, of its kind, yet seen.

Regardless of the special inspiration which has given Broadway this extraordinary specimen, it belongs to a category of alleged showmanship which has manifested itself often enough before in the motion picture theatre. Certain managers have made themselves more conspicuous than important by endeavors to become "creative artists" with stage shows and the like, in silly competition with the screen attractions. It takes a bigger manager to admit that his show came in the film can.

This became a great industry because a good show could be put in the film can. Today with sound, talk and music, the process is even more complete. The exhibitor, true enough, needs something more than a can opener, but his business is selling and purveying, not producing.

Report Hughes-Franklin May Drop Circuit in Washington

Hughes-Franklin Theatres is reported permitting the Mercy circuit in the state of Washington to revert to its original owners.

Producers See No Flood of "Horror" Pictures in Sight

A check of all major producers, instituted by Motion Picture Daily following the warning against a flood of "horror" pictures, by M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, has indicated that no such "flood" is in sight.

MGM, Paramount, Universal and Artclass, independent, each has one feature which falls into that category, and Columbia and Fox each has one which might be classed with the others, but which are not called "shock" pictures by their producers.

Rocky Mountain Unit Sees Block-Booking As Passing

The Rocky Mountain Theatre Owners Association states that block-booking is on the way out or already has been discarded in that territory. "The best information we have is that block-booking is almost a thing of the past, but once in a while an exhibitor is hooked on block-booking," the organization says.

RKO STAFF CHANGES IN OFFING; VAUDEVILLE ADDED IN 10 HOUSES

Movement in Vaudeville Field Interpreted as Showmanship Effort; Heavy Executive Conferences Held; Rogers Resigns

The long smoking, smoldering volcano of RKO troubles, muchly discussed as picture troubles, broke forth and formed a new cone of excitement this week in the vaudeville department, with promises of considerable action in, from and through that sector and with assorted changes of staff.

Evidences tended to indicate that this was to be more a token of the pressure of surviving showmanship in the background than a special manifestation of vaudeville interest or strength.

Meanwhile heavy executive conferences of the company were held in a suite at a midtown hotel, apart and away from the din, rumor and politics of the home office in the Bond Building in Broadway.

Martin Beck an Executive

Martin Beck of Orpheum fame, and for some years considered in semi-retirement, has come importantly into the picture in connection with vaudeville. He is spoken of as "an executive" and no title has been bestowed upon him. It is understood that he is presently to be added to the directorate of the corporation.

Meanwhile there was significance in Broadway eyes in the fact that from the office of Mark Luescher, publicity director of the theatre division and long a figure in the Keith-Albee picture, there issued a new burst of copy and enthusiasm about vaudeville endeavors of RKO.

Vaudeville into 10 Theatres

Within the fortnight vaudeville has been injected into the policies and programs of ten RKO theatres which previously had been devoted to pictures only.

Showmen along Broadway generally interpreted this to mean that the company, not entirely pleased with picture output and prospects, was out to play its other suit for what strength it might develop.

It is to be recalled that in substance and in assets, RKO is considerably more a vaudeville concern which became a motion picture enterprise than an original picture company. Its heritages are from Benjamin F. Keith, E. F. Albee, J. J. Murdock, Marcus Heiman, Maurice Goodman, Karl Hoblitzelle, Pat Casey, Ike Lipson and the Orpheum circuit, all vastly imposing in name, power and influence when measured against the status of its motion picture components handed down from the yesterday of the screen.

Charles R. Rogers Resigns

Resignation of Charles R. Rogers as vice-president and production executive of RKO and RKO Pathe this week officially launched what was expected to develop into a series of changes in the front-rank executive personnel of the various RKO corporations. J. I. Schnitzer, president of Radio Pictures, is this week on his way East for a conference with Hiram Brown and it is reported that William LeBaron, former chief of production for Radio Pictures, is scheduled to leave Hollywood within a few days for a similar meeting in New York.

In the meantime, a meeting of company executives with representatives of minority stockholders, and which included David Sarnoff, president of the parent RCA company, Hiram Brown, and others important in the RKO picture, was held to work out a new managing structure, following termination of money troubles three weeks ago which ended when stockholders ratified a financing plan as submitted by RCA. George Schein, attorney for Mrs. Carolina Kohl, of Chicago, and the minority group which attacked the original RCA financing plan, indicated that he was negotiating with officials of RKO for changes in the management as a compromise between the fighting minority unit and the company.

The names of Karl Hoblitzelle, reported slated for a post in the theatre division, and of Charles Pettijohn, of the Film Boards of Trade, were mentioned as possible new RKO officials. Pettijohn said that his name was brought into the picture as a proposed studio executive "merely because Hiram Brown and I are neighbors at Rye."

A Car a Week

L. B. Wilson, executive head of a group of five theatres at Covington, Ky., is giving his patrons a Plymouth automobile each Monday night, also $25 to help defray initial expenses of operation. The plan is being operated alternately between the Wilson, Liberty and Broadway. Sixty machines have been purchased for distribution. Wilson also is owner of radio station, WCKY, over which the plan is liberally advertised each night.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum has omitted its regular quarterly dividend of $1.75 on the 7 per cent preferred stock, payable on January 1.

Fox Chiefs Deny Plan To Return Poli Houses

Reports circulating in New York this week stating that the New England division of Fox theatres acquired from the Poli interests would revert to the former owners were vigorously denied by executives of the Fox corporations, although it was admitted that Warners and the Poli group had "looked" at the theatres with a view to purchasing.

Tyrone Power Dies on Coast

Tyrone Power, veteran legitimate actor, died in Hollywood on Wednesday. He was 62, and had just arrived on the Coast to make an attempt in motion picture work.

22 N.Y. Projection Leaders Indicted; Coercion Charged

Indictments handed up on Wednesday to Judge Otto Rosalsky in General Sessions court, New York, charged 22 officials of the New York local 306, of the Motion Picture Operators Union with coercion, growing out of charges of threatened violence brought by nine expelled union members; while 17 of the 22 were named in a second indictment charging conspiracy, with several theatre owners in the uptown Washington Heights and Bronx sections of the city as complainants.

Among the officials indicted are Sam Kaplan, president; Charles Eichorn, vice president; Frederick E. Castle, assistant to the president; Frank Day, recording secretary; Morris J. Rotker, acting recording secretary; Morris J. Wolheim, business agent; Max Feinberg, treasurer; Theodore Greenberg, organizer, recently sentenced to the penitentiary for assault in connection with a union case. All are members of the executive board of the local. In addition, numerous other officials and executive board members were named in either or both indictments.

Chief of Kansas Censor Is Ousted

A private war between the Kansas City Journal-Post and the Kansas City Star has resulted from the state censor's approval of Universal's "Frankenstein" after it was banned in the state as "cruel and tending to debase morals."

Coincident with the approval, by which the board "about-faced" following a storm of public and press denunciations, came the announcement that Hazel Myers, chairman of the board, is being succeeded by Mae Calusen, Emporia newspaperwoman. Miss Myers was target of the attacks.

The Journal-Post thunder, which has been recently dormant, broke forth at the film incentive when the Star reported: "The editing of the motion picture was done by John C. Moffitt, the Star's motion picture editor....Mr. Laemmle (of Universal) asked the newspaper critic to try to make the picture acceptable to the people and officials of Kansas."

Rivkin at Reopened Broadway

The B. S. Moss Broadway theatre, after being dark for several weeks, reopened on Thursday with a straight picture policy. Joe Rivkin, who leaves Tiffany this week, will handle publicity and advertising for the house.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

MOOD. (Below). A serious one for a comedienne, yet altogether adapted to the purpose at hand—that of realizing the vivid beauty of Doris Carnes, one of the newer screen personalities and a principal in Educational's Torchy and Mermaid comedies.

SUMMERWARD. (Right). Privileged to take a wintertime vacation, Mr. and Mrs. Rian James have sailed for the West Indies. Here he (writer of screen stories) and she (Diane Corday, Warner player) are shown embarking just before the Holidays.

BOARD OF STRATEGY. Showing proper pride at having solved the problem of how to feed a lot of hungry youngsters. Recognize Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery and Polly Moran? Thus did they star in the kitchen for the Christmas dinner to Jackie Cooper and his football gang in MGM's special, "The Christmas Party."

ENSEMBLE. Not much of a one, but what there is, is necessary. Nor should we wish to dispense with Mary herself, because even the unmentionables shouldn't be worth mentioning were the model less noteworthy than Mary Doran, who, by the way, is to be seen quite as importantly in Warner Brothers' "Union Depot."

A SOFT SPOT. Marking, as it were (or even as it weren't, if you want to get that way!) Hollywood's first snow fall in years and years—and also marking, apparently, the first experience on skis of Genevieve Tobin, Universal player. But does Gen care? Look! There! Does she? Nope.

TEN YEARS LATER. (Below) Last week occurred the tenth anniversary of the birth of Aesop's Fables, Van Beuren short. And here is Helen Twelvetrees, RKO-Pathe star, visiting the studio to extend congratulations, during her holiday sojourn in New York.

DOUBLED. (Below) By both Nature and Destiny. And if you ask them, each won the bid. As a technical distinction, they are Percy (left) and Ernest, but both are Westmores, and both are makeup artists (Percy at Warners, Ernest at RKO). As for looking alike—well!

MR. AND MRS. (Below) Titles that were Christmas presents to each other, the result of a real life romance of the air. William Wellman, Warner director, was a war aviator, while his bride, the former Marjorie Crawford, is also a pilot. They were married December 22.

YEARS OF FILM FAME. (Below) Celebrated as Ernest Lubitsch, Maurice Chevalier, Mary Pickford and Adolph Zukor got together the other day. Miss Pickford brought Lubitsch to Hollywood ,and he now directs Chevalier for Paramount, headed by Zukor, Mary's early employer.

IN MEMORIAM. Jack Darrock, Fox Movietone News representative in Chicago, presenting the Rev. Charles L. O'Donnell, president of the University of Notre Dame, with a print of a reel consisting in intimate views of the late Knute Rockne at home and on the gridiron. A similar reel was given Mrs. Rockne.

PRETTY IRISH. Equally both, with a name that sounds like a song about Mavourneen. Sure'n its Shannon, and there was a song about that. Peggy, the first name. And she's just been signed by Tiffany for the feminine lead in "Hotel Continental," under direction of Christy Cabanne.

BRUCE ON OUTDOOR CAMERAMAN

Not All the Hard Labor in Photography Is Done in the Studio, Declares Producer of Scenics

Mr. Robert C. Bruce, foremost among contemporary photographers and producers of scenic and outdoor pictures, rises to the defense of the "Outdoor Cameraman" in answer to a recent editorial in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in a letter from his office at Outdoor Talking Pictures, Ltd., in Hollywood. Mr. Bruce writes:

"I find that it is impossible for me to allow your editorial 'Pictorialization' of December 12th to go by without my resorting to the labor of a letter. The fact that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences awarded the photographic honors of the year to a 'glorified scenic production' has been a great step towards the recognition of 'Outdoor Photography.' Naturally the studio cameramen resented it and rightly; because studio and outdoor photography are as far apart as the two worlds, and for that reason it is my opinion (not humble) that two awards should always be made: one to an outdoor and one to a studio picture.

"Since the coming of sound the outdoor picture has received more recognition from the public, and I firmly believe that there will be many great pictures made in the near future in which the majority of the shots will be exteriors. But, how did you ever reach the conclusion that all the hard labor in photography was confined to the studio? Of course, the studio cameraman has to know his business, and has to work long hours, under very trying conditions, the greatest of which is the fact that no one else but himself on the set is striving for pictorial beauty; but remember also that at his fingertips is an abundant amount of sunshine, placed by his head electrician at just the angle that he wishes to have it, and to just the correct amount. The day after he shoots his picture he is able to see the finished result on the screen in the form of rushes, and can make a retake if he finds that he did not quite catch the necessary beauty.

"Meanwhile the outdoor man simply goes on a never ending vacation for he is the one of whom you say 'Given any reasonably good camera, a piece of gauze and some panchromatic film' and he can capture the kind of scene 'the pictorial illiterate public' will welcome. Do you really think that is all that is necessary in getting a good scenic picture for the screen? After eighteen years' experience in photographing and selling scenery to the public you make me feel as if it would have been better for me to have stuck to the ranching business, but then perhaps I haven't used the right sort of gauze.

"Let me list the worries of the Outdoor Photographer. First: He is his own production manager. He must have sufficient knowledge to pick the proper country in which to carry on his year's work, and this does not mean necessarily that he is going where he wants to go; but he must choose a country that will be climatically as near perfect as possible for that particular season, and where he can obtain a great variety of scenes without covering too much mileage.

"Then he must be his own executive, and a great deal of his success as a photographer rests upon his ability to properly finance his expedition. In most cases he is the director and also often performs the tasks of the assistant cameraman. He must turn out professional results in order to compete with the best of studio photography, even though his crew consists of only one or less men. Often he is forced to be the head man of the laboratory department, actually developing the negative on the spot.

"We will skip lightly over the poor hotel accommodations that he is bound to meet with in his out of the way places, or his weeks spent in the mountains with a string of pack horses, and pick him up again as he returns to civilization, after, say, a six months lapse of time. If he has been fortunate enough to capture the atmosphere of the place with his camera that he has visited; and remember, he has been working without the aid of artificial lighting and without reflectors, his real labor has now just commenced. He must cut and assemble his pictures in marketable form. He must write all of the dialogue and lecture for the sound track. He must carefully choose his music and properly superintend all of the details which go with the synchronizing of the music, the sound effects and the voice, with the picture.

"The picture is finished, and our Hero, leaving his camera behind, but with his year's results under his arm, then hies himself to the New York market, to convince some buyer that there really is a difference between two waterfalls and two mountains and that everything cannot be shot in Griffith Park.

"This is the day of specialists and I believe that I am safe in saying that throughout the whole industry there are not twelve cameramen capable of photographing exteriors and interiors with the same degree of success. You will find that the better men in the business lean one way or the other. They are either experts in interiors or exteriors, rarely in both fields, and it is for that reason that I sincerely believe that the Academy should recognize the entity of both branches of photography.

"Here's to better pictures and less gauze.

"Yours sincerely,

"Robert C. Bruce."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S editorial in question concerned itself with discussions of the outdoor vs. the studio cameraman in terms of photography and the use of the camera. Mr. Bruce, it will be observed, talks about the problems of outdoor production which are after all not precisely camera problems, even though the end product sought is a picture. Camera work is one thing and production is another, even if one man discharges all the functions on the location or lot. Meanwhile, none can dispute the large contribution made to the photographic art of the screen by the outdoor cameraman. Also any analytical spectator will agree with Mr. Bruce when he implies the trend toward, and need for, giving the drama the air, with more exteriors. TERRY RAMSAYE

A Super-Super!

Novel in motion picture production circles is the proposal, sponsored by the film trade press association and the Artists' Union, French organizations, as a means of film self-lauding in the French Republic. Each year, states the proposal, will be made one super-film: journalists to prepare the scenario, supply direction; artists to give services gratis. Pathe Natan has offered to donate studios and raw stock. Proceeds, providing there are any, will be split two ways: half to each association. The report is as yet neither confirmed nor denied at Paris.

Non-"Inflam" Law Disturbs French

French distributors and exhibitors are somewhat disturbed over the question of non-inflammable film, which, according to the present law, is obligatory January 1. The law was passed several years ago, but has frequently been suspended, due to the natural difficulties of compliance.

The last suspension of the law, granted two years ago, expires January 1. Representations have already been made to the Minister of Fine Arts, asking further delay, but as yet no aid has come from that official source.

Both distributors and exhibitors point out that the expense and inconvenience attendant upon a complete use of non-inflammable film stock, cannot be borne by the motion picture industry in France at the present moment, considering its economic situation. It also insists that relief, if it is to come, must arrive speedily.

GERMANY BARS DOUBLE FEATURES; SETS SCALE OF ADMISSION PRICES

Special Inducements Such as Free Drinks, Gifts and Lottery Prizes Are Prohibited By Agreement of Industry

Prohibition of double featuring in sound theatres in Germany and establishment of a scale of admission prices in theatres of Greater Berlin, in order to prevent reduction of rates to a point inimical to the business, are two significant developments out of the producers' conference for rehabilitation of the industry, and the subsequent meeting of the Spitzenorganization.*

Incidentally, George R. Canty, U. S. trade commissioner with headquarters in Paris, in a report to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, says of the general convention that "scarcely has a trade meeting ever shown such unanimous efforts and close connection among the various branches of the industry for the elaboration of a common economic program."

Held Prejudicial to Industry

The double-barreled attack on overlong programs and underslung admission prices was embodied in the following resolution:

"The Reichsverband (exhibitors' organization) and the A. D. F. (distributors' union) will instruct their members to control admittances in their respective bailiwicks. In all places where admittances are too low or where cinema performances include too many or too extensive pictures, the local representatives of the above organizations will call trade meetings and seek ways and means to change this policy, which is considered extremely prejudicial to the film industry. The Spio is authorized by the various trade associations, upon the request of local organizations, to send a kommissar with special powers enabling him to take all necessary measures to protect the industry against prejudice of this kind."

In cases where there has been a reorganization or change in ownership of a theatre, the Spitzenorganization asks that the distributors ascertain the policy of the new owner in regard to admission prices before making a contract. In order to make impossible the arbitrary lowering of ticket charges, some system of control is to be established, for 1932, with the approval of the entire trade. The establishment of a scale of admissions was the first step in that direction.

Seek Melting of Credits

Another of the subjects taken up at the general conference concerns exchange currencies of the various countries. Negotiations have been undertaken with the government and the Reichsbank to clear frozen credit balances by either direct payment or loans.

"It was pointed out in this connection," writes Canty, "that a decrease of exports will jeopardize the quality and even the existence of the German film, since production schedules are based partly upon foreign amortization."

Four Groupings of Prices

The new scale for admissions was agreed upon by a commission selected from representatives of trade associations.

The motion picture theatres of Berlin are divided into four groups: Pre-release houses, one mark minimum admittance; first-runs, 0.80 mark; second-runs, 0.70 mark; and all other houses, 0.60 mark.

If a stage-show is included in the program, 50 pfennigs may be added to the minimum ticket charge.

Any privileged admissions such as cut price tickets, presents, lottery prizes, free drinks, included in the price are prohibited. However, up to the actual starting of the first performance, patrons may be admitted to any seats at the minimum rate of admission. Immediately thereafter, the regular admission scale applies. Young folk are obliged to pay the full minimum rate for regular shows, but at special shows for children and other minors only 50 per cent of the minimum rate for each of the four categories of theatres is to be charged.

The measures in question, it was stated, were taken in the best interests of all branches of the German industry and it is expected that all exhibitors will carry them out. The circular announcing the decisions was signed not only by the distributors but also by both exhibitor organizations, the Reichsverband and the Schutzverband. Local trade groups in Germany are to take similar action.

Laboratories Reduce Prices

Coincident with these activities, it was decided at a meeting of the Association of Germany Copying Plants in Berlin, with Tobis representatives attending, to reduce the copying price for sound film from 21 pfennigs to 15, per meter, for both domestic and foreign distribution.

While this reduction is beneficial to distributors it does not involve the Tobis copying license, which amounts to 3 pfennigs a meter for foreign distribution and 5 pfennigs for distribution in Germany (the 5 pfennigs rate applies to both domestic and foreign pictures distributed throughout Germany). It is expected, says Mr. Canty, that Tobi will reduce this special license. The new copying tariff, effective November 15, 193 includes both the 6 pfennig reduction an further decreases and simplifications for various technical operations.

* Details of the decisions of the producers' conference and the Spitzenorganization meeting were published in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, issue of December 12. An analysis of the double feature situation in the United States and Canada appeared in the issues of November [illegible] 21.

Fox Film Shows $67,911,340 Gross Income in First 39 Weeks of Year

STUDIO SHOULD BE PROUD: SHERWOOD SEASON NOT BAD: JOHN S. COHEN, JR.

Hollywood Has Done Well, Says Sherwood

"There is no possible question of doubt that 1931 holds the distinction of being by all odds the worst year (financially) in the history of the motion picture industry," says Robert Sherwood, writing in the New York Evening Post.

"This precocious, thirty-year-old infant has known no such thing as genuine depression before, and thus it has had no chance to develop the philosophy which enables its battle-scarred elders to neutralize the effects of misfortune.

"The cinema, which was unhappily inclined to be boastful, blatant, obnoxious, in its days of victory, is now learning the bitter, chastening lesson of defeat.

"However, if the box office returns are at the moment far from sufficient for all concerned, there is no reason to complain at the lack of artistic progress during the last year. It seems to me that, in view of everything, Hollywood has done extraordinarily well.

"Here are several 1931 achievements of which the film business has cause to be proud:

" 'The Public Enemy' . . . probably the most important picture of the year. . . . It was a remarkably successful experiment in honest, candid realism on the screen. . . .

" 'Little Caesar' . . . reflected gangster life . . . in a hugely exciting manner. Edward G. Robinson's impersonation is not soon to be forgotten.

" 'City Lights' . . . It was sufficiently chaplinesque . . . to be worthy of inclusion in the list of glorious achievements of this incomparable clown. . . .

" 'Cimarron' is the only talking picture that has managed to achieve an historic grandeur comparable to that of 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'The Covered Wagon' and other epics. . . .

" 'The Front Page' and 'Five Star Final' were two prime insults to journalism as at present practiced. I thought the former . . . was the better of the two. . . .

" 'Skippy' and 'The Champ' . . . both exploited the absolutely unaccountable talents of Jackie Cooper, whose discovery deserves to be rated the most phenomenal event of the year. . . .

" 'Street Scene' . . . was a magnificently moving picture, possessed of dignity, and almost uniformly well acted.

" 'Monkey Business' was the best of the three comedies that the Four Rollicking Marxes have contributed. . . .

" 'Tabu' . . . was one of the screen's loveliest adornments. . . .

" 'A Free Soul' was a superb production . . . acted to the ultimate gasp by Lionel Barrymore, aided by Norma Shearer, Clark Gable and Leslie Howard.

" 'Waterloo Bridge' brought glory to its director, James Whale, and to its leading lady, Mae Clarke. . . .

" 'Touchdown' was not only the best of all the football pictures, but also one of the most courageous comments that the cinema has ever made on a current evil. . . .

" 'The Guardsman' and 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet' . . . gained importance by introducing to movie audiences three of the stage's worthiest celebrities: Alfred Lunt, Lynn Fontanne and Helen Hayes. . . .

Season Not So Bad, Says Cohen of Sun

"It hasn't been such a bad season, now, has it?" asks John S. Cohen, Jr., in his column, "The Talking Pictures," in the New York Sun, where he voices his comment on motion pictures and things of the industry. Mr. Cohen enjoys a wide reading public that reflects keen observation and interesting observations on matters current. In the issue of December 7 he presents his thoughts on outstanding productions. He writes:

" Late summer and early fall brought a quota of good films—'Bad Girl', 'The Guardsman', 'An American Tragedy', 'Street Scene', 'Five Star Final', 'Transatlantic' and a few others. . . .

" The films mentioned below represent those that were better than the general output, as well as those that had at least high aims. . . .

" 'Possessed' . . . It is remarkable chiefly for its clever production values and the projection of the personalities of its two players (Joan Crawford and Clark Gable).

" 'Frankenstein' . . . It is just the film for those who are tired of aggressive prettiness in the cinema. . . .

" 'Blonde Crazy' . . . Its chief asset, and it is a powerful asset, too, is James Cagney. . . .

" 'Rich Man's Folly' . . . It represents a superbly stunning production.

" 'Around the World in Eighty Minutes' . . . It has interesting shots.

" 'Over the Hill' . . . It may have its effect in the small towns. . . .

" 'The Champ' . . . It is a real hit.

" 'Touchdown' . . . The best football picture of talking or silent.

" 'Strictly Dishonorable' . . . It is very little changed from the play, and you may like it if you didn't see the original. . . .

" 'The Yellow Ticket' . . . Raoul Walsh, the director, put vitality into this melodramatic romance. . . .

" 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet' . . . It is brilliant, vital, effective. . . .

" 'The Mad Genius' . . . It creates new interest in John Barrymore as a movie player. . . .

" 'Susan Lenox' . . . It was one of the best movies of the season. . . .

" 'Palmy Days' . . . A screen musical comedy wherein Eddie Cantor for the first time proved his worth in the talkies. . . .

" 'Monkey Business' . . . The Marx Brothers' film has been one of the major successes of the season. . . .

" 'Devotion' . . . Leslie Howard is a brilliant actor in films as well as on the stage. . . .

" 'New Adventures of Wallingford' . . . In this thoroughly professional talkie William Haines gives his best audible performance. . ."

IN a few words, Ben Hecht, self-styled author, quit—or was fired from—Sam Goldwyn's organization because he refused to "earn" his $50,000—or is it $250,000—as a writer for Goldwyn.

We wonder if Hecht remembers those lean days of his 'way back in 1922, or '23, when he was making less than $100 a week as a feature writer on the Chicago Daily News, and was fired! Shortly afterward, Hecht and Max Bodenheim launched the Literary Times in Chicago, a "hi-hattin'" weekly which, besides many other fanatical oddities and attention-getters for circulation, boasted of a different light-colored tint paper stock each week, appearing first on baby-blue paper, then a passionate pink and occasionally a bright yellow.

Chicagoans, however, gave little notice to Hecht's efforts, and he quit the town flat, declaring, as he boarded a train at La Salle Street for New York: "There are not enough intelligent people in Chicago to appreciate intelligent efforts!"

The newest version centers around Tallulah Bankhead, and it's a wild yarn, too, stating that B. P. Schulberg, boss on the Coast, plans to "crucify" Tallulah just because Wanger brought her into the Paramount fold. The Wanger-Schulberg riff, as every one knows, is one of old.

The industry's involuntary participation in the present economic depression reminds us of the postwar slump when many of the present leaders purchased considerable property for theatre sites on a ridiculously low-priced real estate market which existed in the early 20's.

Loew, however, knew when to stop building in later years, operating most conservatively when costs of labor and materials began to soar.

Instead of Mike O'Toole, Sydney Cohen, George Aarons and Jimmy Walker leading the fight against industry taxation many years ago, say the challengers, the champions were Joe Dennison, of Michigan, then MPTOA president; H. M. Richey, also of Michigan, and Charlie Pettijohn.

Moreover, the trio fought their tax battle before the Ways and Means Committee, instead of in Andy Mellon's office, as was reported, and instead of $167,000,000, the entire measure collected only $80,000,000 annually from all phases of amusement.

GOOD PRODUCT, NOT PROTECTION, IS BRITISH NEED, SAYS MOORING

Using Best Talent of International Appeal So U. S. Will Have to Show the Pictures Is Regarded As Solution

By WM. H. MOORING, London

Can the motion picture industry of Britain afford to exclude foreign artists and technicians, and should the British Government legislate to prevent film production operations in this country by foreign-owned British companies?

This double-barreled query arises on the action this week of the National Association of Theatrical Employees, and the Film Artists Guild, who with other trade union factions have sent a deputation to the president of the Board of Trade to urge protection for the British film industry, and the native artist beyond that which already is provided by the Films Act 1927 (Quota).

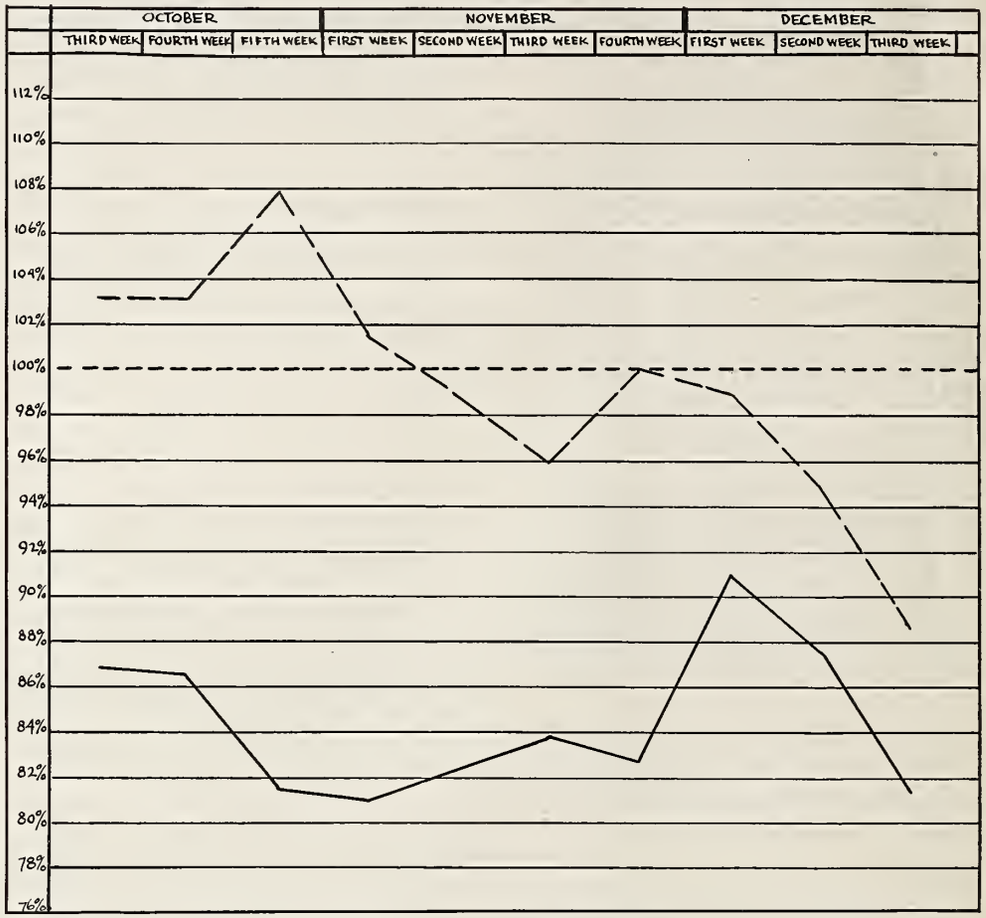
It is represented by the trade unions that the quota act does not go far enough, and that its whole purpose is likely to be defeated if American-owned concerns are permitted to start up studio operations in this country, thus entering into competition with existing all-British units, while enjoying considerable added advantages in the extra revenue which they may count upon through the distribution of such films as they produce here, throughout their circuits and exchanges in U. S. A. and elsewhere.

This plea may rest upon logic if it is safe to assume that legitimate British film producers are forever to face a closed market on the opposite side of the Atlantic. But the argument does not end there, for it is obvious that at this stage less than at any other in her motion picture history, Britain cannot do without cosmopolitan influences in the further development of her art, nor of stellar values which only Hollywood can supply. It may be—indeed is true—that many of the best of America's box-office names are of British origin, but they first flashed into lights through American foresight and courage, and it is on record that men and women whom British producers had described as hopeless have made good in Hollywood only to be offered handy sums to return to their native soil. Can one wonder that in most cases they elected to stay put in Hollywood?

If at this stage there is to be any question as to the adequacy of the Films Act to fulfill its purpose, it had better be considered whether in view of the growing need for an American outlet for British product, and of the increasing opportunities which, all things equal, British films might now enjoy in the U. S. A. market, provision should not be made to permit employment of still more foreign artists and technicians in British studios.

Only this way is it likely that existing prejudices against British films in the American theatres will ever be broken down. Let Britain use the best talent of international appeal: let her produce motion pictures of the caliber (in point of story and treatment) that Gaumont-British have done during the past three months, and America will have to take them or think up another excuse.

With regard to the activities of American concerns in the British studios today, it must be admitted that one of the main arguments employed by the F. B. I. when the Quota Act was before Parliament, was that rather than import so many foreign pictures Britain had better put on the quota which would have the effect of forcing Americans to come here and make pictures, thus giving employment to more British workmen. It has taken the Quota Act three years to force this issue. Is the country now to make itself ridiculous by telling America that what was really needed was an act of Parliament to institute an international siege on Hollywood?



At present the law says that 75 per cent of total salaries paid on any British quota picture, exclusive of one star or producer, but including the author's fees, shall be paid to British people. The author of the scenario must have been a British subject at the time the film was made.

The Board of Trade may grant certain exemptions if the producer can show that he was unable through circumstances beyond his control, to comply with these conditions. In some cases such exemption has been granted, but in most cases it has not even been applied for.

If the Government were prepared to adopt the advice of the trade unions, and stiffen these conditions, British pictures would take a dip, and would suffer artistic impoverishment which would not only keep them forever out of foreign markets, but would lose them prestige, and patronage throughout British theatres.

Meanwhile, Mr. Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, is being pressed internally by tariffists with Parliamentary status, and unless he introduces general protective measures—including some affecting films—he may be forced to resign.

If one-half the time and energy which British organizations are now putting into this agitation for "Protection" were utilized in promoting the natural protection which is wound around everything that is of world-wide appeal, there would be added to the present slogan, "Buy British," the even more pertinent one of "Sell British."

This chart, based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S weekly compilation of box office receipts, presents a comparison of business done by theatres in sixteen cities for a ten weeks' period in 1930 and 1931. The unbroken line shows receipts in the 1931 period, the broken line (— — —) represents receipts in the ten weeks in 1930, while the 100 per cent line shows the average intake for the year 1930.

FILM SHARES LATEST TO FOLLOW DOWNWARD TREND OF STOCKS IN '31

By THE ANALYST

Motion picture stocks, in line with all other classes of securities, enter 1932 selling around the lowest levels at which they have ever been quoted.

Ater putting up a strong resistance to selling pressure early in the year, film shares succumbed to the general market weakness as well as to various unsettling influences within the industry itself.

These were thrust into sharp relief when the general business depression, to which the motion picture business was immune longer than almost every other industry, began to make itself felt in picture circles.

As a result, salaries were slashed, dividends cut or omitted, new financial leaders recruited into the major film companies and the industry generally subject to a financial reorganization.

This process resulted in the following:

1. Entrance into Paramount-Publix Corporation of John Hertz, Chicago financier, William R. Wrigley, of chewing gum fame, and Albert D. Lasker, former chairman of the United States Shipping Board.

2. "Merger" of RKO-Pathe and RKO-Radio Pictures.

3. Election of Edward R. Tinker to the presidency of Fox Film Corporation, bringing more Bancamerica-Blair financial interests into that fold.

4. Sale of Warner Brothers' Brunswick radio division to American Record Company, a subsidiary of Consolidated Film Industries.

5. Omissions or reductions of dividends by Fox, Paramount and Columbia Pictures.

While there was a natural falling off in box office revenues as a result of general conditions, a decline in the quality of picture output was cited in many instances as the cause of the sharp curtailment in revenues. At any rate, there was a big enough spurt in the use of red ink to send film stocks down to unprecedentedly and probably unwarrantedly low levels and to encourage the inauguration of receivership proceedings against two major companies, Radio-Keith-Orpheum and Warner Brothers. These suits now are pending.

As a glance at the accompanying table will show, the majority of leading film stocks established their 1931 highs early in the year. From these levels there was a rather steady decline that was punctuated by intermittent and short-lived rallies. The extreme lows, as in other classes of securities, were touched late in the year in most instances and final prices were around those levels.

A newcomer to the stock exchange board, Radio-Keith-Orpheum new stock, appeared in the closing weeks. This stock was issued in accordance with the refinancing plan approved by stockholders in December. The old class A stock sold down to below a dollar a share as a result of the company's reported difficulties.

USUAL EVENING PRICES

Believe it or not, this is a theatre advertisement, reproduced from the pages of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of December 11 and 12. This is set forth immediately, because a casual reader might think that it had been prepared for a swift rolling carnival show, out to take the yokels, here tonight and there tomorrow. Carnivals of a certain type can do that. They swing in wide orbits over long jumps and goodwill is not among their assets. A motion picture theatre is, however, somewhat attached to a spot and related to a community. Customers are expected to come week after week and to speak well of the show to their friends.

This specimen is a flagrant, fullblown and gorgeous example of what circuits can achieve, with bright young managers who come to town to hold a job for a while. No resident showman with his own money invested and a responsibility to his community would venture such copy. It belongs with Mme. Fatima and the striped tent, with Chuck-a-Luck, the old army game, and Rattlesnake Oil. It is a curse upon the motion picture and the screen.

It is to be noted that the writer of this advertisement proclaims that he got it from "Ballyhoo;" the jape magazine, for 15 cents. If so he wasted his money. "Ballyhoo" is funny, about 15 cents' worth, but the derived copy is a tragedy.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"EMMA." Here is a story so human, so appealing and so fine that we doubt whether there is a single spot in the country where it will not equal or break any previous house record.

Although Marie Dressler is backed up with a fine and capable cast, it is she alone who so completely dominates the picture that all others fall off into the background as just so much scenery. Her remarkably fine portrayal of this characterization is one of the highlights of the entire season and we don't believe another picture will come along that could possibly steal the honors.

The title can be made a certain box-office winner by merely emphasizing Marie Dressler's name above it. Play her up for the many past performances she has turned in for your theatre. Mention her magnificent acting in "Min and Bill" and the subsequent winning of the award of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences. With the smallest effort you can insure perfect b.o. reaction to a picture of this kind. And your patrons will find your promise of perfect entertainment fully justified.

As for its "audience" value, words could not possibly convey the way we feel about this masterpiece from MGM. Every second of its entire length is absorbing and entertaining in every sense of the word. And as it held the interest of the packed house at the morning trade showing, so will it hold the interest of every picture theatre patron in the country.

It's almost ridiculous to try to tell anybody how to sell a picture like "Emma." It will sell itself. All you need worry about is the advance advertising. Reach down deep into your imagination and tell your entire community that here is the one picture they dare not miss. If they do they will be cheating themselves out of one of the choicest morsels of entertainment ever to play your house.

God bless Marie Dressler. With her and some more pictures like "Emma" it won't be long before show-business will be right back to S.R.O. times again. Give this one a banner spot and your longest run.

"DELICIOUS," according to Hoyle, ought to duplicate all of the box office success of "Sunnyside Up" because it is another one of those Cinderella things that hardly ever could happen, and, naturally, no one expects it to be anything true to life, or otherwise. It's just "sweet" entertainment and the kind that we all love to see. I did, and so did about five thousand other people in the Roxy theatre the other night.

The title will have to be tied to Farrell and Gaynor, plus Brendel and George Gershwin music (that is, if Gershwin's music happens to mean anything in your town). Janet is charming as the little Scotch lassie even when she forgets the Scotch burr in her lines. But when she's real Scotch the audience will love her. That title can be made into a sure-fire b.o. winner if the showman who gets behind it will only remember what he's selling and not try to outdo the windy circus press agents who care nothing at all about promising the earth and then delivering a shovel full of sand. Sell it for what it is and you'll have no cause for regret. Neither will your patrons.

In audience value you will find, as we did, that it is fine. The songs and music, spotted here and there, all help along and in the end you will feel well pleased with the show and those who play in it. Farrell is far from a knockout; he's always the same, but so long as your customers like him, that's that. This type of picture gets the dough today and that is what concerns all of us, not what the critics like or dislike. And those critics in the bigger cities may find the knifing good sport. Forget them. Your patrons will like this picture and maybe come back for a second helping.

Perfect for the kiddies. They'll love it. Maybe if you start off your run with a special morning show for them it will send out a couple of thousand ballyhooers plugging for you. Possibilities for tieups and exploitation are unlimited. If you've waited for something to shout about, start with this one. It's O.K.! Take it and cash in for as much as your house will hold behind a sensible merchandising campaign.

"PEACH O' RENO." When a picture is so thoroughly ridiculous that it really becomes funny, then it's time to stand up and shout. It's a real event for the theatres and the box offices.

Here's one that has a little bit of everything except drama. And, of course, it doesn't need any of that. But you get plenty of laughs, some slapstick, musical numbers, scantily clad girls and a courtroom scene that beggars description. It's too funny to try and describe.

The title naturally ties in with divorces and married life. But not in a serious vein. Then there's the law firm doing business on a wholesale basis with a fleet of busses operating between their theatre-front office and the railroad and then again to the courthouse. After business hours they transform the office into an elaborate night club and gambling joint. And it's all done in grand style with plenty of fun all around. If you've got a real funny streak in your system you ought to be well able to build up a peach of a campaign for this one. Tie in every slant that's part of it and you'll not lack for ideas.

In "audience value" just remember you've got a crazy picture that could be a two-reeler but is approximately six instead. Nevertheless, every reel has its hilarious spots and will keep them howling right along.

Too much advantage is taken of the "rough" lines; that, combined with the divorce theme, makes it rather questionable for the youngsters or for Sunday showing. But kept away from those two angles, you can do pretty much as you please with it.

RKO has not tried to turn out an epic or a human document. It wanted a side-splitting laugh provoker and it delivers it. So go on out and sell it for just what it is, without any tricky slants to your advertising, and the customers will go home with a giggle in their chests and a smile on their faces. It's that kind of picture.

"HUSBAND'S HOLIDAY" strikes me as being rather so-so entertainment despite its swell background and cast. Clive Brook gets top billing but its Vivienne Osborne's picture all the way through. Charlie Ruggles handles practically all the laughs, but unfortunately he doesn't get enough opportunities to contribute his swell humor. The remainder of the cast is OK, but of no especial importance in your selling of the attraction.

The title suggests a couple of slants. You can pick the one that best appeals to you for your selling campaign and go to work on it. But it's not the easiest thing in the world to tackle a theme wherein a husband quits a supposedly perfect wife and two marvelous kiddies for another woman. Nothing sympathetic about that. You'll have to treat it according to your particular community's taste for such things. But the selling possibilties are there and you can cash in on them with careful advertising.

"Audience value" of the picture is not too strong, but it constitutes fairly good entertainment, as entertainment seems to be going these days, so you should get by OK.

Although the two youngsters in this picture are adorable and give an excellent account of themselves, it is not a children's picture. So keep it away from the kiddies' days at your house. Ditto for Sunday in the smaller towns and cities. Otherwise, spot it to suit yourself.

"Husband's Holiday" is far from the best title for this picture and at first glance may leave a wrong impression. Your merchandising will have to convey the best slant of the picture. The larger spots will find it easy selling, but the smaller boys may not find their audiences taking to it too kindly.

Dance Team

(Fox)

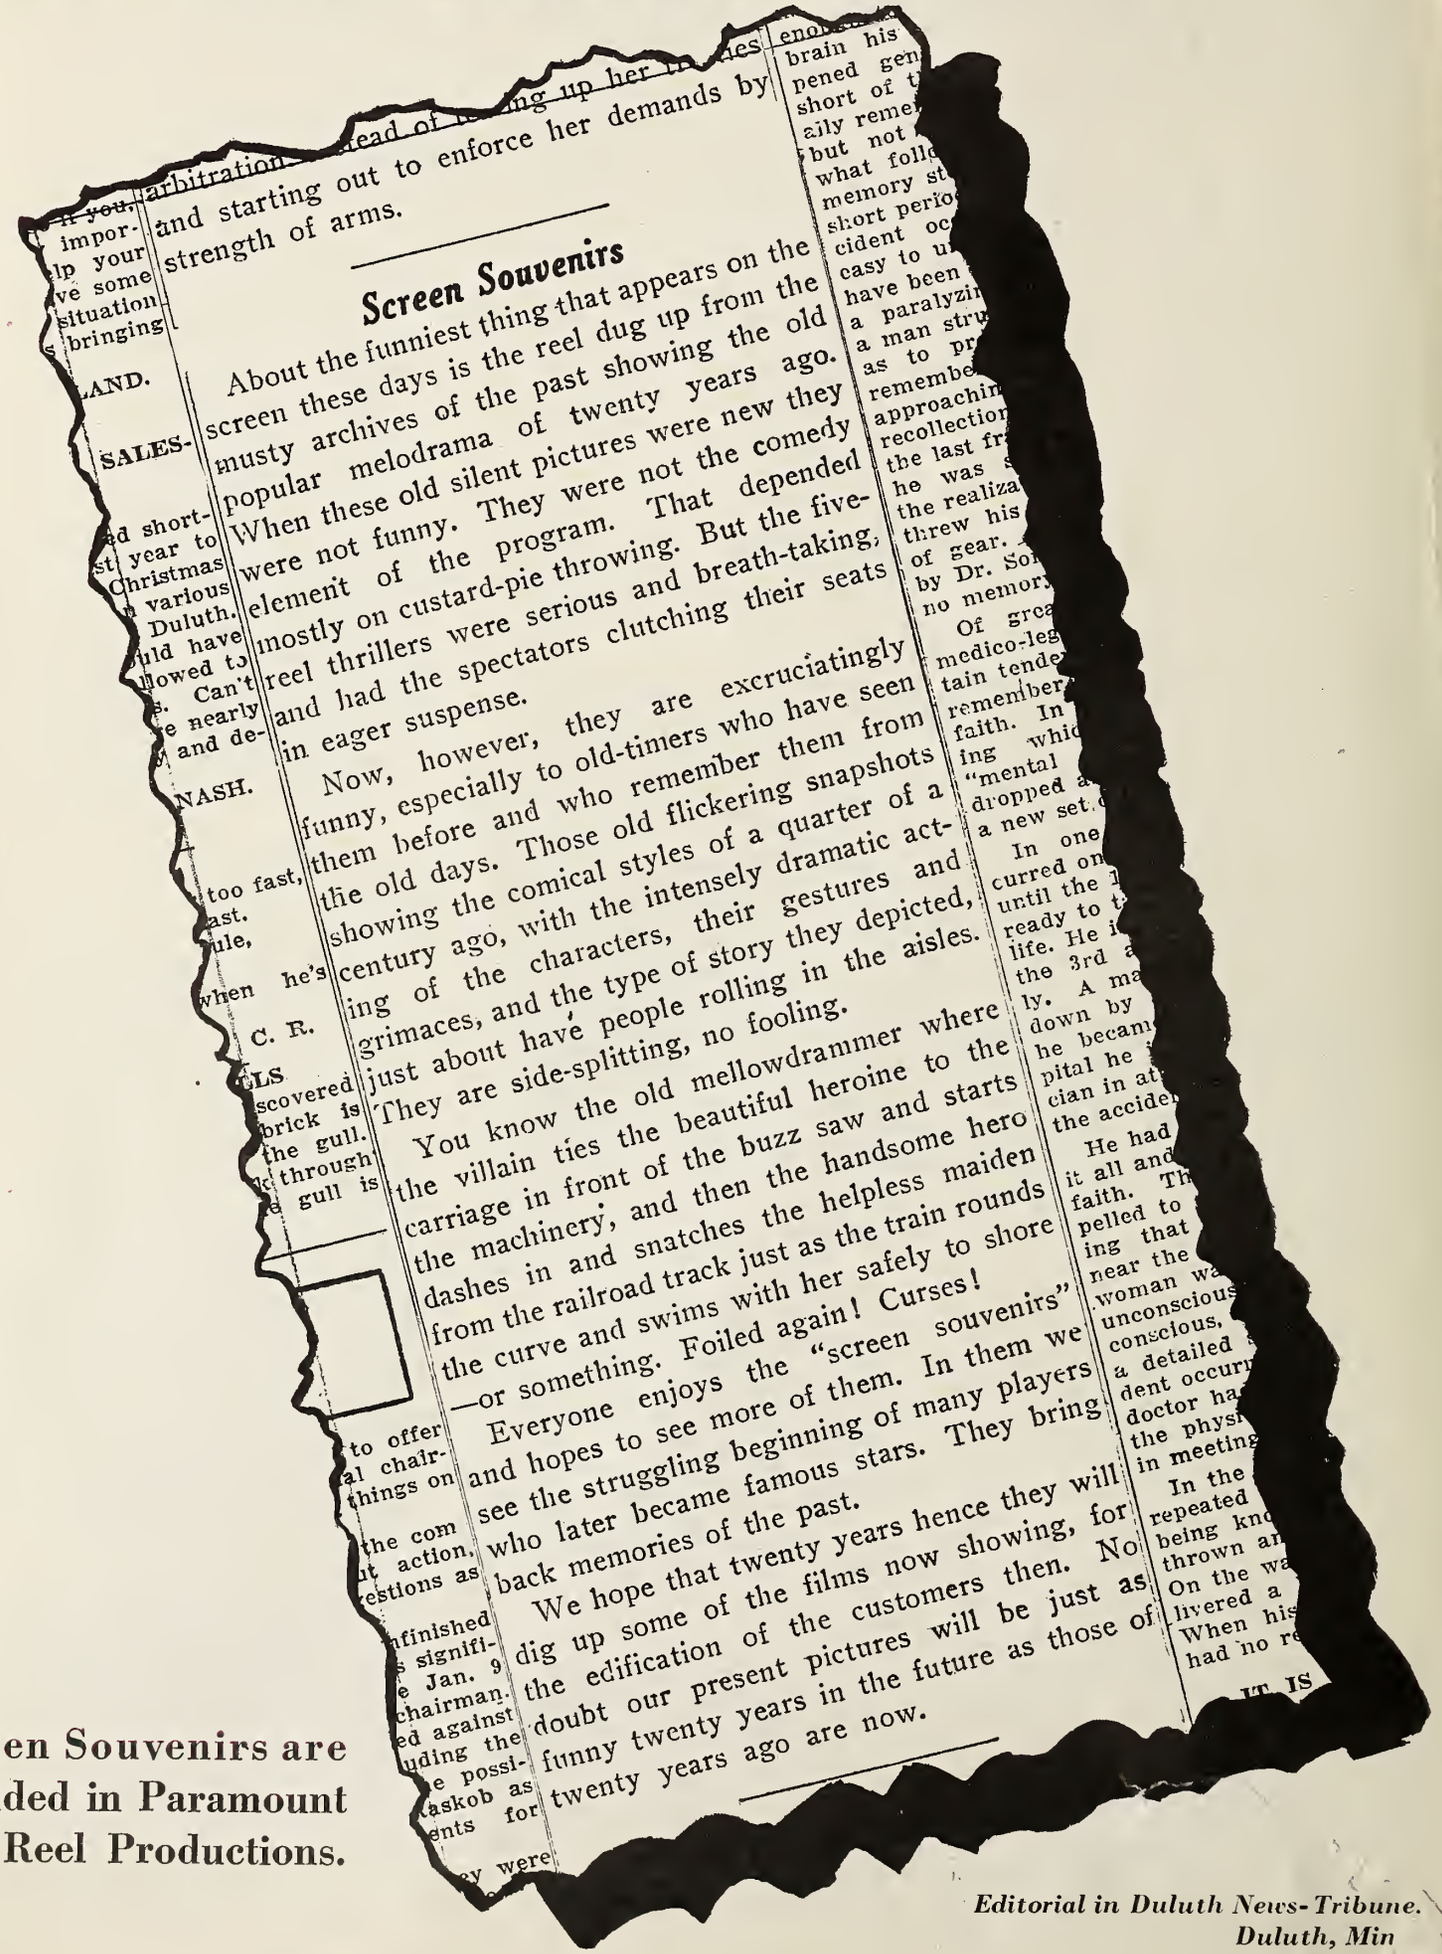
Chalk up another thoroughly delightful picture starring that potent Fox team, James Dunn and Sally Eilers. "Dance Team" is its title, and never did the screen or stage portray more entertainingly the lives and ambitions of a couple of small time hoofers seeking to put their names across in the big lights. It is the composite success of intelligence used by producer, director, writer, players and staff. It is a showmanlike admixture of sure-fire theme, situation, dialogue and handling.



First I should like to make a bow to Edwin Burke, who wrote the script and the dialogue. Never has he asked the players to do or say anything which would destroy the naturalness and honest simplicity of their characters. And he doesn't waste words. Sidney Lanfield picked up what was obviously a first class script, and put it on the screen with capable understanding of what he had to do.

To translate into filmic terms a properly developed story, through the medium of camera and player; to make visual an entertainment written expertly by a writer who knows what entertainment is, and can plot it out in words and action to fit his intended medium, is what a director is for.

Neither Burke nor Lanfield tried to be Columbuses, striving for the new and different (and boresome.) Apparently they were too busy to be concerned with their own vanity. Burke wrote a "show"—Lanfield staged it with celluloid. Theme, situations, backgrounds—all as old as the hills. Yes, so are beef steak and potatoes. But what a difference the cooks can make!

Only three players are important, Dunn and Eilers as the hoofers who make good in a big way, and Harry Beresford as an old trouper who's days are numbered. Others offer effective bits, but here again the makers of this opus clung to the old fashioned notion—too often forgotten these days—that in seven or arbitration ... and starting out to enforce her demands by strength of arms.

Screen Souvenirs

About the funniest thing that appears on the screen these days is the reel dug up from the musty archives of the past showing the old popular melodrama of twenty years ago. When these old silent pictures were new they were not funny. They were not the comedy element of the program. That depended mostly on custard-pie throwing. But the five-reel thrillers were serious and breath-taking, and had the spectators clutching their seats in eager suspense.

Now, however, they are excruciatingly funny, especially to old-timers who have seen them before and who remember them from the old days. Those old flickering snapshots showing the comical styles of a quarter of a century ago, with the intensely dramatic acting of the characters, their gestures and grimaces, and the type of story they depicted, just about have people rolling in the aisles. They are side-splitting, no fooling.

You know the old mellowdrammer where the villain ties the beautiful heroine to the carriage in front of the buzz saw and starts the machinery, and then the handsome hero dashes in and snatches the helpless maiden from the railroad track just as the train rounds the curve and swims with her safely to shore —or something. Foiled again! Curses!

Everyone enjoys the "screen souvenirs" and hopes to see more of them. In them we see the struggling beginning of many players who later became famous stars. They bring back memories of the past.

We hope that twenty years hence they will dig up some of the films now showing, for the edification of the customers then. No doubt our present pictures will be just as funny twenty years in the future as those of twenty years ago are now.

Screen Souvenirs are included in Paramount One-Reel Productions.

eight reels of entertainment you have time for only one story, and t'hell with the off-side angles, tempting though the by-ways may be. Jimmy, being sort of a hoofer at heart, literally slays this fat part. It is almost like Jimmy himself, or at least his performance is so convincing one believes he is taking a chapter out of his own life. And that's acting! I like Sally Eiler's work the best of any of her pictures with Dunn. I think she reveals a greater versatility of mood as she goes through the trials and triumphs of Poppy Kirk than she ever has shown before. Like Jimmy, she lived the character, so it rang true. Beresford as the old trouper is touching. Beresford is a very fine actor.

Emma

(MGM)

Drama

A rather large trade show audience at the Astor in New York laughed copiously and wept sincerely as Marie Dressler, in the title role of "Emma," housekeeper, plays mother, guardian and peacemaker to a family whose mother had died in childbirth.

A large cast rendered most able assistance, it was unanimously agreed, with Richard Cromwell, Jean Hersholt, Purnell B. Pratt doing perhaps the most finished work, though that probably because their roles were more prominent than the others. Comment distinctly heard in the lobby at the conclusion of the performance left no doubt of the reception accorded the film or of its sterling qualities as entertainment on the one hand and the brilliant performance of Miss Dressler, Academy Award winner, on the other.

Emma, in a sequence in the nature of a prologue, is housekeeper to Jean Hersholt, inventor, and his three boisterous children, in the year 1911, as a fourth child is born and the mother dies.

We are brought forward to 1931, where Emma is still housekeeper, but this time in a mansion, with the three children very much aware of their position in life and forgetful of the part Emma played in raising them. Only the fourth, Richard Cromwell, is still loyal to the woman who runs the household and guards the health of Hersholt.

Emma is about to take a vacation at Niagara Falls and Hersholt accompanies her to the train. In the station are enacted amusing and touching scenes as she cannot make up her mind about leaving the home. Finally Hersholt leaves with her, and the children are astounded to receive a wire that the two old folks have been married. Indignant, they fight a bad situation, while Cromwell loyally is happy at the development.

Hersholt dies of heart disease and the will reveals all the property left to Emma, who is to handle the finances for the children. Raging, the offspring, Cromwell excepted, contest the will by accusing Emma of murdering Hersholt with an overdose of heart tablets. The stirring court trial sees Emma acquitted, just as news comes that Cromwell, flying through a storm to help her, had been killed.

The shock brings the children to their senses, but Emma refuses to stay after making over their father's fortune to them. Seeking a job, she refuses a wealthy household and we leave her, content, handling three noisy children, with a fourth on her lap, just born and named, at her request, Ronnie, after young Cromwell.

Sky Devils

(United Artists)

Air Comedy

The boys and girls who made "Sky Devils" for Caddo must have had a lot of fun doing it. The picture bubbles and chuckles with good humor. There is nothing subtle or sophisticated in this story or its direction. Just old-fashioned laughing stuff, with no hesitancy in employing a situation because it or something like it may have been used before.

The story of two slackers who get to France and into war in spite of themselves, comedic enough in itself, is embroidered with ridiculous incidents known to the lots as gags. Hokum, sure, but apparently sure-fire fun. And it got the laughs from the preview audience—even from the people who made the picture.

The comedy is carried even into a sequence of breath-taking stunt flying, and here is where George Cooper, a boot flyer who solos when he has no notion of so doing, agitates the laugh-meter. Spencer Tracy, as the other unwilling hero, and William Boyd, top kick who makes soldiering as much of a burden to both as he can carry the fun along with credit to themselves and their director, Edward Sutherland, it was generally thought. Ann Dvorak is good to look at as an American girl, Yola D'Avril clever as the madamoiselle, and the colonel is done by Billy Bevan. Forrester Harvey, William B. Davidson and Jerry Miley contribute characterizations.

The dialogue, by Robert Benchley, Joseph Moncure March, James Starr, Carroll Graham and Garrett Graham was said to have missed fire occasionally. Gaetano Gaudio's photography was called excellent. The music provided by Alfred Newman is gaily in keeping with the theme. Other production factors are well handled.

Much of the action takes place "Over There" —not at the front, but in French villages—has sufficient background in fact to please any "soldat Americain" whose memory is not too short.

A Woman Commands

(RKO Pathe)

Those responsible for the selection, treatment and production of the story are to be blamed for any failure of Pola Negri's "comeback" picture, "A Woman Commands," to completely satisfy film fans. You can bet your bottom dollar that when a cast which includes Roland Young, Basil Rathbone and H. B. Warner has difficulty in putting a story across, even if it were one of Grimm's fairy tales, then there is something haywire with the story.

Pola herself struggles through the mystic mazes of plot as bravely as she now is fighting her way back to health in a Santa Monica hospital. Twice, when they stop the thing to allow her to sing an exquisite little number, "Paradise," composed for her by Nacio Herbert Brown, she demonstrates beyond question that, supported by a proper vehicle, she would be even better than the Pola of silent days. Possessing an unusually attractive singing voice, she puts into the rendition of the number a charm and deftness of touch that is delightful. All too soon, then, she is hurled back into the intrigues, such as they are, of one of those mythical George Barr McCutcheon kingdoms—and what of it?

Foremost in the characterization is Roland Young as the King. He is so good they shoot him in the last reel, for fear he will steal the picture. Oh, death, where is thy sting! He steals it anyhow. Rathbone fails to convince as the handsome lover chiefly, perhaps, because he is made out to be a little too much of a cad. It takes more expert handling than this one got to turn the heroine over to the villain and make the audience like it. H. B. Warner does the best he can with a rather thankless part. Reginald Owen went over to the Chaplin studios and borrowed an old mustache worn by Mack Swain, and it proved too much for him. May Boley tried to be funny as Pola's maid, but did not succeed.

The picture does demonstrate, however, that la Negri is still an intriguing personality, and that her talents might be used profitably in talking pictures. It is to be hoped she has another and better opportunity.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Directed by Paul L. Stein. From an original story by Thilde Forster. Charles R. Rogers, producer. Associate producer, Harry Joe Brown. Music by Nacio Herbert Brown. Photographed by Hal Mohr. Art director, Carroll Clark. Musical director, Arthur Lange. Release date, January 1, 1932.

Manhattan Parade

(Warner Brothers)

Comedy

A running fire of humor distributed among the lines for a number of the characters in "Manhattan Parade" brought a succession of laughs and chuckles from the audience at the Winter Garden on Broadway. The picture, all in color, was enthusiastically received and that enthusiasm was maintained throughout.

Most of the comedy is in the hands and on the lips of Smith and Dale, long in vaudeville in the Avon Comedy Four, and Winnie Lighter and Charles Butterworth, and Luis Alberni as the mad Russian director. But there are other lines from others in the cast, all making for a fast-moving production.

Winnie Lightner, as Doris, is the motor that speeds up the Roberts Costume Company from nothing to a highly efficient business machine. Herbert (Charles Butterworth) provides suggestions, droll but some not so good. Her husband (Walter Miller) insists that she leave the company and apply her attention to the rearing of their son (Dickie Moore). And when Doris tucks the lad in for the night, Dickie wins the patrons with his embellishments on the bedtime story that his tired mother attempts to tell him.

With Doris at home, the business goes to pieces, and John the husband draws the last of the company's checking account to go to pe—with Doris' girl secretary. Doris re- s to her desk. Vassily Vassiloff (Luis Alberni) orders five million dollars worth of costumes with only six dollars and thirty cents in his pocket. But Doris gets an idea, sets him up at a ritzy hotel, and sells him to the Delmans (Smith and Dale), show producers, as a genius.

Then the fun begins. Vasiloff's plans are as vacillating as his name suggests, and he winds up by bringing in elephants and then ostriches, tearing out the seats and having the audience sit on the stage while the play is given in the auditorium, with an underwater ballet.

John returns and threatens to attach the Delman show. But Doris gets an affidavit from the girl secretary (Greta Grandstedt) and John calls off the sheriff.

Produced by Warner Brothers from the play by Samuel Shipman. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Photographed in Technicolor. Adapted by Robert Lord and Houston Branch. Assistant director, T. C. Wright. Art director, Jack Okey. Cameraman, Dev. Jenning. Film editor, Bill Holmes. Release date, January 16, 1932. Running time, 77 minutes.

Husband's Holiday

(Paramount)

Drama

A story which has been told many times before, on stage and screen, becomes here the vehicle for the suave and finished Clive Brook, supported by Vivienne Osborne, dark and attractive and Juliette Compton, blonde and sinuous, in addition to numerous others, all noted as capable by several of the audience at the New York Paramount.

It is a tale of marital difficulties which straighten themselves at the concluding sequence in the manner fully expected, while the players encounter the same situations which have been numerously encountered many times before. Comment was to the effect that Miss Compton, in several instances, seemed inclined to overact, to the detriment of her portrayal of the woman who steals a husband only to be stricken with remorse, and return him.

Brook plays the husband and the father of two appealing youngsters. His affair with Miss Compton is brought to the ears of the wife, in a burst of righteousness, by the latter's mother, played well by Elizabeth Patterson. They separate but Miss Osborne refuses to give Brook a divorce, waiting to see the outcome of what she believes to be an infatuation.

When finally, after considerable of the "heartbreak" situations on both sides, and after Miss Compton takes poison in a sequence which was thought to be rather amateurish, at least, Miss Osborne offers to give Brook the divorce. Then he realizes he doesn't really want it, but much prefers home, wife and family. Miss Compton sends a note with Brook when he goes to visit his children on Christmas Day, and the reconciliation is effected as Miss Compton apologizes and states her intention of leaving town.

Charlie Ruggles offers a bit of comedy as the annoyed husband, while Leni Stengel plays his wife and Harry Bannister, as the lawyer friend, offers to take Brook's place at the fireside with Miss Osborne. It may be recorded that the audience at the Paramount seemed fairly well entertained by the film, adapted from Ernest Pascal's play, "The Marriage Bed."

Produced and distributed by Paramount. From novel and play "The Marriage Bed" by Ernest Pascal. Screen play by Ernest Pascal and Viola Brothers Shore. Directed by Robert Milton. Cameraman, Charles Rosher. Release date, December 19, 1931. Running time, 68 minutes.

Under Eighteen

(Warners)

Drama

Marion Marsh, petite and attractive 17-year-old blonde player who has been elevated to the ranks of stardom by Warners, appears here in what is called her first starring vehicle. Another more or less newcomer to the screen, and an importation from New York's legitimate, Warren William, plays opposite, while Regis Toomey takes care of the other half of the romantic interest of the film story.

We have here the story of the girl, Miss Marsh, who is in love with grocer-clerk Toomey, and works in a fashionable establishment to support her widowed mother. Her sister's marriage is wrecked, though only temporarily, as a result of what she (Anita Page) believes to be her husband's laziness, and the girl decides marriage isn't all that it is supposed to be. William, pent-housed man-about-town, godfather of many a model, sees Miss Marsh and makes overtures. When the sister's husband strikes his wife and the latter seeks a divorce, Miss Marsh approaches Toomey, regular fellow. He refuses when he learns the purpose of the money and she goes to William partying in his penthouse. Toomey follows and hits William, not knowing that preceding his entrance, William, much "refreshed" by Miss Marsh's wholesome innocence, had turned his "better side" uppermost and was being a real friend and gentleman. William falls and the girl believes the blow has killed him. Fearing for Toomey's safety, she finds him and the two, reconciled, are rather pleasantly surprised by word that the blow had not been fatal and that they were being wished the best of luck. Equally pleasant is the news that the loafing husband had won a billiard tourney and a rather sizable sum of money, restoring another romance to its full health.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by Archie Mayo. Screen play and dialogue by Charles Kenyon and Maude Fulton. Assistant director, Ben Silvey. Cameraman, Sid Hickox. Editor, George Marks. Release date, January 2, 1931. Running time, 81 minutes.

Great

Here's a great treat for the youngsters and a real bit of enjoyment for the older generations. Jackie Cooper wants to give a Christmas party for his football team, but the rooters are too many and Jackie's home isn't large enough. He asks Norma Shearer's help and the actress obtains the use of a studio stage from Louis B. Mayer. Hundreds youngsters get a real feed, which is served a galaxy of MGM stars. They include M rion Davies, Lionel Barrymore, Clark Gab and Leila Hyams. Of all people to carve tu keys, Wallace Beery, Marie Dressler and Pol lie Moran, in chef outfits, do it. The appea of the stars is wide and Jackie, of course, is splendid. A very appealing short.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Film Is Textbook And Entertainment In Dodge Feature

By LEO MEEHAN

Motion picture production experts are quietly, and slowly, demonstrating that the screen can be made the best textbook of salesmanship.

There have been several pioneering efforts, some good, but mostly very amateurish, in the line of commercial films, intended to publicize commercial products to the public or to the persons directly concerned in their production, distribution or sales.

Cooperating with Wilding Picture Production of Detroit, Educational Talking Pictures, Ltd., composed of Hollywood picture men who know what it is all about, have just completed a remarkable production for the Dodge Brothers Corporation, entitled, "More Power to You." Its entire 9800 feet are frankly devoted to an exposition of why people should buy Dodge motor cars, and how to prove it to them. It pulls a Dodge apart, puts it together again; takes it out on the road, and back into the shop.

But—and here's the difference—it is always an entertainment, professionally staged, and played by professional actors. It carries a swell love story, and all the thematic qualities that made those Horatio Alger book sales run into millions. The picture was produced in its entirety in Hollywood. The production management and direction were handled by Pat Dowling and Hobart Brownell, and it was made from a dramatic story written by Mike Simmons. It has been most capably acted.

While the production could not be described as "lavish," at the same time no reasonable expense has been spared in those physical qualities which denote a professional picture. The sound is just as good as any big feature production, so is the photography. Huntly Gordon is the best immitation of a really big sales executive I ever have seen. Jason Robards, as a salesman, could sell a Dodge to a Chinaman.

Pat Dowling tells me another experimental production of this character was made by them last year for a piston ring manufacturer. The company attributes a 50 per cent increase in sales largely to the picture. General Food Products is another big timer which has found use for film in selling, and has found that it pays to have professional film makers do the job.

It looks like a big field.

Sam Morris to Europe

Sam E. Morris of Warner-First National will sail for Europe on January 6 aboard the Europa to make a study of foreign sales and distribution. Joseph Hazen of the company's legal staff returned from abroad this week.

Allied To Plan Tax Fight

The Allied directors' meeting in Chicago January 6 is expected to be featured by the setting of plans for the organizations's part in the industry battle against Secretary Mellon's proposed admission tax.

THE MOLAR SEARCH!

Actors and actresses of Hollywood are walking around with their mouths tightly closed just now. At least some of them are, at any rate. Dr. B. Haines, noted New York dental surgeon, is searching out the best looking and healthiest set of teeth in filmdom for both the actors and actresses. The delving doctor has already unearthed the best set of teeth among Broadway's showgirls, and now he is conning the molars of Hollywood. The selections, and their owners, will be featured in a series of dental educational shorts to be made in the East. It is said Dorothy Lee of RKO and Joan Crawford of MGM have the best teeth among the actresses. Film players with plates, and there are some, had better hide under the bed while the doctor is in Hollywood. Think what a blow it would be.

Report Lowell Thomas Leading Spirit of New Newsreel Firm

The American Newsreel Corporation, a new organization, has rented a small office on the seventh floor of the General Motors building, New York. No telephone has been installed and reporters who called have found it unoccupied. In consequence, no definite information concerning the identity of the organization or its contemplated activities has been available. Occupants of a neighboring office volunteered the information that a "Joseph Smith" was in charge of the quarters and that the organization would be in operation after the first of the year.

Reports during the past week have named Lowell Thomas, "radio voice of the Literary Digest," as closely identified with the new project. Thomas, it is understood, admitted his association with the company, but refused to divulge details of the organization. Another unconfirmed report was to the effect that the newsreel would be a Warner development.

Paramount Reduces Loan; Plans Commitment Payment

Paramount has reduced its outstanding bank loan to about $7,500,000 as of December 26, and has completed arrangements for the payment of $2,500,000 due on stock commitment for acquisition of control of Great States Theatres of Illinois. The $2,500,000 will be paid in monthly installments, beginning with a $500,000 cash payment in January, and specified ensuing payments for the next 18 months. The payments cover 30,000 shares of Paramount stock guaranteed at 85.

The reduction in bank loans is held to demonstrate the company's liquid condition, as commitments were reduced by more than $500,000 last month, from a total of more than $8,000,000.

Take Over Legit House

Warners circuit has taken over the Montclair, Newark, N. J., renovated the house for films and vaudeville, and opened it on Christmas Day. The house will be open on the last half of the week only.

Rules Arbitration Clause Voids the Standard Contract

A decision holding that the arbitration clause of the standard contract voids the whole contract has been upheld by the Idaho Supreme Court. The court ruled that a contract violating the Sherman Act not only is illegal, but its execution is unlawful.

The Idaho decision was handed down by District Judges Miles S. Johnson in a suit brought by Fox against Tri-State Theatres. The decision is at variance with other rulings handed down throughout the country which hold that the standard contract is legal with the arbitration clause stricken out.

Several other cases pending in Idaho are affected by the decision, with one suit of significance at Grangeville.

Laemmle Jubilee Opens January 4

Carl Laemmle's 26th "Anniversary Jubilee" (a sales campaign), which will embrace the Universal chieftain's 65th birthday, will open January 4 and continue to the end of February. Six special productions have been set for January and February release by Universal to mark the observance.

The two months of Laemmle's "Anniversary Jubilee" in past years have included many of the most significant events of Laemmle's career. His birthday falls on January 17. It was on February 14, 1884, that Laemmle arrived in America. Twenty-six years ago, on January 1, he left an Oshkosh, Wis., clothing store to enter the picture business. February 24, 1906, saw the opening in Chicago of his first theatre, the White Front.

Laemmle has revised the production schedule for the Jubilee, and releases of the six special features have been allotted to the two-month celebration. January releases will include "Strictly Dishonorable," "The Unexpected Father" and "Michael and Mary." On the February list are: "Law and Order," "Speed Crazy" and "Murders in the Rue Morgue."

Radio City Exteriors To Be Done With Indiana Limestone

The Indiana Limestone Company has been awarded the contract for the 3,209 carloads of stone, about 144,000 tons, which will be used in building the exteriors of the 10 units of New York's Radio City.

It is estimated 3,000 men will be put to work in the cutting of the stone at four New York plants. About 600 tons alone will be used in three units: the International Music Hall, its office extension and the sound film theatre. Setting of the stone is expected to get under way in February.

Dan Weinberg with Skouras

Dan Weinberg, who recently resigned as Warner Virginia district manager, is now district supervisor for Skouras Theatres in New Jersey, under Maurice Stahl.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts for the current calendar week, ending December 26, were a further indication of the expected seasonal drop in box office grosses as a result of the Christmas holidays. The total for 178 theatres in 30 key cities in the country this week reached $2,045,208, a decrease of $128,261 from the total for the previous calendar week, ended December 19, when a total figure of $2,173,469 was recorded. In comparison with last week's individual theatre gross returns, with one new high figure and 14 new lows listed, this week's compilation indicated no new "highs" and 29 new "lows." In past years it has been the general rule that a definite upturn in receipts immediately followed the close of the Christmas holiday season.

Story by Frank Capra

Adaptation and dialogue by Jo Swerling

A FRANK CAPRA PRODUCTION

COLUMBIA PICTURES

NCOMPARABLE

THAT'S THE WORD. Now let's use some plain language. YOU KNOW that Columbia's Box Office Combination—played by Stanwyck, directed by Capra—has brought you only SMASH HITS. Here's the best picture they ever made. Your only trouble will be handling the crowds. BOOK IT NOW and prosperity won't be "just around the corner"—It will be waiting in line at YOUR BOX OFFICE.

DDEN

The name FRANK CAPRA has long been synonymous with pictures that play to capacity. Naturally there's a reason—a very good one. Besides being a great dramatist, he knows values from the box-office angle. And that's important—isn't it?

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

Radio Pictures studio, for some time on a very light production schedule and in the midst of both internal reorganization as well as consolidation with Pathe, swings into the new year with a heavy schedule. David O. Selznick, new production chief, announces a program of 22 pictures to be made during the late winter months. It is planned to get them into the works as rapidly as possible, in order to catch up with the season's program.

The new program glitters with star names far more than any previous Radio program, due to the acquisition by Radio, through the "merger," of such people as Ann Harding, Constance Bennett, Helen Twelvetrees and others. John Barrymore is also among those to star for Radio this winter in a picture entitled "State's Attorney."

"Lost Squadron" is already well under way, with the Barrymore vehicle, and the following to go in shortly: "Symphony of Six Million," a Fannie Hurst story; "Bird of Paradise," the famous Richard Walton Tully play; "Westward Passage," which will feature Ann Harding; "March of a Nation," with the cast which was to play in "Frontier," Irene Dunne, Richard Dix, included; "Blood and Wine," a Wallace Smith story featuring Dolores Del Rio; and "Hold 'Em Jail," featuring Woolsey and Wheeler, Edna May Oliver and Roscoe Ates. Edgar Wallace, English mystery thriller author, is also preparing a story to be done by Herbert Brenon.

B. P. Schulberg and Albert Kaufman of Paramount are recovering from an automobile accident which might have been very serious. Driving through the rain the other day, their big roadster skidded into an ornamental light post. The car and the occupants were badly scarred up, but nothing serious. After treatment at the Hollywood emergency hospital they were taken home. They spent Christmas in bandages, however. They expect to be back at their desks after the New Year.

The general feeling around Hollywood is that in spite of the production panic which followed conferences here of the big executives around Thanksgiving time, there will be plenty of studio activity during the next three months. In addition to Radio's heavy schedule, Jack Warner has announced the First National plant will be humming with production. MGM always can be counted upon for its quota. Junior Laemmle's schedule at Universal is up to normal. United Artists and Columbia are quiet, but to make up for this there is considerable activity among the independents at such plants as Metropolitan, Tec-Art, Monogram, Sennett, Hal Roach and elsewhere.

Estelle Taylor was among the Christmas holiday casuals. Riding in a car with Frank Joyce, actors' agent, she was hit by one of the Los Angeles speeders. No bones were broken, fortunately, though she will be out of commission for a time.

Telegraph companies profited by Hollywood's economy wave the past week. Many of those who ordinarily send out elaborate Christmas cards, but decided to be saving this year, got cold feet the last minute and sent wires to the important ones, at least.

Your old MOTION PICTURE HERALD friend, Jaysee Jenkins, spent his Christmas with Hollywood relatives and friends. He didn't buy Christmas cards, but he did buy turkeys for his relatives in Southern California, numbering quite a few.

Tallulah Bankhead, Paramount star, says she believes Hollywood is "very badly organized." Which opinion is no news to Hollywood. Persons with even less experience in Hollywood than Miss Bankhead have said the same thing. In spite of them, Hollywood continues to be the world's source of entertainment.

James R. Grainger of Fox is here for the holidays. He tried to make us believe that business conditions were on the "up-and-up" in the East. Being credulous here, we believe it. Anyhow, if the world's greatest film salesman is wrong, we still believe it. Call it California optimism, if you like, but that is the way we feel about it.

After all—and this is from your Hollywood correspondent—the world must be entertained. The New York stage is pretty well down and out, not primarily because of any business depression, but because the motion picture business offers better entertainment for less money.

There must be a few of you showmen who remember when flea-bitten roadshows came into your town and took away a lot of money. They do not even attempt it today. How can they, in the face of the attractions you offer them on the screen?

Paste that in your hat, Mr. Exhibitor, as a reminder from this writer! There may be a lot of things wrong with the world as we enter this year of 1932, but we have the business of entertainment sewed up in our back pockets. Happy New Year!

Abandons Circuit Plan

Negotiation reported involving J. W. Myers, head of the Indiana Myer circuit for the leasing of several theatres as the start of a Columbus, Ohio, circuit, have suddenly been abandoned, without explanation.

Schoedsack Leaving India

Ernest B. Schoedsack has sailed from Bombay, India, after completing exterior scenes for the film "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer," which he is producing for Paramount. He was in the field 15 weeks.

Ina Claire in New York

Ina Claire, United Artists player, arrived in New York this week, having completed "The Greeks Had A Word for Them," on the Coast. She is reading plays and may appear for a short time on the stage.

Hecht vs. Goldwyn Results in Verse And a Statement

Ben Hecht, who burst into virile verse, using the motion picture industry and his connection with its as the subject, has, he said, resigned from the $250,000 (for five years) job he had with Samuel Goldwyn as a writer. He claims a friend of his is starting a new magazine and wants some "warm" stuff, so he wrote the poem.

Samuel Goldwyn, in an exclusive statement to the Associated Press this week, says Ben Hecht did not resign. Ben Hecht was fired! and by Samuel Goldwyn himself. Incidentally, Goldwyn says the $250,000 indicated by Hecht is merely a myth which took rise in the novelist's fertile mind. The latter says the industry's conception of art interfered with his own, so it is the industry's loss. Goldwyn has a bit of difficulty agreeing with that point of view.

Goldwyn, in the statement, says he offered Hecht and his collaborator, Charles MacArthur, a generous advance and plenty of time to develop a story idea which Goldwyn liked. The plan included a percentage of the receipts for the authors if the picture was successful, with which plan Hecht, says Goldwyn, was much pleased. Later, he discovered that Hecht was working on three pictures, instead of one and that he had several other contracts in addition to Goldwyn's.

Hecht's answer when questioned, was: "You wouldn't stop me from getting a little easy money, would you?" according to Goldwyn.

Goldwyn's statement says: "I would. And I did. I fired him."

The producer goes on to point out how valuable it is that the motion picture industry is through, on its side, with such "literary racketeers" as Hecht, who "trading on their reputations, (are) looking for easy money and an opportunity of getting away with something."

New Midwest Union Signs 11 Theatres in Illinois, Iowa

The Independent Motion Picture Operators' and Service Engineers' Association of America, new labor organization with headquarters in Minneapolis, has signed 11 theatres in Davenport, Ia.; Rock Island, Ill.; Moline and East Moline, Ill., for one year.

The operators of the theatres included have formed a local, 103, which will be state headquarters for Iowa. Officers are: William Rhodes, president; Thomas J. Burnett, vice-president and business manager; S. J. Bueche, secretary-treasurer. The organization claims 500 members at present.

Tiffany Specials in Work

"Hotel Continental" Tiffany drama, has been cast and placed in production on the Coast, with Peggy Shannon in the lead. The first of two Ken Maynard specials, "The Texas Gun Fighter," has also gone into work at the studios. Phil Rosen is directing.

BOOK REVIEWS

A HISTORY OF THE MOVIES, by Benjamin B. Hampton. 456 pages, with index, and pictorial supplement. Published by Covici-Friede, New York.

This volume may be properly termed the first of motion picture memoirs from a participant in affairs of formative years of the industry's business structure. Mr. Benjamin Boles Hampton has made an interesting contribution to the lore of the period in which he was active in, or upon the periphery of, the motion picture, and from that especial point of view the future research student of the institution of the screen will find it important.

The significant period of Mr. Hampton's book is devoted to that time in the affairs of the motion picture when Adolph Zukor, to take Mr. Zukor's own words from other pages, "sat in on the movie game with everything on one ace." That ace was Miss Mary Pickford, around whom Mr. Zukor ultimately was to build the whole of the great corporate structure which is today known as Paramount Publix. Mr. Hampton, who had done a bit of publishing, with Hampton's Magazine, and a considerable bit of advertising as the vice president in charge of advertising for the American Tobacco Company, was looking about for excitement and a hand in the movies, to which hand he was minded to draw Mr. Zukor's ace.

What happened then, many motion picture persons will remember, what with the excitement between Mr. Hampton and Mrs. Cora Wilkenning, who was or was not Miss Pickford's agent, and Mr. John R. Freuler, then president of the Mutual Film Corporation, who had just captured Charles Chaplin with $670,000 a year, and now had a contract with Miss Pickford at $14,000 a week, all except the signature, and Mr. Zukor, bidding $7,000-and-a-percentage, and winning thereby. It is a long complicated story of which Mr. Hampton has told the longest version yet to be, or ever likely to be, published, aside from the legal record in the Wilkenning controversies.

Mr. Hampton has opened his book with a reference to "A Million and One Nights," which while appreciated by the author of that work, is deemed by him to infer a bearing and relation between it and Mr. Hampton's book which does not appear. "A Million and One Nights" was written with the assumption and belief that the motion picture was an integral development of the art of expression, making men and businesses as it grew. Mr. Hampton in his book sees the motion picture chiefly as an expression of mercantile forces, ruled by men making deals and contracts.

In an addenda pictorial section, the student of the motion picture will find an impressive collection of reproductions of old photographs and stills assembled by Mr. Hampton and presented for their historical value.

TERRY RAMSAYE

PHANTOM FAME or The Anatomy of Ballyhoo, by Harry Reichenbach in collaboration with David Freedman, with a foreword by Walter Winchell. Published by Simon & Schuster, New York.

Here is a glamorous piece of biography from out of the world of showmanship, with a poignant background filled with the tang of adventure and the bitter of vicissitude. It is much more importantly the story of the evolution of Harry Reichenbach and his creed and code, as a man, than it is the story that he set out to produce in collaboration with David Freedman.

The chapters that make the book a contribution begin with the tales of life in the little Maryland mining town and lead out to the gypsying of the open road in carnival season.

You may go into this book looking for the story of ballyhoo, but you will find in it the makings of the pungent philosophy which in turn made Harry Reichenbach a conspicuous figure as a wisecracker on Broadway, the home of the wisecrack. You will find there, too, just how and why it came that Harry should be such a spendthrift of life and of those things which the years of his later success brought him. It was always Saturday night or else the Fourth of July in Harry's life.

Mr. Reichenbach brought to the motion picture the exploitation methods and technique of the show that is here today and somewhere else tomorrow. His work and his memories of his work alike appear splashed with high color and imagination in their broader aspects and, examined in detail, much bedecked with whimsy. Facts never hampered Harry's spectacular exploitations, nor have they been permitted to seriously becloud any of the effects sought where his narrative touches upon the motion picture. It is a minor but regrettable circumstance that since the book had to be concluded while Mr. Reichenbach was in hospital in his last illness, it did lack the attention of one versed in motion picture terms and vernacular. It is unpleasant to the reader to discover such references as "Kintograms," the other references as "weeklies" to newsreels which never were weeklies. Pathe News is the only existing newsreel which was ever a weekly.

The publishers' expedient of presenting the volume with "a foreword by Walter Winchell," conspicuously displayed on the jacket, will appear to some as too consciously a matter of merchandising to properly reflect credit on the work. With all due respect to Mr. Winchell and his kind words, Harry Reichenbach needed neither introduction nor foreword, nor does his book.

Harry Reichenbach's book is a genuine contribution to the literature of the show world, and to Americana. It is happily so written that it can be fascinating entertainment to any intelligent layman.

CAMERA SECRETS OF HOLLYWOOD by Robert C. Bruce and Pat Dowling. 134 pages. Published by Camera Secrets Publishing Company, Metropolitan Studios, Hollywood, California.

Here is a pleasantly written and produced little book about photography, sound in its professional authority and simple enough for any layman. It is written for the picture making public and is profusely illustrated with excellent photographic material, accompanied by the essential camera data. It is in sum a photographic handbook much above the average of such documents in the dexterity of its treatment and the interest of its content.

CINEMATOGRAPHIC ANNUAL (Vol. II), 1931, of the American Society of Cinematographers: Hollywood. Published by the Society; Hal Hall, editor. 425 pp.

The motion picture is many-sided, of this one may now be sure if never until these last few years, during which, in a kind of sudden blossoming, it has unfolded itself as Big Business, as Fine Art, and as Pure Science. The publication under discussion is impressive as a manifestation of the scientific interest, and commands one to add its sponsors, the American Society of Cinematographers, to those other realizations of the new attitude—the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

This, the second A. S. C. year book, is nothing if not comprehensive. In it, cinematography aspires profoundly to a worthiness of its resounding name, reducing its art to the formulae of science, analyzing its science for a fuller realization of the potential motion picture art. Thirty-two articles, most of them in the laboratorician's best manner, with tables, graphs and formulae, form the greater portion of the book, giving it its imposing character. And there is something for everybody interested at all in the technics of motion picture making. At random, one notes such important contributions as:

Making a Fadeout by After-Treatment, by C. E. Ives, L. E. Muehler and J. I. Crabtree. . . . Lighting, by James Wong Howe. . . . Lloyd Jones' elaborate discussion of the theory of tone reproduction . . . an examination of transmission losses in lenses, by J. F. Westerberg. . . . Making Matte Shots, by Fred W. Sersen. . . . Gordon A. Chambers' discussion of process photography. . . . an able treatise on costuming by Max Ree.

In addition to the 32 articles, there are three departmental sections graphically describing equipment now being used by the studios, examining developments in motion picture machinery, and giving eminently practical information for daily use by the worker in cinematography—formulae for competition ?

Once upon a time when this was a younger country, two vessels met in the Atlantic down off Montauk, in the thick of a pea soup fog.

Up on the rail of the boat outward bound bounced a little Yankee skipper, trumpet in hand.

"What ship is that?" he spoke, in piping quaver.

Across the slate grey water came a bellowing response.

"The Great Beegum of Bengal, a hundred days out of Shanghai, laden with silks and spice, bound for the Port of New York. And what ship is that?"

The little skipper on the rail squeaked back:

"The bark Mary Ann of Nantucket —bound from New York to New Bedford, with a cargo of tinplate."

Then there was silence over the water.

developers, for example, a table of chemical solubilities, a chart showing picture sizes obtainable with projection lenses, tables of measurement, etc.

In addition, the editor has linked the craft directly with its ultimate purposes by inserting 64 pages of special enamel stock containing halftones exemplifying the cinematographer's art. The whole book is an expression of a motion picture science that measures fully up to the new importance and dignity of this many-sided industry.

GUN NOTCHES, by Captain Thomas H. Rynning, as told to Al Cohn and Joe Chisholm, with a foreword by Rupert Hughes. A biography of 332 pages. Published by Frederick A. Stokes Company.

In this work Mr. Cohn and Mr. Chisholm have done a spectacular job of word photography and a vital contribution to Americana in the recording of the life and adventures of the exciting Captain Rynning. It is a rare saga of the Southwest, filled with breathless action, and set down in words that clearly indicate a special skill born of cinemacraft. It is history of the living sort that somehow always eludes the textbooks and most of the formal writing of the historians.

ABRIDGED SCIENTIFIC PUBLICATIONS from the Kodak Research Laboratories, Vol. XIV (1930): Rochester, N. Y. Eastman Kodak Company. 295 pp.

Cinematography commands a major position among the photographic interests treated of in the Eastman Kodak Company's scientific publications of 1930, now gathered together in abridged form in a single volume. This compilation, representing papers detailing the results of tests and experiments conducted at the Kodak Research Laboratories, makes readily accessible a large group of reports in the science that have been published individually in a variety of technical journals in both this country and Europe.

The papers included in this volume reveal a broad enough range of interests to make the work of the Eastman research laboratories of much more immediate concern to the practical functions of the motion picture industry than mere photolytics. For example, Mr. Jones' discussion of Rectangle Proportions in Pictorial Composition, Mr. Crabtree's and Mr. Ives' A New Method of Blocking Out Splices in Sound Film, and the same authors' The Storage of Valuable Motion Picture Film. The paper on splicing presents a method that has been extensively promulgated, and which this past year was made accessible to the practical projectionist. The discussion of film storage describes Eastman's own system.

The paper on The Surface Treatment of Sound Film, by Messrs. Crabtree, Sandvik and Ives, was originally published in the Journal of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in 1930, yet faulty conditioning of positive stock was the subject of a vigorous protest introduced by Mr. Griffen, chairman of the practical projection committee, at the last convention of the Society, in October, 1931. Of course, Mr. Griffen's observations did not restrict culpability to inefficient lubrication, but they did include this factor.

Other papers of more or less direct interest to motion picture technics concern a quick test for determining the degree of exhaustion of developers, developer replenishing, testing for the presence of sodium thiosulphate in films, chrome alum stop baths (as a substitute particularly at high temperatures for potassium alum), determination of exposure durations, and effecting proportional transmission from negative to positive to preclude distortion.

All the papers here abridged may be obtained, the introduction announces, upon application.

TALKING PICTURES by Bernard Brown, B.Sc. (Eng) 302 pages, indexed. Published by Isaac Pitman & Sons, New York and London.

This volume has its elements of interest, in historical data and in a presentation of the superficial technology of sound. It is to be feared, however, that it tells much more than any layman wants to know and not nearly so much as any technician would require. The historical phases are rather incomplete. The work perhaps would find its best field among persons attached to the sound picture business, rather than persons technically concerned with it. Mr. Brown tells about as much as the manager of a motion picture theatre ought to know concerning the technology of recording. The work is clearly and well printed, with that curious sort of typographical starkness and unloveliness which is characteristic of many British books of the class.

Better Lights With Television Camera

Engineers of Radio Pictures are doing a good deal of experimental work with the television camera, which serves to provide diffused light over the subject pictured, and consequently is superior to the "flying spot" generally used in television pickup systems.

An interesting feature of television in transmitting motion picture film, pointed out by Radio engineers, is that the lighting of the subjects is almost natural. Halftone photographic portraits as televised from film are sometimes taken for direct pickup views, it is said.

John V. L. Hogan, whose television development work is undertaken at Station W2XR, is understood to have said that the backbone of syndicated television programs over the country will, in all probability, be through special motion picture films.

Publix Develops New Report Form For Circuit Managers

Publix has instituted a revised Managers' Weekly Theatre Report, which will go into effect January 1. The purpose of the revision is to further relieve, as much as possible, the managers' report work of a clerical nature.

Joseph A. Walsh of the theatre analysis department devised the new form, with the assistance of T. X. Jones of the accounting department. The new form was tested in a number of theatres over a period of weeks, in order to make certain no further changes were necessary.

Berlin Group Forms To Study Scientific Aspects of Films

A society for film science has been instituted in Berlin to serve as a center for all companies or individuals interested in scientific questions raised in connection with motion pictures.

The society aims at the inclusion of the film as a scientific problem in educational curricula and the informing of the government and the press of all scientific aspects of film production.

THE JUNIOR SHOW

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THERE is no longer any doubt about it; the JUNIOR SHOW is the thing! You, Mr. Exhibitor, may not be aware of the possibilities in this whole field, or may be among the growing number of those who know how true the statement is. Or, again, you may be among the fair-sized number of theatre managers who have experimented with the idea of selected shows for young people and found them to be a dismal failure. One disgruntled manager writes us: "Women's groups are like fireworks on the Fourth of July. They furnish sky rockets with a fine burst of stars, and then the night is blacker than before."

This subject has its pros and cons. A number of earnest, willing theatre men have tried to develop local support for special shows for children and has found community encouragement fizzled flash in the pan. But after a period of careful sifting and thoughtful weighing of results, I am in a position to declare positively that the odds are preponderantly in favor of the Junior Show.

At this turning point of the year we may safely take stock in the results achieved by the departments "School and Screen," "Your Public," "Selections" and "The Junior Show" which MOTION PICTURE HERALD inaugurated within the past year in an attempt to coordinate the aims of the organized groups of the nation with the activities of the theatre men who were willing to develop better programs in their theatres. In the past twelve months we have had an overwhelming flood of letters from club groups in every state. Letter from the theatre men have been in equal proportion. In the large number of instances we have found a sense of bewilderment. Methods of procedure have not been clear; understanding and underlying purposes have not been mutually understood. In many instances the attempts for community activity for better pictures have produced static rather than wave length. In a great many other cases harmony has reigned, and where it has, we have results as astonishing as those recorded by Robert G. Hesseldenz, the manager of Bair's Uptown and Ritz theatres in Indianapolis. He began a campaign to build up child patronage. He made his contacts intelligently and carefully. He developed a code of ethics for children's shows.

A Lesson in Evidence

The letter from Mr. Hesseldenz is well worth reprinting in full, for it is a lesson in consistent performance. It tells the optimistic story of accomplishment, not the possibilities of experiment. It is a letter for theatre managers interested in this whole project to read with a degree of thoughtful consideration.

Rita C. McGoldrick,
Junior Show Department,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
1790 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Dear Mrs. McGoldrick:

Your surprise telegram arrived just when the Uptown was entertaining over 900 children at our annual Photoplay Indorsers Potato Matinee—you know, the admission price is an article of food—and, pardon the mention, the checkup shows that we netted 45 bushels of food, allowing 30 cans to the bushel. This is our record Potato Matinee, and strange, too, this being our hardest year in ages.

'Sfunny, Mrs. McGoldrick, the writer intended writing to you quite some time back with the idea in mind of complimenting you on your work in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The information one is able to learn from your articles should go a long way towards keeping an exhibitor posted on what he might show on the days on which he expects the kiddies. But even then, we find ourselves licked and find that we can't have the pictures you recommend because of our buying or booking arrangement. It's tough when the Film Co. compels you to show an adult picture, bought on percentage, on your children's matinee or night. Thank goodness, that happens only once in a while, but no good comes of it.

When I opened the Uptown theatre, now owned by Mr. R. R. Bair, I started a campaign to build up a big child patronage. The big job was to sell the parents on the idea that their children would be taken care of in a personal way while attending our matinees, and that instead of playing perhaps in the dangerous streets, their darlings could be checked at the Uptown where they would be entertained in a supervised manner and could be called for a couple of happy hours later. I promised the parents (by word of mouth and in my ads) that I would give the children my personal attention, and in six years I have never been off the floor during the children's matinees. My ushers and I follow the law made by me that:

Every child must be recognized and treated as a potential patron.

More time must be taken to explain the why and wherefore to a child than to the average adult.

No matter what a child wants, needs, or has lost, that individual case must be handled with parental consideration.

Never must a child be made to feel cheap before its other playmates, never any razzing, etc.

When a child violates a house rule, he is brought back to me for correction, and he returns to his seat calling us his pals. A child-patron's honesty must never be questioned but let him know that his word is good at our theatre. To this date no child has ever been threatened in our theatre.

Now our picture policy has always included the following on Children's Matinees:

Feature, Western or other action or comedy picture.

Serial, Western preferred.

Comedy, and comedy without the smut.

Cartoon, Mickey Mouse and Fable, most popular.

News.

For six years we have held a drawing each Saturday matinee and the winner is presented with a Tip-Top wristwatch and band. We always start a serial with a novelty for each child. We never start a serial with a free show. On Christmas matinee we give a Merry Christmas pass to each child. Beats candy by far. A great stunt to make the children "repeaters" which has gone over great for us is to buy about 5,000 flag-buttons, each with a number on it. Give each child a button each Saturday matinee and hold a drawing at the end of the first show each Saturday. Give a pass to each child holding the button with the number drawn. I forgot to mention that buttons should be numbered up to 100. The children like the buttons because of the attractiveness of colored flags and the pass gives the added kick.

Now that you know how we try for the patronage of children, you no doubt will want to know if we have met with success. Understand that we are not bragging and we realize that we may be topped by many other theatres, but during 1930 we averaged over 1400 paid children (under 12 years) 15 cents per week, the most in one day, 1251, and the most on one picture, 1497. Of course, it is no effort to get a crowd of children once in a while but the weekly average is what counts. This year's child business will not fall much below that of 1930.

The important thing is that the children come to the theatre for pleasure and the less grief they experience the more fun they'll have and the more often they will want to attend.

Trusting that I have not taken up too much of your valuable time and extending you the Season's Greetings, permit me to remain,

Sincerely yours,
(signed) ROBERT G. HESSELDENZ,
Manager, Bair's Uptown and Ritz.

The Problem Side

A fair example of the discouragements that some managers have to face when they first attempt the plowing and fertilizing of this new field of enterprise has come to us in a letter telling something of a bitter story. For that reason it may be better, in this instance, to withhold the names. The exhibitor writing the complaint owns a theatre in a medium size town in the Southwest. He has a college education. He had identified himself in local affairs, had served as a public official and consequently had a keener appreciation of the value of public opinion and group cooperation than most theatre managers.

He was approached by a local group of women, leaders in the women's organizations in the town, who convinced him that they were interested in promoting better motion pictures for their community. First, they suggested children's matinees, which, from his experience, he discouraged. But at their suggestion of a Family Night program of selected pictures for Friday nights he extended the complete co-operation of his theatre's facilities, even going so far as to purchase special pictures which they had requested and for which he had not contracted. This necessitated a higher price than he would have paid were he buying a group of pictures. They assured him that they would support the family night pictures that they had themselves selected and would insure a large attendance of local people who were interested in pictures of a higher moral quality.

After a few weeks of feeble box office returns the exhibitor took the trouble to stand in the lobby of his theatre to determine whether or not any of the leaders of these public groups were actually giving their support to the project. On three successive Friday nights he learned by personal observation that none of the committee attended the special programs that they had selected.

These are the heartbreaking discouragements. In this instance one can lay the blame directly upon one leader who failed. A little patience, a little sifting and some definitely constructive building overcomes this hazard:

The Question's Other Side

The Massachusetts Civic League, Children's Welfare Committee, organized an active group to study motion pictures as applied to youth. The Massachusetts Civic League, through which this group will work, has included the motion picture managers as active members. MOTION PICTURE HERALD's Junior Show literature was presented at the first meeting. A committee was nominated to develop community responsibility for the support of the best pictures offered currently. Each member reported at the first meeting an excellent spirit of cooperation from all local managers.

At the meeting, one of the motion picture managers presented a point which had to be recognized, namely, that there will be inevitably motion pictures, plays and novels which are not for the young—and by "young" he specified those under 14 years of age. With a clear understanding of the type of entertainment suitable for juveniles, the Council agreed to arouse community responsibility and support of proper programs for young people; and intelligent adult interest in the finer pictures presented for the mature minds. This group put upon the record that they were in sympathy with the theatre manager and wished to support him; that the producers and not the exhibitors or managers of theatres are responsible for the character of motion pictures which may not be endorsed.

ALADDIN THEATRE CORPORATION
Denver, Colorado.
Harry E. Huffman, President and Treasurer.

The Aladdin Theatre Corporation of Denver operates five theatres, the Tabor and America downtown in the heart of the city, the Aladdin in a very fine residential section, the Bide-A-Wee in a poorer section, and the Blue Bird in an outlying residential section, but a very good district.

At the Blue Bird on Saturday afternoons they give a children's matinee showing pictures suitable for children. Few, if any, adults attend this performance. This has been found a very satisfactory arrangement and a large attendance is usual.

Friday night at this same theatre is "Family Night," when pictures suitable for both adults and children are shown. These nights, too, are very popular and the people in the neighborhood have come to look forward to the occasion when the entire family may be assured of a good clean piece of entertainment.

THE VALMAR THEATRE
THE FOX VIRGINIA
Vallejo, California

The club women of this small city in California have found the managers of their two theatres in cordial accord with their eager interest to have suitable pictures shown for their juveniles. The managers requested the club women to select from the monthly reviews of endorsed pictures of national organizations those pictures they would like most to have shown in Vallejo. From the lists of selected pictures published by the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the D. A. R., the Parent Teacher Association, the Women's University Club and the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, this group makes its final selections. When the theatre men announce the pictures they will book, the club women send typed notices to all local schools, club groups and prominent citizens. They have learned that the interest of the parents and the teachers is definitely effectual upon the attendance of the children. The whole activity has meant a pleasant relationship between the theatre men and the prominent people in their locality, and a definitely increased audience.

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION
Office of the Treasurer, Jack Cohn
New York City.
MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

Your articles on "The Junior Show" hit the nail on the head so squarely that I felt compelled to dictate the attached.

As the distributors of "Mickey Mouse," we have been in an unusually advantageous position to see what could be accomplished by exhibitors who make a bid for juvenile patronage.

We are about to inaugurate the Buck Jones Rangers Club for Boys and Girls because of our desire to further help showmen in this direction and I sincerely trust you find the attached in line with the thing you are now doing.

The Mickey Mouse Clubs

In a further clever analysis of the possibilities of the Junior Show, Jack Cohn contributes the following:

"The success which has been attained by the Mickey Mouse idea throughout the country proved the value of cultivating juvenile patronage. Many of the Mickey Mouse Clubs have memberships of two thousand or more, and the exhibitors who have exploited them play to a Saturday morning patronage of fifteen hundred to two thousand children, their greatest problem being to accommodate all the members who want to attend each show. At ten cents a head, which is the usual admission price, the box office represents a very respectable total. But more important than this is the friendly feeling generated in the parents, who, having investigated the types of shows presented, feel grateful towards these theatre owners for the wholesome and beneficial entertainment afforded their children.

"Encouraged by the rapid growth of the Mickey Mouse Club movement, Columbia is about to inaugurate the Buck Jones Rangers Club for boys and girls, which will present details to meet the average child's eagerness to join a club.

"With the coming of the talking film, action was subordinated to dialogue, with the result the juvenile trade reached the vanishing point, and exhibitors raised the cry: 'Give us pictures that will bring the children back to our theatres.'

"'The Junior Show,' inaugurated by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, is of special interest and value to the whole industry. My own reaction towards this new feature is that it alone is worth the subscription price because it points out to theatre owners the manner in which live-wire showmen are able to add to their gross receipts every week through the development of juvenile patronage.

"Columbia has long been aware of the box-office value of children's shows, not merely from the standpoint of the immediate returns from these morning performances, but also because of the good will created by them.

"Columbia is not only in favor of 'The Junior Show' idea, but will do everything within its power to further its work."

Texas Junior Shows

Texas is a highly organized territory with active club work for better pictures going on in every city. The Mickey Mouse Clubs have been particularly popular. At these club meetings held on Saturday mornings, especially selected subjects, accompanied by a "Mickey Mouse" cartoon, are presented to the children. At the Texas, a suburban theatre in Oak Cliff, a prominent district outside of Dallas, an average Saturday morning attendance of twelve hundred children is an outstanding accomplishment. The Arcadia initiates its club January 9th, with new "Junior Show" programs opening in January in the following additional suburban theatres: The Oak Law, the Varsity and the Haskell. These motion picture houses are widely scattered over the city and every neighborhood has access to one of them. Splendid cooperation has been given to this whole movement by the local Council of Mothers and Teachers and by groups of club women.

San Diego's Success

With local club women and Parent Teacher Association members chaperoning, several neighborhood theatres in San Diego, Cal., are accomplishsing astonishing success with Saturday afternoon "Junior Shows." In this territory an active cooperation has been worked up with the neighborhood merchants who gladly donate candy, prizes, and even ice cream and cake to the children. In San Diego, the "Junior Show" becomes something of a function. Individual children are invited to sing, the theatres have community choruses and a number of exciting contests have been staged that have become outstanding news items. Within the past year one or more of the theatres have announced costume competition, kite races, Yo Yo contests, competitions with the cross bow, and dog shows. The women's groups, cooperating enthusiastically with the theatre men, believe that this encourages child self expression, clean organized play and is of distinct educational advantage. It is a common thing for these theatres to have a child attendance of more than a thousand at their "Junior Show."

There have been, of course, many problems for both managers and chaperones. They have endeavored to put an end to "petting," have been alert to detect any immoral advances made toward children by adults and degenerates, have had to deal with theft, falsehood and rowdyism. It has been their endeavor to uphold good citizenship and toward this end they have invited speakers to address the children on patriotism and safety. While much has been accomplished, it is but the beginning of a strong movement to provide clean, instructive and supervised entertainment for juniors.

Mrs. Frank W. Lane, president of the Better Films Conference of San Diego, writes:

"We are grateful to MOTION PICTURE HERALD for this whole information on 'The Junior Show' and deeply appreciate your literature. We women of the West like to know what the women of the East and the Middlewest are doing in order that we may all pull together 'to make the best pictures pay best.'" program each Friday in local motion picture theatres may result from a recent conference between Mrs. Larry Akers and Mrs. Marguerite H. Brandeau of the Nineteenth Century Club and M. A. Lightman, president of the Malco Theatres.

At the convention of the MPTOA, representing the exhibitors of Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi, the club women were invited to express their viewpoints on the motion picture industry in general and the problem of censorship.

This meeting was proposed by M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA. He told the club women that the Friday Family Night, featuring special pictures of appeal to children, would be welcomed by exhibitors if supported by the public. Mrs. Akers, chairman of the child psychology department of the club, and Mrs. Brandeau met with Mr. Lightman to consider a resumption of the morning pictures for children which have been sponsored by the club in the past.

The family night idea was advocated by the Parent-Teacher Association and other leaders at the open meeting.

Wilmer & Vincent Theatres
Norfolk, Virginia
Pierre Baulogne, Manager

"The Norfolk Theatre is feeling its way. The manager writes:

"I am a faithful reader of your department in Motion Picture Herald and am very desirous of subscribing to 'School and Screen,' a monthly service for schools and theatre men.

"We have a birthday club at the Norva which, instead of being tied up with the newspapers, is tied up with the local radio station. It is a very successful club, but we have plans to make it still more effective if we can get the backing of the Parent-Teacher Associations and some of the other women's clubs. We welcome your help."

Audience Building

There is no better example that we know of in the potentialities of audience building than some of the reports on Junior Show possibilities demonstrate. The California Congress of Parents and Teachers, Fourteenth District, Lake Mendocino, Sonoma, Cal., in a simple letter, typical of hundreds written by similar groups working earnestly and constructively in their localities, says.

"Please send us many more copies of your 'Junior Show.' We are progressing in our county for Junior Matinees and have covered all theatres. Now we are prepared to branch out to the entire district. We will soon have a list of a hundred theatres to send to you, as well as a list of managers, schools and clubs. The 'Junior Show' is a success."

From the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs a letter from Mrs. Fred B. Cross bears the same message. She writes:

"'School and Screen' and 'The Junior Show' are invaluable. They were used at our council meeting. We have started new councils in nearby towns, representatives from which sit in with us for information and help with their problems. Northampton, which is a child of ours, has just organized. It has in itself twenty-two organizations composed of men and women. This demonstrates the possibilities in the State of Massachusetts."

The activities of this Motion Picture Council have received wide publicity in the local press and won the interest of churchmen, prominent citizens and an active committee of motion picture exhibitors.

How a Boys' Club Helps

In a recent issue of the Journal of Education, Robert C. Colangelo, Director of Guidance, Worcester, Mass., expresses his viewpoint of the 'Junior Show.' He says:

"Once a week every boy is given an opportunity to enjoy up-to-date motion pictures, which have both entertaining and educational values. At these gatherings the older boys act as monitors, and one from among the group, with more musical ability than the rest, leads the assembly in singing. Quite often the Boys' Club Orchestra—organized in connection with the music classes—gives concerts, and plays popular and classical pieces."

Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs
Department of Education, Division of Motion Pictures
Cincinnati, Ohio

Ohio is one of the most highly organized states in motion picture activities, boasting actually 522 motion picture chairmen throughout the state. It is not unusual in Ohio to have a children's matinee rolling up an attendance of 1800 to 2,000 children, an actual number registered recently at "Junior Show" programs for "Skippy" and "Father and Son"—which proves the interesting fact that fine pictures do not have to be absolutely new to win large audiences. The Ohio chairman of motion pictures writes us:

"We wish to receive all Motion Picture Herald reprints. We have four new clubs in Ravenna, Ohio, working for good films. We are planning to form these groups into a new Motion Picture Council. The Middletown Federation is considering a similar plan."

And so it goes—and grows!

RITA C. McGOLDRICK BELIEVES:

1. That well exploited Junior Shows and Junior Motion Picture Clubs are a community success and a box office gold mine.
2. That cooperation with leaders in the community is the important element, the organized local women's clubs being the basic factor for Junior Show success.
3. That the proper handling of entertainment for young people is the safest antidote for censorship.

A glance at the bulk of letters and clippings that have brought us news of "Junior Show" activities in the theatres all over the land during the current holidays tells a complete story in itself. In one city after another, and in hundreds of theatres, we find instances of a fine community spirit expressing itself through the theatres in behalf of the unemployed, the suffering poor, and children in hospitals. We have had no finer instances of the dignified place the theatre may hold in the heart of a community than in these surprising Christmas records, which have all been carried as headline items by prominent newspapers.

Furchgott's Florida Theatre
Jacksonville, Florida
Guy Kenimer, Manager

More than three thousand Jacksonville children crowded the Florida theatre for its annual Christmas party, with hundreds unable to gain admission. After a greeting by the mayor the children saw "Heroes of the Flames" and "Captain of the Guard." A party of this kind is a regular feature given free to the children at Christmas and at Easter time.

The Strand Theatre
Lansing, Michigan

Over two thousand youngsters, each bearing a toy, stormed the doors of the Strand theatre for the first of a series of three benefit shows for the Red Stocking Club. The price of admission was one old or new toy in good condition and the receipts of the first show constituted three truckloads of playthings. Under the supervision of Sgt. Harry B. Snyder, school safety officer of the police department, the children were kept in line. Trucks furnished by the State Journal and those of the Lansing Ice and Fuel Company were backed up to the theatre, and as the children passed along they handed in their toys and moved into the show. The children saw "Skippy" and received it enthusiastically. In this enterprise the theatre was supported by the active cooperation of banks, stores, club groups and all important city agencies.

Warner Brothers Theatre
Memphis, Tennessee

In this instance Warner Brothers called it a Happiness Party. Again the price of admission was an old or a new toy with special emphasis placed on the new toy. The Memphis Firemen agreed to take over and rebuild the old ones to make them serviceable.

The lesson is plain to read. From this casual cross-section of correspondence and newspaper reports it is evident beyond further doubt that the organization of children in the neighborhood, through the means of the Junior Show, is an invaluable service to the community to the theatre man and to the whole motion picture industry.

Motion Picture Herald is interested in helping exhibitors and club women toward a better understanding of this whole project. Plans and details will be furnished to those groups who are newly organizing committees for Junior Shows, and all the facilities of this department will be placed at the disposal of the exhibitor interested in this activity as a new project.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Is Advertising & Exploitation Necessary?

THAT'S the title of a series which starts in next week's issue of the Round Table section. And it is one of the most interesting series ever carried on our pages.

It was no easy task to frame a request to a selected group of representative showmen and advertising men for articles dealing with the necessity of advertising and exploitation in theatres where the best product is shown. Many of them thought the suggestion was a gag and in return they aired their opinions accordingly; but just the same they were "shooting right up our alley."

How many times have you heard the remark, "No wonder that theatre is doing a big business, look at the pictures they are running." Or, "That house doesn't have to advertise; with the best product available they can sit back and watch the crowds lined up at their box office."

We've heard those expressions time and again and we've wondered just how true they were. Is it possible that any theatre playing the best selected product of all the producers could get by without any advertising or exploitation? Are we to assume that because a theatre gets good product, and does a good consistent business that they don't have to spend any money on show-selling ideas? That would be rather hard to believe, yet, there are many who really believe it.

In the series, "Is Advertising and Exploitation Necessary," we merely wanted to bring out the opinions of a widely selected group who can tackle the question from different angles so as to bring out the best of the argument. We believe we succeeded in so doing and when you start to follow this series with the first article, written by Gabe S. Yorke, director of advertising and publicity for the Fox Film Corporation and Fox Theatres, you will be reading some mighty smart dope on this all-important subject.

It starts next week. Watch for it; read every article; think them over carefully and then sit down and write us your own opinion of this unusual question. It's an open discussion and like all other matters discussed on the Club pages, is wide open for any member or reader.

We wonder how many showmen will mount the ladder during the new year. How many will be sitting up among the leaders when they play the Swan Song for '32.

During '31 we've watched quite a few of the boys carve niches for themselves in the mythical Hall of Fame. And quite a few others achieved national recognition for the fine work they were doing in their quiet, but efficient, manner. Here are just a few:

Jameyson of Fox Midwesco showed the way with some marvelous newspaper advertising last year and is now in charge of the entire division for advertising and exploitation. Well deserved, sez we, and every man in the division agrees.

Nat Holt engineered some unusually fine show-selling out in Wichita and as a result attracted plenty of attention. He rates high with his superiors and, mark our words, you'll hear of his climbing higher too.

"Little Dick" Moss headed west from an assistant manager's berth with Loew and tied his future to H. B. Franklin's ship. He's now handling one of H. B.'s flagships in L. A. A "kid" with showmanship born in him, and how.

Then there's Jack Jackson, publicity chief for the Publix Pennsy houses up in the coal regions and a man whose greatest asset is his ability to get the house managers working right with him a hundred per cent.

C. J. Latta climbed from house manager in New Haven to a Zone Executive position in Cleveland with the Warner Brothers Theatres. And he deserves everything he won for himself. A genuine showman and a real leader of men.

Eddie Hitchcock proved in '31 that a theatre publicity man could hold a big job with one of the major companies. His ad campaigns for United Artists' new product were a source of joy to hundreds of showmen who had no ad artist on the payroll. Eddie will climb still further in '32.

Walter Morris earned the respect and admiration of his bosses when he took hold of a "jumping-off" house and ran it into the black. Then he proved that he was big enough to handle a district; now he's going to prove that he can take charge of a city manager's spot and make it both profitable and interesting.

We could use up every page in our section if we expected to mention "just a few" of the boys who deserve mentioning. But since that's an impossibility we'll have to cut this one short and hope to get the chance of telling a brief bit about some of the many others before long.

A Happy New Year? Sure! But it's really up to yourself to make it happy. Do your stuff and show show business that you're the man they're looking for. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

We're all wondering what's coming out of the hat for the year of 1932. And we are also wondering what YOU would give to know....!

Keep your eye on the magician and maybe the eye will prove quicker than the hand.

HOROWITZ WORKED A FINE CO-OP TO PLUG A FOOTBALL PICTURE

The aftermath of the football season continues, this time by the way of a report explaining how Theodore M. Horowitz, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Peekskill, N. Y., put over "Spirit of Notre Dame."

Twelve merchants contributed to the promotion of a co-operative page of ads in a local newspaper, each ad containing individual photos of players on the Notre Dame team. Readers were invited to identify their positions on the team and share in the guest tickets offered by the theatre. The merchants also donated other articles of merchandise. Participants in the tie-up also carried their photo of the player in show windows, along with stills and other copy pertaining to picture.

The theatre lobby was decorated with a 5 x 7 foot calendar with stills of the Notre Dame players breaking through the playdates. This was augmented by a walking bally of a man 5 feet high and weighing over 200 pounds. He was dressed in red helmet, red jersey, black number, khaki pants, red stockings and black shoes. Each night, during run of picture, was made a School Night, coach, team, cheer leaders, band or orchestra all contributing to collegiate atmosphere. Pennants, etc., of the respective schools were hung in the lobby for these occasions.

Too bad we couldn't have received this information a little earlier in the year, but it's better late than never. At any rate, members can file the above away for use another time, or perhaps adapt it to some other film or sport before next year rolls around. It worked well for Horowitz and we're glad to have the opportunity to set it down in print.

THAMES USED SMALL AUTO PAINTED WITH TITLE TO SELL FILM

A diminutive Austin auto was recently used by J. F. Thames, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Greenwood, Miss., to exploit "Sob Sister." The title of the picture was painted on every available inch of space and the public was invited to name the number of times the title appeared and participate in guest tickets.

Thames' stunt has been successfully used any number of times by several showmanmembers of this Club to exploit a variety of pictures. If an Austin isn't available, see if you can't dig up one of those old "Model T's."

HENRY HERR MAKING NIFTY DISPLAYS IN MILWAUKEE THEATRES

Thanks to Harold Janecky, former manager of the Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, and now in charge of the Lynbrook Theatre, Lynbrook, L. I., N. Y., we are able to present an excellent example of work being turned out by J. Henry Herr and his associates in the Warner Sign Shop of Milwaukee, largest shop of its kind in the state.

When the shadow box shown in the accompanying photo below was constructed the modernistic lobby of the Warner Theatre in Milwaukee was kept in mind, as you will note that the entire scheme follows this trend. The grill was cut from beaver board which had been covered with gold paper. Tinted muslin backs up the grill. Double sockets, to insure good lighting effect, were arranged at regular intervals around the box. The steps at the base of the box have black velour paper risers and silver paper tops. On each side of the box proper, note the three tapering tubes. These were covered alternately with gold and silver paper and each carries a regular stock still at the top, illuminated by an enclosed lamp. Gold, silver and black velour paper and black diamondtine were the only decorative mediums used in this display. The box is arranged to take care of three-sheet posters or three-sheet transparencies; however, the latter have been found the most effective.

Walter Huston, the character in this photo, was done in purples, violets and blues with yellow highlights. The background runs around orange to dark red. The letters were done in orange-greens and light blues, giving the entire display a most "ritzy" effect; in fact, the box harmonized perfectly with its surroundings.

Working with Herr, who is familiarly known as "Pop," are his assistants, Sherburn Youngbeck and Eddie Edelman, all of whom we are mighty glad to meet. Now that Janecky is no longer out in Milwaukee, it is to be hoped that some enthusiastic member of this sign shop will find the time to submit other interesting specimens of the fine work that is being turned out, for we know that many of our members will be able to cash in on the suggestions. Surely, the display described above will make a splendid one for any theatre.

ORGANIST WAS BUILT UP TO A BIG FEATURE BY MISS JEAN LA ROE

Wherever the question of engaging an organist is under consideration these days, a slant on what is taking place at the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, should be of interest. The Grand is one of J. Real Neth's theatres, under the publicity supervision of Jean La Roe.

Several weeks ago this theatre engaged a feature organist and ever since this event took place her name has consistently appeared in the daily newspapers. At least a third of space advertising the Grand carries her photo, caption and copy relating to her specialty. In addition, she has been consistently plugged through readers on the amusement and music pages, with the result that she is one of the leading attractions at this house.

The above is related mainly to convey the impression that Miss Jean went out to sell this organist just as any good publicity man or woman would undertake to sell a picture or some other attraction. In one of the larger boxes in the amusement section of the paper, we note that this particular organist is working some kind of a stunt from her console with the aid of a microphone. We hope Miss La Roe will let the Club know more about it.

NEWSPAPER JARGON FORMED IDEA USED BY A. CUNNINGHAM

Newspaper terms and press-room language formed the idea for a recent stunt that secured a lot of free publicity on "Five Star Final" for A. Cunningham, manager of the Strand Theatre, Shreveport, La.

One of the local papers sponsored the gag and gave generous advance mention to the picture. Names of those who supplied the best definitions to the terms were published in the paper. Further publicity was obtained by sending invitations to journalism classes of a local school.

Operation of a newspaper plant and the strange jargon that passes between newspaper employees during the issue of each edition, is interesting to the general public. Cunningham cashed in on the idea and he's passing it along to the rest of the gang.

GEORGE CAMPAIGNED TWO CUPS AS AWARD TO SCHOOL ATHLETES

At the conclusion of this year's football season, Douglas George, manager of the Columbus Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, pulled a stunt that acted as both builder of good will and as a smart business stroke.

Early in the season George promoted two handsome cups to be awarded at the close of the season to the most valuable players on the high school elevens in the county. The campaign ran six weeks, occasioning a heap of discussion and much heated argument. This was all heightened by announcements placed on the school bulletin boards and by newspapers.

The final awards were made at the Columbus Theatre, the mayor of Portsmouth making the presentation speech to the two winners. The theatre was jammed when the awards were made and there is no question that the theatre's part in the affair has made it solid with all the high school boys

Too late to use George's cup stunt now, but it's a good one to tuck away in the file for next season, or perhaps adapt to some popular Winter sport in your town. Now that holiday activities have taken the limelight from football, we'll be awaiting word from Doug as to what he has done along that line.

SMITH TO CHICAGO!

Edward A. Smith has been appointed district manager of Chicago's South Side Thetres, including the Tivoli, Maryland, Tower, Regal and the New Southside. He was formerly city manager for Publix in Los Angeles, Cal. L. H. Dally will remain in charge of the downtown theatres.

Vic Gauntlett's Ads!

Elsewhere in this week's Club pages we are carrying an interesting short article from Vic Gauntlett on the question of Good and Bad Publicity. Here we offer a few samples of Vic's own efforts and creations of what we consider "good" advertising.

Gauntlett, an advertising and publicity director of long experience has few equals in this chosen field. His many years of handling theatre publicity and advertising certainly qualifies him to be authority on this much discussed subject. But being a rather reticent gentleman, we are mighty well pleased when he finds the time to contribute to our section.

These particular ads are of the "splurge" type. A smash campaign to back up an attraction warranting such treatment. And when Vic gets behind a picture, you can lay your last dollar that it will get every advertising break it deserves. If it dies it's certainly no fault of his.

"Contrast" seems to be the theme of his ads reproduced here. Note the excellent division of white and black spaces. Note how the layout attracts the eye and makes it easy to read regardless of how much or how little text he incorporates into his advertising. That's an achievement in any man's theatre and no question about the pulling power of such fine advertising.

There are many ad men in the Northwest who find Gauntlett a good man to watch. His ads are always carefully inspected and many's the time they were used as models for other ad men to follow. Now, through the medium of the Club pages, other advertising theatre men will get the same opportunity of cashing in on the ideas and ability of one of the leaders in this field.

In our forthcoming series on "Is Advertising and Exploitation Necessary," Vic Gauntlett is one of the contributors. We feel certain that you will want to read his views on that subject, too. Watch for it.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

We are assured that this was an actual happening in a midwest theatre. Whether it is or not is of minor importance. The funny slant is the patron's preference for the cartoon rather than any of the wholesale feature bill being offered. Artist Guy Jones has pictured this one in great style. All those in favor of double, triple or quadruple features will please jump in the river.

ROSENBERG PRINTED UNIQUE BOOKLET TO PUSH CURRENT FILM

Something a bit out-of-the-ordinary in advertising bookiets was used by Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Calif., for exploitation of "Blonde Crazy." It clicked for him and so we're passing along a brief description to other Club members.

It consisted of two sheets about 4 x 5 inches, doubled so as to make an eight-page booklet. The front cover was captioned "Hello, Hun-n-e-y!" Then a cut of Cagney in bell-hop costume, with caption, "He'd walk a mile for a blonde and back again for another." The next page was headed, "James Cagney—as a bell hop who knows the best Room Numbers." Underneath a cut made from still, showing Cagney and occupant of room standing by table holding bottles, tray, etc. The next page was captioned "He knows his blondes! If his eyes deceive him his lips can tell—they satisfy!" Underneath, another still cut showing star seated at table in dance scene, with barebacked women all around. Next page was headed "Women Are Going Wild! Jimmy's in town . . . and he's Cur-a-a-az-y for Blondes." Another cut shows two blondes pulling each other's hair. The next page is headed "Help Wanted—Ring for Jimmy, in bell-hop costume with caption. . . . Another cut shows blonde in bathtub, reaching for cake of soap. And so on and so on with two more captions and two more cuts with appropriately worded copy.

Glassine envelopes containing candy kisses with imprinted copy reading "Here's a Kiss for You from James Cagney and Joan Blondell in Blonde Crazy," theatre and playdates, were also used, but we must hand it to the attractive little booklet, distributed in offices and department stores, for bringing forth a lot of favorable comment. It hit the right key at the box office and, of course, that's what counted. We're sorry we cannot reproduce the booklet, but that's out of the question.

However, if you wish to get out something a little different in the way of folders we can heartily endorse Rosenberg's. The chief portion of the expense would be in making the necessary cuts from your stock stills, but the finished article would, we believe, more than repay for the additional expense. Shoot along some more stuff of this calibre, Jack, and please accept our congratulations for turning out a neat job.

LES PATTERSON AND RALPH ALLAN SOUGHT HELP FROM VETERAN

Now that a company has revived the "Big Parade" in sound, it may pay Club members to work the same stunt that proved beneficial to Manager Ralph Allan and Les Patterson, of the Mission Theatre, San Jose, Calif.

When it was learned that a local member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars had a colorful war record, these two showmen arranged for an interview with him in a local newspaper.

Additional activities included a parade of the High School Band, which gave a musical demonstration in front of the theatre; red flare illumination in front of theatre on night National Guardsmen were guests; rendition of medley of hits by organist, along with atmospheric slides, and a Big Parade memory test, details of which are lacking at this writing. We judge this had to do with facts pertaining to the original issue of picture.

Most every town has its hero of the late war and if he can be induced to grant an interview the stunt ought to lend itself admirably to an occasion such as outlined above. Other activities followed by showmen Allan and Patterson on behalf of this picture are also interesting.

SHORT SUBJECTS ARE GIVEN GOOD BREAK IN SEATTLE THEATRE AD

The boys out in Seattle, Wash., who direct the destinies of the Jensen and Von Herberg theatres are not slighting the short subjects, according to an ad we have before us. On account of it being a two-color affair, it will not warrant reproduction, but we'll go on record in stating that a whole half page ad is equally divided between a Ken Maynard western and the short program. A Harry Gribbon comedy heads the latter, with mention also given to a Terry-toon, Snapshots and the Newsreel.

Like other outfits, this one believes in plugging good short subjects when the occasion so warrants, and we have had many instances to observe that this practice has been favorably reflected at the box-office. Some of the boys out in the J. & V. H. gang have been a little remiss recently concerning contributions to this department. We would like to hear more often from them.

NEW MEMBER JIMMY PEPPER SENDS TWO GAGS FROM ALABAMA

Along with an application for membership in this Club sent by Jimmy Pepper, manager of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., came word of a newspaper gag he recently used which gained a lot of word-of-mouth publicity and only set the house back a matter of six passes.

He tied up with one of the local papers for the publishing of photos of Montgomerians who were caught by a reporter in the act of smiling. Three of these, with names, were published each day and a trip to the newspaper plant netted each a pair of passes while the stunt was used. The paper carried a good-sized box in explanation of the offer.

We are also publishing a photo of the front Pepper had constructed when showing "Sidewalks of New York." Note that the entrance to lobby is closed with imitation wall-front, with exception of the two doorways headed, "Sidewalk Inn." A cut-out of Keaton, on the loop, was placed between the two doors.

That's the spirit, Jimmy, let the rest of the gang know what you are doing. You are starting off with the right foot for a new member and we hope you'll keep up the good work. We see you are well acquainted up at the "Journal" office. Is old man Miller still on the job? Next time you get around to the Advertiser, give Bob Phelps the writer's best regards if he's still around. Tell him the Yank who used to see that paper was hauled on time for his old rag is now behind the keys. You'll have him guessing on this one.

HAMPTON USING MENU CARDS AS MEANS OF TRIMMING ADV. COST

Restaurant menus are fast supplanting heralds down in Gulfport, Miss., where Robert Hampton manages the Paramount Theatre. The stunt, as worked by this enterprising showman, has been the means of cutting out an item of advertising expense without doing away with its value.

A prominent drug store prints the theatre programs daily on the menus. These are distributed daily to offices and stores and placed in cars parked in the business district. The distribution takes place every morning. A restaurant in a hotel also uses the top of their menus to announce name of theatre and title of current picture.

Another stunt recently used by Hampton in connection with "Showboat Minstrels" proved to be an excellent means of ballyhooing the attraction. He secured the services of an ex-actor who had formerly worked in blackface and he and another man similarly made-up made the rounds of the streets in the business district during afternoon and evening. Both men carried an old suit case lettered, "We're on our way to the Paramount Theatre to see Showboat Minstrels."

A special painted display board was also placed in the lobby and foyer one week prior to playdates. This portrayed hand-painted cut-out figures of two negroes, one holding a banjo cut-out and mounted about four inches away from the face of the display, while their supposed shadows were painted on the background of the display board. Title and selling copy were painted on the top of the board, along with stills in cut-out frames covered with colored tinfoil.

It would appear that Hampton's change-over from regular heralds to menus might be an excellent move, particularly in localities where extensive use of the herald has allowed this advertising medium to become stale. And then it is not to be overlooked that the tie-ups are taking care of the important items of printing and distribution. We'll be on the lookout for more of this Club member's costless ideas.

FANNING CASHED IN WITH A GOOD STUNT FOR FOOTBALL GAME

With the co-operation of the sports editor of the local newspaper, John C. Fanning manager of the Capitol Theatre, Brownsville, Texas, pulled a stunt while the football season was still on that resulted in valuable publicity.

Before the start of a local game, persons were invited to estimate how many touchdowns would be made; how many yards would be gained from scrimmage, and the number of first downs. Over 200 answers were received by the newspaper and the sports editor not only gave generous mention to the stunt, but followed through with photos of those who sent in the best estimates. Guest tickets were furnished by the theatre.

The above is still another football gag to file away for next season, or to use in connection with some other sport. Right now we can guess that John is in the midst of holiday activities and the Club will be interested to know what he did to make merry over Xmas and New Year's.

POSTER ART WORK!
DRAWN BY BENTON L. JAMES

Well, Benton, your series certainly seems to be stirring up plenty of interest among your brother poster artists. We already have four others contributing and that's a grand tribute to the good work you started. Besides yourself we have, or will, reproduce art work from Herb Simpson, Claude Barnett, Arthur Du Vall and several others.

This week's poster is a dignified lobby flash for Clive Brook in "24 Hours." Like the other Benton posters, this one reflects a keen appreciation for the star's drawing power among the so-called, sophisticated class. But, be that as it may, any smart poster artists can reflect the spirit of his own particular clientele by the text and flash of his colors. Where "noise" is essential, the louder colors will produce the desired results.

CHOOSES NOT TO RUN!

Pointing out that all his available time was taken up acting as president of Associated Theatres, Ltd., a group of some 70 odd theatres in Ontario, Canada, and the matter of looking after business of his own theatre, the Martin, in Oshawa, Ernie Marks recently announced that he will not seek re-election to the office of Mayor of Oshawa for 1932.

PADDY NOLAN THANKFUL!

Voters for and against him in a local aldermanic campaign and the general public were included in copy in a "Card of Thanks" recently issued by P. J. Nolan, owner of three theatres in Ottawa, Canada. "Paddy," as he is familiarly known, expressed gratitude that he would again be permitted to "run his own business during the coming year."

FOURMET USED STAGE COACH AND SINGERS TO SELL 'CISCO KID'

An old stage coach, of pioneer day design, was successfully used to provide atmospheric publicity for "Cisco Kid" by Al Fourmet, manager of the Ellanay Theatre in El Paso, Tex. Banners and other copy relating to picture, theatre and playdates were tied to each side of the coach as it was drawn through the streets on the morning of picture opening.

On top of the coach was a man dressed in bandit costume, who strummed on a guitar. As the vehicle circulated about the town the "bandit" sang old Spanish songs, which were particularly pleasing to the Spanish quarter.

While old time stage coaches are not by any means available to the average theatre, real atmosphere is generally provided by use of same and Fourmet was fortunate to have one at his command.

STREET CAR BALLY AND BAND BROUGHT RESULTS TO MILLER

For the turn-away audience that saw the opening of "Local Boy Makes Good" at the Kenosha Theatre, in Kenosha, Wis., "Doc" Miller, manager of the house, gives much of the credit to one of his stunts. Miller arranged with the street car company for the use of one of its trolley cars. Covering the sides of the car with banners announcing the picture and engaging a ten-piece band to accompany it, Miller had the car run throughout the city on the day of the opening. For two hours in the afternoon and for an hour preceding the first showing the car was in operation and attracted a lot of attention.

The above bally got the comedy away to an excellent start, according to all reports, and the following four days' business was entirely up to expectations.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Born in Russia on June 10, 1906, Ben Griefer immigrated to America at an early age and finally landed in Brooklyn, N. Y. After attending public schools, Stuyvesant High School, and a course in law at Fordham Law School, he entered showbusiness at the age of 19 years—because he had an inclination for the game since early childhood.

Ben Griefer

But one company has claimed his attention since he decided to follow a career in the theatre business—Paramount Publix—and the Rialto Theatre, Broadway, New York City, was where he first became acquainted with the whys and wherefores of his profession. He founded the house organ known as "Rialtopics" and also devised and staged three annual employees' shows while connected with that house. He has acted as usher, treasurer and assistant manager and this writing finds him at the Paramount Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he ably assists Robert Weitman with the management of that theatre.

DE SHETLER HELD BIG CANNING MATINEE IN LAURENCE'S OLD TOWN

Included among the reports on food matinees that so many theatres are promoting these days for relief of the needy, is one from the division of Sid Laurence, a Schine executive in Ohio. We refer to one put over by A. V. DeShetler, manager of the Piqua Theatre, Piqua, jars and canning accessories being the requisite articles.

Leading up to the Saturday morning when the house was filled from orchestra to balcony with children from all over town, the newspapers gave generous support to the event for several days in advance with two-column stories. According to the big pile of jars, etc., collected in the theatre lobby, a great many pantries in the city were deleted of hundreds of glass containers. The accompanying photo does not do full justice to the size of the crowd collected in front of the theatre but it will give a fair idea of what took place. All services in connection with the event were donated, even to the taking of this picture.

While we are still on the subject of the Piqua, we'll call attention to a neat little piece of advertising matter gotten out for "Bought." It is made to represent an envelope of about 5 inches long by 3½ inches wide. The stock is fairly heavy and while it is not an envelope, a flap makes it appear as one. There is copy on outside and as the flap is opened it reads, "Just As You Unfold This . . ." then, balance of copy on envelope potrion continues with, "Just So Does the Unusual Story of Stephanie Dale Unfold," etc. The point of the flap conceals a head cut of Constance Bennett. The card was printed in blue ink and carried a blue ⅜ inch border.

Glad to hear from you again, Sid, and to know that the boys in your division are carrying on so nicely. We will bet that local canners of food received plenty of action as the result of the matinee in question. Now that the holidays are with us, we'll expect an account of what happened during this festive season.

BUTLER RE-ASSIGNED

Wallace J. Butler, formerly manager of the Ritz theatre in San Bernardino, Calif., has been placed in charge of the Symphony theatre, Compton, Calif.

"Wallie," as he is familiarly known to a great many Round Tablers, has already started the ball a-rolling on the new job and Club members may soon expect to hear what's doing in the show line in Compton. The entire organization wishes him unlimited success with the new assignment.

WILLIAMS MADE DEAL WITH DRUG FIRM TO ADVERTISE HIS SHOW

Twenty-six drug stores were tied up for distribution of special "Cuban Sundaes," as part of a campaign made on "Cuban Love Song," by Rex Williams, manager of the Liberty Theatre in Terre Haute, Ind. In addition to a gratis window in each store, guest ticket card pluggers were distributed by the clerks. These were made up in the usual style.

Additional effort included tie-up with a newspaper for lines running between classified ads reading, "Look for your invitation to see Cuban Love Song"; an arrangement with a department store and several five and tens for a display of sheet music featuring "Cuban Love Song," and a full window of fur fashions and stills of Lupe Velez in another large store.

When it comes to going out and arranging a flock of tie-ups, we'll have to hand it to Williams for doing a crackerjack job.

BLOOMBERG IS BUSY AS EVER IN SALEM; TWO SPLENDID DEALS

When the American Legion staged a big celebration on Armistice Day in Salem, Mass., P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre in that city, crashed the elaborate parade with an attractive float at no expense to the house, except some passes.

After a lot of dickering with the head of the local post a few days before the parade, he obtained permission to go ahead with his plans, if a certain number of out-of-town legionnaires were given guest tickets to the current show. He promoted a truck from a local garage, bags of sawdust from a local concern, machine guns from the Armory, barbed wire from another store and the services of five legionnaires to ride the float.

You will note by the accompanying photo that the float was made up to represent a battlefield redoubt, with the soldiers standing behind the imitation sacks of sand. On either side of the truck banners read, "Your Paramount Theatre Joins You In Celebrating Armistice Day." This float was particularly effective as it was the only one of its kind in the parade. It also had centre position in the parade.

Bloomberg also put over a corking campaign on "Palmy Days" and his efforts resulted in one of the best co-operative deals made in some time. He contacted a large baking concern for the tie-up of 100 store-window tie-ups, at no cost to theatre except signs; made deal with same concern for distribution of 5,000 sample loaves of bread to theatre patrons, each carrying appropriate stickers to advertise the picture; made attractive lobby display for distribution of sample loaves; secured through baking concerns 25 fine counter tie-ups in most prominent stores in town, and in addition to regular run of advertising and newspaper readers, the local paper generously supported the tie-up.

It appears that Bloomberg got away with a whole lot of free publicity in both the deals described above and he ought to be in line for congratulations for putting over two such remunerative tie-ups.

SALZMAN PROMOTED!

Hal Salzman, formerly in charge of publicity for the Warner-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been placed in charge of publicity for all Warner houses in the Metropolitan district.

His promotion to this responsible position is a strong testimonial to ability as a publicity director and fellow Club members wish him continued success in his chosen field.

Hal is one of the few publicity men who knows publicity. This promotion proves it.

LEAP YEAR AND STAGE WEDDINGS!

Here's a perfect combination for box office grosses. Tie in the Leap Year angle with a gala Stage Wedding, but make sure the two are worked together in order to make capital out of the publicity that will result.

We've plugged the Stage Wedding idea consistently because past performances have proven sure-fire for nine out of ten spots. But with the added strength of the Leap Year tagged on to it there is no reason why this should not be a marvelous money-maker.

If you can dope out a way of getting the consent of the couple to saying that their romance started at your theatre, all the better. It's innocent deception and lends a wealth of color to the whole proceeding.

Details for the usual stage wedding have been published in the Club section at different times, if you can't locate one of them, drop us a line and we'll send you a copy. Take those details and work in the Leap Year slant according to the best local angles.

No reason for letting your ticket machine get rusty if you are at all willing to put your shoulder to the wheel. Here is a glorious chance to make some dough and attract a lot of attention to your house.

LOUIS ORLOVE PAYS SPECIAL ATTENTION TO KIDDIE TRAILERS

Ever since Louis Orlove, manager of the Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, was waylaid, bound, gagged and returned to his theatre by the business men and kiddies of his neighborhood, as a last minute means to prevent his migratory move to take over a more lucrative job at Detroit, Mich., he has been extremely busy setting in motion other schemes to keep the name of Uptown on the map and has apparently adjusted himself to what appears a life-long sentence in the city that was once, and maybe still is, famous for its Pilsener.

Among other important matters he has been paying special attention to "trailer language" in connection with his popular Mickey Mouse Club. The value of the personal touch in these advertisements was appraised by the home office of the Mickey Mouse organization, whose official bulletin recently reprinted some of Orlove's copy as an example of what to shoot at. It follows: "Big Hallowe'en Party—Saturday, October 31st—Tell Mother You Will Be—Home Late 'Cause Our—Show Is 'Ceptionally—Long!—Apple On The String Contest—Vodvil Acts! Nuff Sed!—You're Comin' Aintcha?"

Keep the Kiddies Coming!

We also are privileged to look over a herald which, as he states, will keep the youngsters coming to the theatre up to and including Xmas. There's a cut of Mickey Mouse in the upper right hand corner and the copy starts off with, "Howdy!—All You Mickey Mouse Members Are Missing Sumpin'—when you don't attend your meeting every Saturday Matinee." It then goes on to state that there will be four big steering racing sleds given away at every meeting and that a big ten-foot sled, costing $35, will be the offering on Xmas Day. The sleds are illustrated.

Concerning the matter of using language couched in a way which will especially appeal to the kiddies, Orlove's success in this field, as well as in all phases of showmanship, makes it imperative that his suggestions be given serious consideration. Undoubtedly he ranks as one of the most firmly entrenched neighborhood theatre managers, and this position has been achieved through display on a keen knowledge of kid psychology. We will await a report on Xmas festivities conducted at his theatre, for we know it will be interesting material to pass along to other Club members. Until then, the usual farewell.

NAT HOLT BELIEVES IN SPENDING MONEY FOR GOOD DISPLAYS

Believing that judicious expenditure in the matter of attractive lobby displays will be reflected in an increase at the box office and likening this phase of showmanship to the stress department stores make in this direction, Nat Holt, city manager of Fox Theatres in Wichita, Kan., is a strong supporter of the well-dressed theatre front.

With this in mind, we are presenting for your inspection a display he had fashioned for the "Cisco Kid." This display, as reproduced here, stood 9½ feet high and measured seven feet in width. You will note that there is a great deal of thickness to the job, with a like amount of relief work. The letters were cut from solid wood.

This display was placed in the theatre lobby one week ahead of the picture and due to the unusual coloring and lighting treatment it received, the management believes that the display was directly responsible for the sale of many tickets.

After all, as Holt states, the lobby is the show-window of the theatre and should never be allowed to become monotonous. His reference to the department store method of display is, we believe, also sound. Study any windows of the up-to-date stores and it will be noticed that displays are constantly undergoing a change. It is also apparent that a considerable amount of money is spent in this direction, with an eye toward employing a thoroughly competent window-dresser and in the use of costly accessories. Taking into consideration that the displays are up only for a day or so at a time, it will be seen that this becomes a most important item of expense, though entirely justifiable when returns are tabulated.

Thanks, Nat, for the photo and your remarks and continue to let the Club know what is going on in show-business out in Wichita.

REGULAR HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE FEATURED BY GRACE M. FISHER

A regular Hollywood opening attended the premiere of the New Embassy Theatre, Cumberland, Md., a house presided over by Lady-manager Grace M. Fisher. The picture chosen for the occasion was "Flying High."

The doors of the theatre were thrown open to the crowds at an early hour of the evening, during which time a band rendered a special program of popular musical numbers. As the local and visiting celebrities arrived, names were broadcast through the agency of microphone in front of the lobby, as Kleig lights were placed and photographers kept on the jump "shooting" pictures of the guests. The entire proceedings were broadcasted by the local station.

The mayor added to the event by taking part in the ceremonies and in a speech made mention of current and coming attractions. Merchants all along Cumberland's main stem cooperated with special window announcements of the opening. In several instances, full windows were obtained for art displays.

Miss Fisher is a well known showwoman down her way and she is to be congratulated for staging such a fine premiere for her new house. Now that the ball is rolling along at the Embassy, we'd like to know what she is doing in the business of selling her shows and hope she'll let us know.

AMATEUR NIGHTS ARE CLICKING AGAIN!

Both legitimate and semi-pro amateur nights are finding favor in many sections of the country again. Whichever way you work it, be sure that it is handled properly and leave no loopholes for the "wise-guys" to start any razing.

Where theatres can promote real local talent, all the better. They always can be counted on to bring in slews of friends and relations to root for them.

Where you must import them from some other place, see that they are introduced as from neighboring towns. If the customers get wise that they are paid performers it will not hurt the entertainment value, but the prestige of your advertising promise of local talent.

This gag has been boosting business in many spots, especially in the east and is deserving of a try for that off-night that won't respond to any other treatment. Get behind it and try it for three or four weeks before you condemn it altogether. It may be just what you need to create some interest and get some of your old patrons coming back again, besides digging up plenty of newcomers to your box office.

THE LOCAL DANCING SCHOOL!

Here is a slant that has rarely, if ever, failed to deliver the goods in the form of a sell-out at every performance. Yet, many showmen pass it up without any particular good reason.

During the many years your Chairman was engaged in theatre operation he made the dancing school recitals a regular feature of his activities once and sometimes twice a year.

The tie-up is an easy and desirable one. Besides you can work in your local papers and merchants, too. So why not think it over and then look further into its possibilities?

Of course, a stage or platform is necessary, but inasmuch as most of the theatres have a stage with plenty of scenery, that should not be a hard angle to take care of.

The dancing school could find no better medium to emphasize its efficiency and ability than through a public performance. As a matter of fact most of them hold these performances twice or three times a year. Backed up with smart showmanship, staged in a real professional manner, they are really worth-while for any house.

Every youngster in the school who takes part is generally the magnet for dozens of friends and relations.

Cost is small or not enough to make it impractical. Look into all the angles in connection with such a performance, or performances, and see if you can't get your leading dancing school working with you.

LABY DREW CROWDS TO LOBBY WITH HIS TAILLESS MULE GAG

Once more it is our pleasure to broadcast some information concerning the activities of George Laby, loyal supporter of these pages and manager of the Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass.

This time we present the old tried and dyed-in-the-wool parlor gag of "Try to Pin the Tail on the Mule," a form of amusement held in high regard at most Hallowe'en parties. So file this one away for next year or use it as you see fit, for it was the occasion of much attention and hilarity when Laby used it for an outdoor lobby attraction. Note by the photo that a large frame containing an illustration of a high-kicking mule, tailless of course, is being approached by a young lady who hopes to attach the tail on the proper part of the mule's anatomy. If she is successful, lo and behold she becomes entitled to guest privileges of the theatre.

There was no doubt concerning the success of this stunt. The crowds attracted grew so large that the stunt had to be discontinued every few minutes so that the doorman could sell tickets for the current show to the dispersing standees. In fact, District Manager Zorn happened along about that time and was considerably impressed with what was taking place.

The other photo illustrates an advance display used for "Five Star Final" and shows a corner of the lobby devoted to what represents a cross section of a newspaper office. A cut-out of a globe is captioned, "Will the World Pay to See a Woman Crucified?" Definitions of newspaper lingo, desks, phones and other paraphernalia are much in evidence along with a number of stills from the picture. However, all this effort went for naught on account of the ban placed upon this picture by Boston officials.

Too bad his attractive display became ineffective through silly prejudice but maybe some other Club member will be the gainer through passing it along. That tailless mule stunt must have been a corker and we're sure that this one will make the rounds of his fellow showmen. Thanks, Laby, for keeping in touch with headquarters. We'll be looking for further word.

PHILIP ENGEL MADE SPLENDID CAMPAIGN FOR FOOTBALL FILM

A preview, souvenir give-away and free distribution of heralds were some of the features of the campaign made on "Touchdown" by Philip Engel, manager of the Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J.

Coaches, members of the high school football team and newspaper men were invited to the special screening, during which Engel announced that a football autographed by stars of the picture would be given away at a rally to be held in the theatre during run of the picture. The students paid regular admission at this rally.

Local high school authorities handled distribution of 2,000 Touchdown heralds at a school football game. These heralds carried numbers and names of the players on each team. An effective street ballyhoo was also used during run of picture.

As the result of his preview Engel obtained a splendid review on the sports page of a local evening paper and other efforts were also reflected in the very satisfactory returns at the box office. We're glad to again get a line on this Round Tabler's activities and hope he'll resume his usual pace in the matter of making contributions to this department.

DRACHMAN EMPLOYED CORKING HERALD GAG ON MARX BROS. FILM

Roy P. Drachman, manager of the Opera house in Tucson, Ariz., recently used a novel little gag on "Monkey Business" that created a whole lot of word-of-mouth advertising.

Three nights in advance—at the height of a Fall Fashion Show in which every merchant in town tied in, there were over 5,000 people on the streets, peering into these merchants' windows. This was the night that Drachman distributed novelty heralds that offered guest admissions to some.

There were four sets made up; one each showing a cut of Groucho, Chico, Harpo and Zeppo Marx. Copy on these heralds read: "Find three persons having the cards with the pictures of my brothers, Chico, Harpo and Zeppo and all four of you will be my guests to see "Monkey Business" featuring the Four Marx Brothers—Four Days Starting Saturday—Opera House." Of course, one of the sets was cut down perceptibly, which also cut down the possibility of granting too many free admissions.

Drachman certainly took advantage of a made-to-order situation in his town to get over the above gag. That the idea was given wide circulation is quite evident when consideration is given to the fact that each searcher for the three other heralds had to do a whole lot of questioning to secure the entire set. A good little gag that got results, and that's what counts.

GLUCKSMAN MARRIED!

Ira Glucksman, a member of the editorial staff of "Publix Opinion," house organ of the Paramount Publix organization, was married to Miss Edna May, a member of the editorial board of a beauticians' trade paper, by City Court Justice Lewis, in New York City, on Tuesday night, December 22nd.

GRADUATION IN JANUARY!

Some managers sort of pass up the January graduation slants because there seems to be less importance attached to them than the usual Commencement Exercises in June; yet, these mid-winter graduations are far better spotted for theatre tie-ups than the June days.

In many localities you will find that the grammar and high schools hold their graduation towards the end of January and you should give a thought to the possibilities of capitalizing on them.

Popularity contests for the most popular male and female member of the graduation class is one slant that works well for the theatre. Another is the class play to be given at the theatre in preference to the school auditorium because of the limited seating capacity of the latter.

Theatre parties, class gatherings, etc., all can be worked out by the smart showman who knows how to make the most of these functions.

Both picture and stage show furnished advertising ideas for Milton Kress, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Meridian, Miss., when this showman played "Spirit of Notre Dame."

He tied up with the head of the Boy Scouts to mail out over 1,400 announcement letters written on organization stationery, at no cost to theatre except a few passes to the executive who sent the leters. Gratis announcements were also made in the public schools.

The local broadcasting station turned over a total of 7½ hours to members of the stage show, who along with their numbers did their utmost to publicize show and picture. Three members of the show were also taken to the regular weekly meeting of the Lion's Club, where they entertained with songs and dances. They did not forget to mention the Saenger show.

It may be a little late for football picture stunts, but we notice that many theatres are still showing this type of attraction. The season may end abruptly, but it also leaves thought of the game in the minds of fans for a long time after; hence, we're continuing to pass these tips along for current use or to file away for next year. Thanks to Kress for his suggestions, and we'll be on the watch for others.

A RIVKIN SPECIAL!

DIFFICULTIES BESET BILL WHYTE'S RELIEF SHOW BUT IT CLICKED

Notified just seven days ahead of time that he was scheduled to run a morning show for the benefit of the unemployed and faced with the prospect of having to offer a repeat program to patrons on this occasion, William Whyte, manager of the Riverhead Theatre, Riverhead, L. I., N. Y., got busy on the telephone wires and won his point to hold a midnight show with any kind of program to his liking.

All was not easy sailing after taking preliminary steps, however, for Whyte soon found out that aside from the Red Cross there wasn't any relief organization in the town. Red Cross co-operation was out of the question because fifty per cent of all funds raised by this organization had to be sent to Washington. Faced with the alternative of creating his own committee, he turned to local clubs and finally sold the idea to the Women's, Civic and Rotary Clubs, each of these to be represented by a member. Through these representatives tickets were placed on sale in the schools and stores and on each night preceding the benefit two women from one of the clubs sold tickets in the theatre foyer.

The services of singers, dancers, instrumentalists, were also lined up for the show, all recruited from local talent. Even the town band came through for its part, gathering in front of the theatre at 11.30 P.M. that night for the rendition of two numbers. The band then marched inside and played two more numbers while the stage was being set and cleared. A leading lawyer and former district attorney acted as M. C. during a show that ran for one hour and twenty minutes. Over 400 people attended the performance and remained in their seats until it closed at 2.40 A. M.

For house front display he used suitable copy on the marquee; streamers of flags; a string of 75 colored lamps, erected gratis by a local electrician, and a photograph of the town supervisor (same as Mayor) purchasing the first ticket from a representative of one of the clubs. A local photographer supplied the photo gratis. A leading Brooklyn paper was also hit for a two column story and photo in the Sunday edition.

Working under difficulties, Whyte certainly came through with a splendid campaign and the show clicked so nicely that Joseph M. Seider, head of Prudential Theatres, was impressed to the extent of mailing a commendatory letter. Many Round Tablers are or will be faced with similar circumstances this season and if they run against any snag it is to be hoped that some of Bill's suggestions will help out.

BURGUM PROMOTED A DE LUXE AUTO HORN FOR GIVEAWAY NITE

To inaugurate a series of give-away nights, Dan Burgum, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Greenville, Miss., made a deal with a local auto accessory dealer for the promotion of a $35 auto horn.

In addition to furnishing the gift without cost, the merchant donated 2,000 circulars, 2,000 especially-made tickets for daily distribution, and a six-inch ad in the newspaper. The name of theatre and current attractions were given generous mention in all advertising. The special tickets were distributed at the merchant's place of business and at the theatre box office, with the usual requirements of this type of tie-up. A credit card in the lobby and a screen slide took care of the theatre's part of the deal.

Which further points out that there is alway some merchant around town ready for an opportunity to place his name before the thousands of people who have the movie-going habit. We will be interested to know how Dan progresses with the balance of his give-aways and will pass along information just as often as we can a get a line on his activities.

BALLY FOR "MODERN AGE"

When Walter Finney, manager of the RKO Orpheum, Spokane, Wash., exploited "Modern Age," one of his stunts, as shown above, consisted of using one of the oldest autos in captivity. The antique was driven about by a be-whiskered gentleman who may represent Adam, cave-man or what-have-you. At any rate, he provides appropriate atmosphere and the kids are getting a great kick out of the stunt.

TIE-UP WITH STYLE SHOP PROVED AID TO NORMAN'S CAMPAIGN

When advertising "Possessed," R. E. Norman, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Clarksdale, Miss., made an advantageous tie-up with a style shop for a window display of evening gowns. The window foreground carried a hand-painted cut-out of Joan Crawford and copy relating to title of picture, cast, play-dates, and other selling copy.

At the theatre, the lobby was decorated with three-sheet cut-outs of both Crawford and Gable, mounted on an elaborate base with flittered letter title, names of stars and hand-painted sales copy.

Both window and lobby displays aided materially in the results obtained by Norman on the showings of this picture and we can see that this showman hasn't lost the knack of making profitable deals with his merchant friends.

FINNEY FEATURED A CONTINUITY GAG ON LOCAL AIR STATION

When "This Modern Age" was exploited by Walter Finney, manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Spokane, Wash., a "Continuity" gag was featured over a local radio broadcasting station five days in advance. Each day part of the synopsis was broadcast and the radio audience invited to transcribe it on paper. Guest tickets were offered for the composition.

Other stunts included a street car bally, with "heads" of Joan Crawford and car-length banners; the spotting of endorsements by M-G-M stars on different pages of newspapers, and invitations issued to all blondes to attend a special midnight matinee.

Certainly, Finney's radio feature was a means of getting over an impressive message to the public, since in order to participate it became necessary for the person to listen in for five consecutive days. This showman engineers interesting work out his way and the Club will look forward to receipt of other information concerning his methods of selling shows.

Colored Paper Hats

Assorted paper party hats. Bright colored bands offer plenty of imprint space. Great for parades, special matinee parties and as throw-aways. These hats are priced for quantity use. Cover the town with them. Every kid that wears a hat is a walking twenty-four sheet for your attractions. Turn these over to your local printer for imprint.

GOOD AND BAD PUBLICITY

By Vic Gauntlett

(Northwest Publicity Director)
Fox West Coast Theatres

ONE of the oldest curses in show business is bad publicity. Ofttimes too little thought is given by publicity men and theatre managers in whether the publicity that they are anticipating using is going to benefit or injure not only the attraction, but, in many instances, the theatre. You will remember the instance of not so many years ago where, in order to gain publicity, some publicity men in Los Angeles threw a fake bomb into a newspaper office. You will readily agree that this was bad publicity.

Good publicity is salesmanship and therefore all publicity exploitation ideas should be born along one line—"Will this arouse the curiosity of the public to come to the theatre?"

There is not a single press book turned out by any exchange that hasn't got one or two bad publicity stories. I wonder if theatre managers or publicity men carefully read the stories in the press book and decide whether they are good or bad publicity before they are given to the newspapers.

The old habit of just giving an entire press book to the newspapers and letting them choose their own picking is sometimes disastrous for the show. They will invariably play up some minor star in the attraction whose name doesn't mean a dime at the box office, or will ofttimes publish a story stating that the big scene that was supposed to be made in Europe was a master of art on the studio lots. The public is all too well aware of the fact that 90 per cent of the settings in productions of the pictures are faked, and this is one matter that should be erased from their minds as far as possible by the proper publicity.

Misleading exploitation ideas are also bad. Fake tickets that lend the impression that one will be admitted free to a theatre, and then with a clause in smaller type which causes them to be embarrassed and held up at the door for an additional ticket, is bad, and the reaction against the theatre is just the reverse to what it should be.

Don't try to "bunk" the public. Straight, legitimate advertising of your attraction and exploitation ideas should be good at all times. Don't fly aeroplanes low over crowds at football games or what-not, with banners attached. It scares them and makes them nervous. Although they may see the banner, the fact that you are making them uncomfortable reacts badly against the theatre.

There are millions of things that one could enumerate on "Bad Publicity," but every theatre manager and publicity man should be salesman enough to analyze these facts and judge first whether it would be good or bad. Much rather not have any publicity at all than bad publicity.

THE ARMY AND NAVY HELPED BROOKLYN STRAND SELL FILM

The Strand Theatre, a big Warner first-run in the downtown section of Brooklyn, N. Y., skippered by Manager W. V. McLaughlin and Publicity Director Hal Salzman, is keeping very much in the lime-light these days through the efforts of these two able showmen.

When they're not making advantageous tie-ups, etc., some kind of a ballyhoo is shouting the Strand trademark about town, and one of the latest stunts pulled was to enlist a portion of Uncle Sam's army and navy in the interest of "Ruling Voice."

Salzman secured a war tank from the army and a band from the navy, and then got together 20 very pretty girls and bundled them into taxicabs. Next, the whole parade wound through Brooklyn's most prominent streets and finally landed at the famous Borough Hall plaza. Here the Boro President came out for a bow and a hand and ceremoniously bought a ticket for the unemployment relief show running currently at the Strand. You will note in the accompanying illustration that a large crowd gathered, through which the 20 pretty girls circulated and sold tickets for the benefit performance. Also note the big war tank and sailor band in foreground.

LARGE AUTO PARADE AIDED CARLOS FRIAS SELL FOOTBALL FILM

Fifty autos loaded to the gunwales with boys and girls waving college streamers, followed by six other cars carrying the college band, featured a parade that was tied-in with "Touchdown" by Carlos Frias, manager of the Plaza Theatre in El Paso, Texas. The participants in the parade were all members of a local college, celebrating the advent of an important game on the season's schedule. Banners, tying up the parade with picture, were attached to all cars. All that this big ballyhoo cost the theatre was a handful of guest tickets for the players.

In addition to the above, his newspaper campaign featured the promotion of a co-op. page in connection with a special midnight performance for the unemployed, and a 30-inch free tie-up on the classified page for new subscriptions. On the opening day, another paper carried complete amusement page with an eight-column heading with scene mats on production, current stories and reviews. Other readers and publicity mats were also given space.

Without a doubt Frias obtained splendid cooperation from the students for his campaign at a negligible cost to the theatre and we're sure that his suggestions will stimulate other members of this organization to put forth similar efforts when they map out exploitation work for their next football film, whether it be this season or next. In the meantime, we'll await further word of this Round Tabler's activities.

YOUNGSTERS HELPED JOHN WATT EXPLOIT FILM AND FOOD SHOW

Youngsters figured conspicuously in two stunts recently pulled by John Watt, manager of the Empress Theatre, Penticton, B. C., one being used in connection with a current picture and the other a good will matinee for the needy.

When exploiting "Young As You Feel," he arranged with the kiddies to impersonate "funny paper" characters and offered a gift for the outstanding outfit. The children were asked to meet at the school grounds, from which point they paraded through town to the theatre. The majority of local merchants co-operated by furnishing space in their windows for announcement cards one week in advance, all of which resulted in a capacity matinee.

The other stunt was worked in cooperation with public schools and local clergy for the promotion of articles of food for the poor. The humble potato was singled out as an inducement for participants to make the show successful. For the most potatoes brought to the box-office a week's pass was given; for the biggest potato, a pass for one show; for the oddest shaped potato, another pass for one show, and for the smallest potato, another pass.

A large quantity of potatoes, bacon, flour, groceries, shoes, socks and wood were brought to the theatre and later handed over to each of the several church denominations, alleviating want among the needy to a considerable degree.

The accompanying photo presents evidence that the youngsters responded heartily to the characterization stunt and the other one proved a real good-will getter for the house, particularly for this time when there is so much to be done in this direction. Watt thought that some other member of the Club might like to make a similar move and therefore passed along the idea. We'll look for more news from Penticon in the future.

XMAS OBSERVED BY MANY THEATRES IN BROOKLYN CIRCUIT

Elaborate Christmas festivities formed a large portion of programs of various theatres in the Century Circuit, a well known New York organization founded by A. H. Schwartz of Brooklyn, who for several years has made this an annual affair.

In a number of instances newspapers cooperated with this move to entertain the poor and orphaned neighborhood kiddies and helped make every affair a gala event. Each child who attended a party received gifts of toys, candy, cakes and fruit.

Theatres holding parties this year included the Patio, Brooklyn; the Bliss, Long Island City; the Merrick, Jamaica; the Queens, Queens Village; the Fantasy, Rockville Centre; the Freeport, Freeport; the Beacon, Port Washington, and the Huntington, Huntington.

Managers of most of the above theatres are members of the Round Table Club and headquarters will be glad to receive a detailed account of how each party went over.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

While we haven't a whole lot of information to disclose concerning the past life of James G. Fair, present manager of the Elite Theatre in Laurens, Ohio, we can at least inform other Round Tablers that he is one of the many owner-managers who make up this vast army of showmen.

James G. Fair

Fair was born in Ida Grove, Iowa, on Aug. 18, 1883, which ranks him as one of the veterans in this business of selling shows. Certainly his photograph belies his age, but maybe the fates have been kind to him. He is an active member in community activities in his town, being a member of the Masonic Lodge, Consistory, Knights of Pythias and Community Club. He is married and has one son. In reply to a query as to what he'd do were he to start all over again, his answer was that show business would again be his choice of a career.

FAVORABLE REVIEWS DECIDED JONNASSON TO HOLD A PREVIEW

Many favorable out-of-town reviews of "Sin of Madelon Claudet," prompted Robert Jonnasson, manager of the Mayfair Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J., to hold a local preview of this picture 10 days prior to opening and use laudatory comment of local citizens in his newspaper ads. Local and out-of-town papers that ran these ads came through with generous readers.

He also saw that letters were mailed one week in advance to the heads of all women's clubs, civic organizations, and other prominent county leaders, stressing appeal of the picture. It was also brought out that Helen Hayes was making her first screen appearance. Announcements emphasizing merits of the picture were also made by Jonnasson over the theatre's public address system, following each showing of sound trailer.

Other features of his campaign included the making of a special art set-piece by the art department, containing stills of the star in various characterizations of her role, each still individually lighted and the entire set piece spotted from above; the running of a series of small ads, showing star at different periods in her life; radio announcements four times daily; the spotting of 100 window cards, and an unusual amount of free publicity from leading papers.

Jonnasson obtained excellent results from the above campaign and so we're passing his contribution along to his fellow Round Tablers. We'll be interested to know what else is taking place at his theatre in the business of selling shows.

HIGH SCHOOL NIGHT FEATURED CAMPAIGN MADE BY STONEBROOK

A special night for the High School football team resulted in obtaining splendid publicity breaks on "Touchdown" for R. K. Stonebrook, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J.

On the night following picture opening day, the team, school band and cheer leaders were invited to attend the performance at a certain hour. The student body, however, paid admission and a rally was held inside the theatre. After the school band made its appearance on the stage, a Jersey Senator presented a star-autographed football to the captain of the eleven.

On the day of the stunt, the newspaper published a photo of the Senator, along with a story of High School Night, and the next day broke with a photo of the team captain and a player injured in a recent game. In a story covering the theatre party, it was also mentioned that the football given away would be presented to the injured player.

The fact that this local football team was leading the pack at the time made this stunt particularly valuable to Stonebrook as a publicity medium for his house, but the real kick for the box office came from the efficient way he handled it. We realize that the end of the football season is at hand, but these ideas can always be filed away for future use or adapted to some other film and we thank this Club member for making it possible to secure the information. We'll hope to hear more about what he's doing to sell his shows.

ACT NOW—FILL IN THAT COUPON!

GUS VAVERIS is another one of A. C. Himmelein's boys to become a member of this constantly-growing army of showmen and it is our pleasure to announce that this new Round Tabler is the manager of the Grand Theatre in Mt. Pleasant, Pa. Gus, when you have a bit of time between shows, sit down in front of the trusty old typewriter and knock off an account of what you've been doing to help along these prosperous times.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE L. PEPPLER hails from down in Baltimore, Md., a city where this Club is most firmly intrenched. He manages the Red Wing Theatre on Monument Street and if he has fully grasped the meaning of membership in this outfit, it won't be long before we will be broadcasting some news of showbusiness in his section of the city. We are glad to welcome this new member and hope that he will do his share to carry on the work of this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

N. A. NOTOPOULOS is another of the family of that name to join up with this outfit of showmen and he also is working in the division under A. C. Himmelein. This new Round Tabler manages the Strand Theatre in the historical city of Johnstown, Pa., and we are taking this opportunity to introduce him to his fellow showmen. Come through, N. A., with some dope on what you've been doing to sell shows at the Strand. Your brother members will appreciate the information.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. A. NOTOPOULOS is the third member of the Pennsylvanian family bearing this name to become a member of this organization and it begins to appear as though the Club will boast the whole flock before through. This Notopoulos manages the Capitol Theatre in Altoona, Pa., headquarters of Altoona-Publix Theatres, Inc., and we're glad to extend a most cordial welcome to this new member. He is another one of A. C. Himmelein's staff of managers and with 100 per cent coverage in this territory the Club ought to be kept well informed on what's going on in and around Altoona.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

G. A. ROMINE'S name has already been mentioned in a recent story among Club pages in the capacity of able assistant to Bunny Bryan, manager of the Belmont Theatre, Chicago, Ill. He has been with this house for over a year and prior to becoming assistant manager held down the job of treasurer. Romine is a Purdue graduate and we predict that all of you will hear a lot more about this enterprising assistant of Bryan's. With both of these live-wires at the Belmont, we can count on being tipped off to what's going on.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALFRED J. MOTTER hails from the City of Brotherly Love, which, to be exact, is Philadelphia, Pa. He has been in showbusiness for the past five years, starting in as an usher. After putting in a hitch at the Lake Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, he left that post to become manager of the Roosevelt Theatre, Phila., where we now find him busily engaged with the task of making a good showing for his district manager Montague Salmon. We're glad to have Al with us and will depend upon him to keep the Club informed on what's doing at his end.

JOSEPH C. DOUGHERTY is the manager of the Tower Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., and he's another one of Monty Salmon's district men to join the ranks of this ever-increasing organization of live wire showmen. He is in charge of a well known house down in his city, where shows are sold, and now that he's one of us we predict that other members will be let in for some interesting slants on show-business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LAURA WERNICK is the assistant manager of the Wernick Theatre, Chicopee Falls, Mass., and her application for membership in this organization presents further evidence that the ladies are not to be denied their place in show-business these days. We have quite a number of lady-managers in the ranks of this organization at the present time and we're mighty glad to include her name on the roster. She has been with the house for the past four years, acting as cashier, bookkeeper, and now takes care of advertising and publicity and assists with booking. Her "boss", Samuel Wernick, vouches for her proficiency in show business so we'll be looking forward to hearing further from this new member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES F. FEINHALS manages the Broadway Theatre in Woodcliff, N. J., and we're glad to introduce this new Round Tabler to his fellow members. Now that he is one of the gang we will look forward to hearing all about what methods he's using to bring patrons to the Broadway. Come through, Charles, with an account of some of your latest show-selling stunts, and we'll see that your tips are passed along to your fellow showmen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. E. HOWLAND left the furniture business to become a showman and after 37 months of service with the Margaret Theatre in Huntington, Va., we find him holding down the post of assistant manager. This newly-elected Round Tabler not only acts in his capacity as assistant, but fills in as operator, booker and advertising man. We are mighty glad to list him along with this army of showmen and hope that he will do his bit for these pages. Our best regards to his boss, B. M. Johnson.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HOWARD MERCER is wearing a Club Pin these days, due to the fact that he's another newly-elected member of this great organization of showmen. He manages the Grand Theatre out in Massilon, Ohio, and we're glad to introduce him to the rest of the gang. Just as soon as he limbers up that writing arm, we predict that his fellow showmen will have an opportunity to know what he is doing in show business. In the meantime, we and all his brother Round Tablers wish him lots of luck.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HERB GLAZIER is in charge of the Granada Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., and it is our pleasure to record that he, too, is now a full-fledged member of the Round Table. Now that he's one of the gang, we take this occasion to remind him that he can fulfill his duties to fellow showmen by regularly contributing some live show-tips for this department. Shoot 'em along, Herb, and we'll take care of our part of the job.

E. SAMPHYA manages the Phathanakorn Theatre of New Road, Bangkok, Siam, and with his application for membership at hand this Club acquires another representative in this far off country. It will be interesting to learn how shows are sold in Bangkok and we will depend upon Samphya to keep us all informed.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT LEFEVRE is in charge of a Publix-N. W. first run house in Minneapolis, Minn., the Lyric, and it is also our pleasure to announce that he has become a member of this organization. We will be waiting to hear what methods he uses to bring parons into his house. Shoot along some of your ideas, Bob, and we'll see that they are passed along to the other fellows in this outfit.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED G. DONEY is the manager of the Palace Theatre in London, Ontario, Canada. We are mighty glad to include his name on the roster of this constantly growing organization of showmen and hope that he will do his bit to keep this department chock full of interesting information on the business of show selling. There are a lot of enterprising showmen up his way and we feel sure that Doney will render a good account of himself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAYMOND L. DANIELS has charge of the Olympia Theatre in Worcester, Mass., and he's also in line for introduction to his host of fellow showmen-members of this club. Daniels was formerly manager of the Family Theatre, another E. M. Loew house in Worcester, is a seasoned showman and we have every reason to believe that he will become an active contributor to this department. Do your bit, Ray, for the rest of the boys will want to know what you are doing for the game over in your town.

Probably the most ingenious Christmas card received by folks along the Row is one from Harry Hadfield, manager of the Embassy theatre for Essaness. Hadfield's card shows a sandwich man walking along the street with a sign reading in large letters: "Double Feature" and below in smaller script "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year." The Missus is to be seen looking out of the window as he passes and she is saying, "My goodness, will he ever come home."

January has been designated as "Laugh Month" by the local Columbia branch. According to Dave Dubin, a great array of short subjects has been lined up for the occasion. Dubin says, "If you want to get rid of Old Man Depression, play short subjects instead of making your program topheavy."

Hal Young of National Screen Service returned from a trip to New York in time to join his family for the Christmas turkey.

William Frank, assistant general sales manager of Educational, stopped off here to confer with Max Stahl. Mr. Frank was on his way from Hollywood to New York.

The Vick theatre at Belmont and Sheffield, which has been showing foreign films intermittently for the past several years, will be opened by W. G. Turner with a regular policy of feature pictures.

40% DEMAND SYNCROFILM

Forty out of every hundred patrons are deaf—not ear-trumpet or vest-phone deaf, but subnormal enough to make them keenly appreciate the clear, natural, distinct sound delivered by Syncrofilm.

A blurred word here and there can spoil the show for anyone who is only ten per cent deaf. Sharp, true, accurate words and clean-cut music have a tremendous appeal to a large proportion of your audiences, who get them from Syncrofilm.

Forty per cent is too large a proportion to ignore. Win their appreciation and you are certain to please the others. Normal ears are even quicker to note defects and enjoy perfection.

Syncrofilm delivers accurate sound by its exclusive feature of projecting four times the usual amount of light through the sound track to the photo cell. Every fine shading or delicate marking is transmitted. Nothing is lost, run together or slurred. Your satisfaction is guaranteed, or your money back.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 105

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 111—(A) Upon what principle does the automatic arc control depend for its action? (B) In a projection light source circuit, name all the various items offering resistance to current flow. (C) When current is forced across from one electrode (carbon) to the other, something is consumed. What is it? (D) Is more than one thing used up or consumed in an electric arc? (E) Were you able to answer all those questions "right off the bat," or without some thought and perhaps reference to the Bluebook?

NOTE: With Question No. 110 we reached the end of the question list in Volume 3 of the Bluebook. However, after all, sound is only an adjunct of motion picture projection and we will now start in on Volume 1. I trust none of you will drop out and believe many additional ones will now enter the "school." The questions will be interesting. Many of them will require thought and perhaps a recourse to Volume 1, or some equally standard text book before you can be sure you are right.

Answer to Question No. 105, which was: "(A) What is the exact width of RCA sound track? (B) To what extent does the light beam overlap the edges of RCA sound track? (C) What will happen if the light beam be out of position and what should the projectionist do if he suspects the exciting lamp light beam to be out of position or out of adjustment? (D) Presuming you to have RCA Photophone equipment, the sound from which has been quite satisfactory both as to volume and clarity; gradually, however, there comes a volume drop and the sound lacks the clarity it had before. Conversation is not so understandable and music not so clear. Name those various things you would examine before calling in the service engineer."

The following answered acceptably. Names followed by an asterisk () made answers which were considered better than the others. Roy J. Arntson, Alfred Bang (incorrect on one point). Lester Borst, Herman Billings*, Kroll and Van Buskirk*, S. Evans and C. Rau*, Howard H. Smith, Wm. Bogert, W. D. Samuels, Larry Tipton, Dave Sanger, Phil C. Evans, Peter Cermack, Thos. McGruder, Henry Edwards, Leroy Bates, Bill Doe, Tom H. Gordon, John Dagg, H. D. Cole, Dave Prinn, Thos. Atterbury, James Lidding*, Seymour Carroll*, George Porder, N. D. Garling, T. L. Oleson*, Chas. L. Goldman, H. T. Jones, Wm. Alexander, Tom Davis and Wm. Joupe, Dan Jones*, Peter M. Davis, T. H. Catlin, Frank S. Roberts*, P. R. Findley, T. Van Vaulkenburg*, James Daniels, P. L. O'Mally, H. D. Schofield, George Richards, Frank F. Famaer, Ben H. Robbins*, D. T. Wylie*, James Hendershot, Dan K. Hammitt, J. D. Orlander, G. L. Doe*, J. L. Sanderson, Bob Taylor, Dave Daniels*, D. L. Williams, Dan Singer*, James McGuire, Tom Habbler, Rex U. Lang, H. T. Jones, Lon Jackson, P. G. Carnakis*, H. T. Goldfarb, L. Mooring, Andy J. Jones, L. D. Mooring, John Truax, Frank Mathews, D. L. Harper, T. B. Kay, Walter Lomax, P. R. Simmons*, Bob Danning, Frank Olliver and T. M. Stanhope.

A good list; also an excellent bunch of answers, of which there was an unusually large total—well over a thousand.

I have selected the answer of T. Van Vaulkenburg, for publication. He says:

"(A) The RCA sound track is .070 of an inch wide. (B) The beam emanating from the slit overlaps the track by .0075 of an inch on either side."

(Several commented to the effect that the Bluebook says the overlap is as above, but the RCA book gives the beam as exactly the same width as the sound track.—F.H.R.)

Since several made this same comment, I called up Mr. Babsel, chief engineer for RCA Photophone, who gave me the exact width of both beam and sound track, which produces, as Mr. Babsel agrees, an overlap of .0075 on each side of the track. Mr. Babsel commented to the effect that some men apparently had misunderstood some sections of the RCA book. (Please understand, gentlemen, that while errors may occur, still every word about sound equipment contained in the Bluebook was scrutinized by the manufacturer of the equipment itself before it was printed.—F. H. R.)

In the case of question C, I think, with the kindly permission of friend Van Vaulkenburg, I shall quote the answer made by T. L. Oleson, his reply to this section being somewhat better than that made by any other. He says:

"(C) Should the light beam be out of position sidewise by more than .0075 of an inch, then the entire width of the sound track would not be illuminated, under which condition there would of course be decrease in volume. If the out-of-position be vertical, then there would be both decrease in volume and, I believe, also some tendency to distortion. If the beam be out of position in such manner that it be too high on one end and too low on the other, then there would be both distortion and loss of volume, which effect would, I believe, be worse with variable density than with variable area recording, though it would be bad with the latter too."

(D) Van Vaulkenburg again: "To locate such a fault I would (1) Examine the lamp itself to see that the globe be not blackened, or the filament sagged or warped. I would next check up on the light beam to see that it be in proper position and in every way OK at the sound band—that is to say, that the entire width of the track is covered and that the length of beam is exactly at right angles with the length of the sound track. Next, if I found these things to be in good order I would examine the sound aperture to make sure it be free from dirt and that nothing was causing or permitting the film to buckle in any degree over the aperture. Of course in all this we assume the sound track itself to be free from oil and dirt, since if it were not, then the trouble, or at least some portion of it, might be charged to its presence. (NB: Will those who believe the sound track and light beam to be same width please advise as to RCA book, page and number where they got that idea.—F. H. R.)

MUSIC AND TALENT

Synco-Symphonic Orchestra at Roxy Under Fred Waring

By ED DAWSON

Plans have been under way for some time for reorganization of the music department at the Roxy, and these were brought to a head last week, when Fred Waring of Waring's Pennsylvanians was signed for an indefinite period to reorganize the orchestra in what is one of the most revolutionary changes made in the theatre in years.

Mr. Waring is now at the Roxy, in the pit, with thirty men additional to his usual aggregation of thirty.

Charles A. Caballero, general manager of the Roxy, states the case as follows: "Don't get the idea that this is a socalled stage band. It is just as fine a music unit as the former Roxy Symphony, and in a lot of ways much more adaptable for theatre entertainment. The pulse of the times has quickened, the old classics are slow and unwieldy for the modern stage, and lack the thrill-giving qualities demanded by the theatre audience of today.

"Fred Waring's Roxy Theatre Synco-Symphonic Orchestra will fill the requirements of the stage and the demands of the public for something new. It will work from the pit, the same as the orchestra has in the past, and will consist of several units which can work together or separately as the case may require. This will be the largest aggregation of youthful musicians ever brought together in one unit, and they have been selected by Mr. Waring from some of the finest and most famous orchestras of the country."

Radio Musicians To Strike

All union musicians employed by Chicago radio stations have been ordered out on strike as of midnight, Thursday, December 31. Approximately 400 musicians of 13 stations will be affected if the strike goes through.

Warner Houses Add Acts

The Warners' Astor, Reading, Pa., inaugurated a new stage policy on Christmas Day, with six vaudeville acts added to the feature and short subjects. The Earle, Philadelphia, has added eight acts to its programs.

Dallas Gets Stage Shows

The Southern Division of Publix plans to have Fanchon and Marco stage units in the Palace at Dallas on New Year's Day. Neither San Antonio nor Fort Work will see the units, as was originally planned.

Signs With NBC Artists

Alice Joy, vaudeville player, has signed a contract with NBC Artists Service, placing herself under its exclusive management.

ADOLPH GOEBEL

This is the new organist at the Paramount theatre Omaha, Nebraska. He was formerly featured at the Paramount, Springfield, Mass., and also at the Paramount, Atlanta, Ga.

Goebel is a hard-working fellow, one who always is using his spare time in the working out of new ideas for organ solos and for exploitation stunts. Many of his stunts have proved successful not only in building up his popularity but also as "box-office."

During the war Goebel was in the air and wireless service of the army and his knowledge of wireless and radio have helped a lot in his building of his own P. A. system which he uses during his organ solos. He was also demonstrator for the Robert Morton Organ Company and spent a good while learning everything there was to learn about organs. He also has opened and been featured in nearly every house on the Loew circuit.

No Limit to Number of Jobs of San Francisco Musicians

In the largest ballot in the history of the organized musicians in San Francisco, held in connection with the annual election of officers, members voted against a proposal to limit each to engagements paying $50 a week. Musicians may continue, by union rules, to hold as many jobs as they can. Many members of theatre orchestras now hold positions with cafe orchestras and other organizations.

Muriel Kay with Jack Lenny and another boy opened in a novelty dance, then the boy was on in a specialty tap dance, to light applause followed by Muriel Kay in a Spanish dance. Jack Lenny did a modernistic dance in full dress, top hat, then Ruth Sennett and the boy, and finally all together. This was presented as a radio broadcast.

Next came Hector and his dogs in comedy and tricks with running laughs and applause throughout, especially the youngsters. Masters and Grace presented "Her First Lesson," a comedy hokum act with dances and songs, the second part dealing with golf and Masters driving rubber balls into the audience.

Sophie Tucker got a tremendous hand. Accompanied by Ted Shapiro she sang "Your Reception Makes Me Feel at Home," "I'm the last of the Red Hot Mamas and I'm Getting Hotter All the Time," "No One But the Right Man Can Do Me Wrong," "I'm Doing Very Well the Way I Am," "Then Your Tears Won't Bring Him Back" and "Some of These Days," for encore. Finally they let her go after a curtain speech.

Charles Hill started with a monologue and piano work, detecting where songs come from in "The Song Thief," then was joined by Lora Hoffman who sang off key at first to gain comedy and then did "I Apologize" and "Lonely River," to big applause. The bill finished with the Stanley Brothers and Atrec in novelty trapeze work.

Doctor Cunning, master mentalist and magician, was a special added attraction in conjunction with the feature picture, "The Spider." Cunning recently completed a successful engagement at the Palace, where he was assisted by his secretary, R. Penny. His act consisted of many alluring feats of magic, including the animated hand, which answers "Yes" or "No" to the patrons' questions; mystery slate writing, addition of figures on a slate and the answer appearing on another slate on a stand upon the stage; and the suspended table that rises and lowers only with the touch of one's hands.

"Tintypes," the Fanchon & Marco idea, tears a few pages out of the long ago and gives the fans something outstanding, which is saying a bit because recently their batting average along this line has been high. "Tintypes" opens with the interior of an old-fashioned photographer's studio, the various acts being shown on the ground glass of the huge camera—upside down. A piece of studio background is shifted, showing the act dressed in clothes of half a century ago. The first line is dressed in loud clothes, the jackets of the ladies and the trousers on the men being of the same large plaid. Croquet costumes, they are called. They go through a fast routine with the mallets. The masculine half of the team of Pressler and Klaiss panics the crowd with his antics with piano stool and piano, after which he proves he can play. The other half sings with a nice blue voice. The Aaron sisters get by nicely, chanting some oldtime songs with decidedly Dixie voices. Harry Moore is back with his paper tearing, and Oscar Taylor uses his baritone voice to advantage while Marie Remington cuts capers on roller skates. The second half of the show is in an old-fashioned parlor, with all sitting around stiffly in clothes that were fashionable fifty years ago. An oldtime quadrille is executed by the line. For the last routine the line is on stilts and roller skates, and while the skating is slow it is neatly done.

Feverish New York night life, fringed with softeyed damsels on the lookout for solvent "sugar daddies," is reflected in all its glamorous rhythm in Fanchon and Marco's "Manhattan Idea." The crooning melodies, the exquisite dancers, the Sun Kist beauties, easy to look at both on and off stage, were all there, everything real New York except the bad gin and the headache. Although the costumes were exceptionally brief, to the point of daring, they but enhanced the piquancy of night club "floor shows." Everything contributed to this revue is smartly done. Jack Sidney with his "Sidelights of New York" made himself a singing favorite. Swor and Goode know their blackface nonsense, and put over a number of fast gag lines. A real novelty sensation is done by the Bruno Weise Trio. Jack Lester and the lithe Lucille round out one of the season's best stage offerings.

The stage show this week, featuring Russ Columbo and Lillian Roth, was called "Rhapsody in Stars," and was produced by Jack Partington.

Show opens with six beautiful show girls posed on a dais, under a sign with the name of Doris Ferris on it. Then the David Bines girls in bell-hop suits do a wand drill and dance. At the finish of this, Doris Ferris, who is seated on a white horse, jumps down and goes into a sedate waltz-toe routine and follows it with a difficult Russian-jazz-toe dance that gets her a good reception.

The Lomas troupe, two men and a prop horse, fill in with some laughable comedy and are followed by Lillian Roth, who makes her entrance through a portal bearing her name. She sings songs from pictures she had played in, in her usual pleasing manner and closed her act with a cute little dance routine. Her applause warranted an encore but she failed to take it. The Bines girls, in masks and comedy sailor suits offer a dance routine, which serves as introduction for the 5 Maxcellos, acrobats and rizzly artists, who perform their stunts in first class style. They used Merle Clark, house organist, for a comedy angle and certainly succeeded in getting plenty laughs for this. It was pretty tough on poor Merle though.

Russ Colombo, who is gaining in popularity daily, this week offers his songs, through two mikes, one on the dais on which he first stands and then down front on stage. Russ sings "My Song," "Good Night Sweetheart" and "With a Song in My Heart," and applause for each number is very good.

Doris Ferris, with the 12 Bines Girls as background, offers another toe routine which seemed to lack in spirit and grace. The Bines girls follow with a toe routine, done on lighted platforms.

A beautiful scene with all the members present closed this entertaining show.

Opening the vaudeville program was Ade Duval's "Rhapsody in Silk," very pleasing. Duval's sleight-of-hand tricks are all puzzling and served in fine style. The gaily colored silks used in this number give the bill a flashy hue. A mixed team assists with the props and handles them nicely.

In the duecer, Birnes and Kaye went over big with their comedy mixed in dancing and singing. They pulled in the laughs with their cross-fire and footwork.

The trey spot went to Karyl Norman and his able company, with Jerry Green tickling the ivories. The folks liked his showmanship ability.

Headlining the week's presentation were Harry Burns, the versatile comedian, and his three assistants. Burns' telephone conversation was especially funny and so was his balloon turn.

Detroit Hollywood

Week ending December 16

The bill at the Hollywood for the first half of the week is a striking example of what can be done with drape sets and three acts of vaudeville, provided the producer of the stage unit knows his business. Inasmuch as melody, color and action are the prime requisites of theatrical entertainment, the Hollywood bill is prime.

Eddie Loughton, standing in front of the Merrymakers, does his stuff in his usual fine manner. Like a lot of other performers, Eddie has his good weeks and his bad weeks—this is a good week. His introduction of acts is above par and the waving baton keeps the orchestra on its toes, especially during the specialty, "Mary," when the entire unit sings the number.

Roxy and Hess open the bill with an assortment of dance steps, ranging from a waltz (stage version) to fast taps. A bit more rehearsal and practice will put this team further along, and will greatly improve the class of their offering.

Betty and Jerry Brown, a chap with a guitar and a blonde (dizzy) girl who have a fast, clean line of chatter and gags that bring laughs, present an act good for any kind of audience.

Mack, Harold and Bobby, two men and a girl, close the show with fast action. They dance, they do falls, they gag and clown.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Fanchon and Marco's "Parasols Idea" opens with Mignone and Ray Angwin framed in a setting surrounded by members of the chorus garbed in pink costumes and carrying pink parasols. Mr. Angwin is a tenor and sings in a pleasing manner while the chorus performs and also while Mignone, acrobatic dancer, shows the audience what a clever control dancer can do. The young woman bends herself without a hitch and receives good applause.

Anthony, dressed as a cop, whistles several selections in connection with which he gives numerous bird call imitations and then whistles for the chorus, which appears as a bevy of nursemaids wheeling their baby buggies before them. Each girl takes her doll out of the buggy and puts it through an amusing series of dance steps.

Gene Sheldon and Sherry sing and clown. Miss Sherry—a striking blond, by the way—sings "Love Is Like That," "Alabamy Bound" and "That's Love," while Mr. Sheldon performs on the banjo in no uncertain fashion, accompanying her. He also dances and clowns in a pleasing manner.

The next number of the chorus is a striking one as all members go through their formations mounted on unicycles. One of the young women even goes so far as to give a solo exhibition mounted on one of these high rolling ciphers. The chorus performs in good style.

The big feature of the idea is Capt. Willie Mauss, the German war ace, who executes a splendid bicycle stunt within a huge crate ball, which is equipped with electric lights and looks much like a ferris wheel. He revolves at a speed of 50 miles per hour.

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing RKO) presented another of his popular "Singing Class" solos, which incorporated some of his unusually clever special versions of popular tunes. This solo opened with Bernie's usual salutation and then went into a special about happiness to the tune "Smiles." Following this came "River, Stay 'Way from My Door," "Nevertheless," "Cut Down the Old Pine Tree," "Comin' 'Round the Mountain," interspersed with this organist's inimitable chatter, and closed with his original daily verses on news of the day. Cowham is an institution at this house and no show would be complete to this audience, who think the world of him, if he did not offer his smart line of conversation and songs they enjoy singing.

BROWNIE (Charlottesville Paramount) presented a straight concert solo for Christmas week, incorporating all the well known holiday songs. Beautiful lighting effects enhanced the program, which consisted of "March of the Toys," "Toyland," "Silent Night" (this was nicely sung by a woman soloist), "Baby's Birthday Party" (played as a music box) "Jingle Bells," and "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers." The solo was very well presented and it was given an enthusiastic reception.

HERBIE (New Orleans Saenger) offers one of his usual song fests which registered heavily on Monday's show. Opening with a parody which told of his efforts to please the audience and of the letters he had received, he announced he would play requests from the various periods of popular song. Followed "Me and My Shadow," a tongue twister on "That's My Weakness Now," "The Stein Song," which got the audience singing in loud style, "You're Driving Me Crazy," and a closing number.

FRANKLIN BENTEL (Beaver Falls Rialto) presented one of the most original and entertaining solos since his engagement opened at this house. It was entitled "Mother" and was dedicated to the mother in the feature picture, "Over the Hill," currently playing here. Having as a background, the Whistler masterpiece, "Mother," the following songs were superimposed on it: "My Cradle Sweetheart," "Mother," "I Have a Sweetheart," "My Mother's Eyes" (this was sung very nicely by Bentel), closing with "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver." This presentation was very well received, and these entertainingly different solos are fast making Bentel very popular.

LOU BONDER (New York Park Plaza) acknowledged the requests of his audience and offered them their numbers, building up the solo with a continuity that was at once both humorous and entertaining. Each of the numbers played was a popular one, and local atmosphere was adhered to by his reading off the name of each person and his choice. Eight or ten numbers were offered and he explained he would save the remainder for a future request program.

AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) offered his novelty "So Long Winter," by playing while the explanation was flashed about leaving winter behind and toddling south with all singing "So Long, Winter." Then followed some more chatter and he played "Blue Kentucky," followed by more about the train going Southward and went into "Georgia On My Mind," then words about passing on the Florida express and played "It's Sleepy Time Down South," with audience and orchestra joining in at finale.

ROBERT G. CLARKE (Detroit Hollywood) makes a feature of the favorite sweetheart songs in his organ specialty. And to prove that theatre audiences like to sing, and even know the words of the majority of songs without their being flashed upon the screen, Clarke plays several numbers without the usual slides. The result is highly satisfactory. The numbers offered are "Sweethearts on Parade," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "I'd Love To Call You My Sweetheart," "You're a Real Sweetheart," "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," and finishing up with "Good Night Sweetheart." Clarke makes use of the horns and a hidden announcer, instead of the usual introductory slides, and obtains excellent results.

WILD OSCAR (Brooklyn Albee) was back in his stride this week and the enthusiastic way in which the audience, who compose Oscar's "School of Broadcasting," joined in the fun conclusively proves that the ten minutes allotted the organ solo is fully justified and necessary. Songs used were, "Some of these Days," "River Stay 'Way from My Door," a special request from the bass singers for "Asleep in the Deep," and a final chorus of "You Try Somebody Else." Oral gags and dialogue offered by Oscar got plenty of laughs and the response at the finish was very good.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio, Texas) recently offered a community singfest which he called This and That. For the first selection, Earl Abel rendered "Guilty." Then he announced that today was somebody's birthday so he played "Many Happy Returns of the Day." This was followed by a dandy new song hit, "One of Us Was Wrong," and "Love-letters in the Sand." After a little talk from this master musician about everything being so reasonable, he dished out "Now's the Time to Fall in Love," and closed with "Good-night Sweetheart."

MERLE CLARK AND ELSIE THOMPSON (Brooklyn Paramount) offered a Christmas singing novelty which proved very entertaining. Opening with a special chorus to a popular tune, something about their Christmas gift to the audience, Merle then told them of the songs they were giving as gifts. Their first number was a special to "Fall in Love," with "Call Me Darling," "Sleepy Time Down South," "Silent Night" (sung beautifully by Elsie), and a final chorus of "River Stay 'Way from My Door," following in this order. As Miss Thompson sang her number, all house lights were put out except a red spot. At close of solo, huge wreaths bearing the words "Merry Christmas" were lighted on the twin consoles, as the audience enthusiastically applauded.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee, Wisconsin) presented "Passing Parade," which included a number of old time favorites with the words flashed upon the screen. Numbers which the audience joined in singing included "Happy Days Are Here Again," "Poor Butterfly," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Yes, We Have No Bananas," and "My Blue Heaven."

MAC BRIDWELL (San Antonio Majestic) recently presented a special organlogue which he called "Presidential Possibilities," with the organist and audience staging a presidential election all their own. Among the songs that served as vehicles for parodies were "You Can't Stop Me from Lovin' You," "Let the Rest of the World Go By," "I Don't Know Why I Love You As I Do," "Sidewalks of New York."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

Once more the time is at hand to make resolutions and though I probably should make plenty of them, I am going to mention only one. And that is . . .

To give my utmost in service to organists, musical conductors, music publishers.

I shall start the new year out right by giving you all the list of changes I have at hand at present . . . Here they are . . . Here in New York things are just the same, but over the river, in Jersey City, Frank Albanese is the featured organist at the Stanley, and Dick Liebert is featured at Loew's Jersey . . . Banks Kennedy is now at the Palace, Stamford, Conn., while Al Forest is staying at the Roger Sherman, New Haven, even though the policy of the house was changed . . . Dick Betts is guest organist at the Warner in Batavia, New York, his home town . . . Down in Virginia, Art Brown, (now known as "Brownie") of the Paramount, Charlottesville, is getting along fine, as is Ann Melodie of the Paramount, Lynchburg . . . Ann is making a big name for herself both in the theatre and also on the air . . . From Beaver Falls, Pa., word comes that Franklin Bentel, who is featured at the Rialto, is broadcasting every Wednesday morning over radio station WWSW, Pittsburgh . . . Out in the Middle West, Art Thompson is at the Midland, Newark, Ohio . . . Oh, yes . . . Johnny Winters, who is back in Nashville, Tenn., at the new Paramount, is also playing over station WLAC, that city . . . Going still farther west, I hear that Billy Wright is being featured, plenty, at the only organ with a voice in Kansas City . . . Then up northwest of there, I understand that Ralph Jones (formerly known as Bob Bailey) is now at the Paramount, North Platte, Neb. . . . Still farther out, "Guss" Francis Farney (who is also an aviator now) is at the console of the Paramount, Salt Lake City . . . while Larry McCann is at the Paramount, Seattle . . . Going down the coast, I learn that Ted Crawford, formerly of the Warner Granada, Santa Barbara, is now at the Oxnard Theatre, Oxnard, Cal. . . . By the time I returned here, I have found out that the Riverside, this city, has a young South American by the name of Don Carlos.

Before I close this week's pillar I just want to mention the swell luncheon Jack Glogau, general manager of Shapiro, Bernstein, gave to the "gang" at their offices in the Capitol theatre Building, the day before Christmas . . . I think I was the only outsider there and I must say that I'm sure they all had a great time . . . I know I did . . .

I'll close with a sincere wish that 1932 will be your most prosperous and happiest year.

ED DAWSON

Cantor On Air Until Jan. 17

Eddie Cantor, under contract to star in motion pictures, will continue over an NBC network until January 17. The additional two broadcasts were made possible by vaudeville engagements in the Middlewest.

Dunn to Play Vaudeville

James Dunn, Fox player, has arrived in New York for the start of a vaudeville tour which will last six to eight weeks before returning to the Coast to begin "Have a Heart," with Janet Gaynor.

THE EMBLEM OF RCA PERFECT SOUND
PHOTOPHONE
INC. SOUND EQUIPMENT

J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE EN ROUTE.

"My dear "J. C.":

In your travels throughout the West, upon and outside the beaten path, you probably get more real inside information from exhibitors than anybody else. I am told they pay a lot of attention to your advice and in my opinion, it is reasonable to assume that they should. You know them and are familiar with their problems. And as is the rule with the great mass of exhibitors, their problems are numerous. Oftentimes, however, the problems that confront them today are the result of error. Inferior sound reproducing equipment and inferior servicing following installation have caused more grief among exhibitors than anything else since sound was introduced. And when you have inefficient apparatus in the first place and poor service afterwards, what can you expect other than trouble? In addition to manufacing and distributing what is claimed to be the best sound reproducing equipment available today, RCA Photophone, Inc., maintains conveniently located service depots in all parts of the country. Competent service engineers are available at all times and each depot carries a complete supply of spare parts of all kinds to meet any emergency. Exhibitors who install RCA Photophone apparatus are given every possible protection against performance interruption. We take great pride in the efficiency of our Installation and Service department.

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH

P. S.—Here's something to substantiate what I've asserted above. Forty-six theatres in Ireland operated for six months without a single interruption. The apparatus? RCA Photophone, of course.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Sacramento, Cal.

DEAR HERALD:

We don't know much about the Spanish language, but if "Sacramento" is a cuss-word in that lingo, the town ought to be ashamed of herself for not adopting some kind of an American name.

If any of you theatre boys are troubled with a weak heart or spasms of dizziness, we want to give you a little advice. Don't drive the Roosevelt highway from Reedsport, Ore., to Uriah, Cal., unless your insurance premiums are all paid up and you have a longing to die young and not wait for old age, for there are spots on that highway that will make you think of every mean thing you ever did.

There is another thing that will surprise you, too, and that is to find as many beautiful theatres along this highway as there are, and also as many swell managers. We supposed that when we got over into the jungles on the Pacific coast the theatres would be made out of logs and have clapboard roofs and the front doors would have latches and strings and have wooden benches to sit on. That is what comes from a fella not having good sense. G. McPherson of the Holly theatre at Reedsport is an all right guy who knows the show business from the ground up. He didn't tell us this but we learned it by hearing him talk.

Robert Marsden, Jr., of the Egyptian at Marshfield has been in the show business for twenty-four years and likes it. We didn't wonder at it for he has a beautiful theatre but cusses a little when he talks about the kind of service he has to run.

Denny Hull of the Liberty at North Bend was away duck hunting when we called, which made us pretty doggone sore because he went away without taking us along. Our niece, Glen Burton, used to tickle the ivories for Denny's patrons and we especially wanted to see him because of that. Doggone you, boy, stay at home next time.

J. B. Endret and Son of the Endret theatre at Crescent City, Cal., made us feel ashamed of ourself for not calling on them long ago. Sometimes the boys do that. The Endret theatre is a beautiful house and serves the patrons of Crescent City as well as the Roxy could. Nobody need care for a better theatre than this one, and no managers ever gave closer attention to the comfort of their patrons than do these gentlemen.

J. A. McClain manages the Hughes-Franklin houses in Eureka. Every Hughes-Franklin manager we have run across has been a high-class gentleman and has shown us every courtesy, for which we feel deeply grateful, and Mr. McClain is no exception. It's no wonder that the Hughes-Franklin houses are popular with the people.

Another bunch of chain house managers we called on and found to be regular fellows were Bob Covington of the State theatre at Oroville, Wm. Glacklin of the California at Sacramento, B. Muller of the Lodi Theatre at Lodi, all belonging to the T. & D. Jr. chain of houses.

Bob Covington said to us when we called: "Well, whatja know about that, here's the old guy himself." Bob is a regular fellow and swears by the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, which he ought to do if he swears at all.

Wm. Glacklin presides over a beautiful theatre and has the finest equipped booth we have ever seen, which is due, no doubt, to two of the best operators that California can boast of. Mr. Moore, one of the operators and an enthusiastic HERALD fan, was out of town and we didn't get to meet him. There's where both of us lost out, but the loss was partially made up by the courtesy we received from Mr. Glacklin. We wish there were more like them, there should be.

Mr. Muller has recently taken over the management of the Lodi at Lodi. He expressed his pleasure in meeting us, which was an indication that they can't palm off rotten apples on Muller, he knows a good article when he sees it, so do we, and Muller is it. The T. & D. circuit have no reason to complain of their managers, and we'll bet they don't.

S. Slissman is still operating the Rex at Oroville. We had the pleasure of meeting his sister and mother at the theatre and we could tell at a glance that they were related to Slissman because they were such delightful folks. You can't mistake 'em. Cy Graves has recently opened the Oak Park theatre at Oak Park Station, Sacramento. We told Cy that he needed the HERALD and he agreed with us, that's why he is now in the HERALD fambly. Here's hoping Cy makes 'er go, and we're betting he will.

W. R. Wilsey had a fire in his theatre at Williams the Wednesday before we called, but we found him busy making repairs and getting ready to open the following Saturday. The fire destroyed the most of the booth and front end of the theatre, besides 2,000 feet of film. The house was only partially covered by insurance.

Ben M. Giroux (pronounce it just as you durn please) is the manager of the National at Marysville. Ben is a regular guy and he has been in the business so long that he says Columbus and Marc Antony used to peddle bills for him. He is one of those old "legit" boys who can't get it out of his system. He used to troupe with "The Bird of Paradise" back in the days when Maude Adams and Henrietta Crossman used to tell what a ham actress Lottie Crabtree was. If you meet Ben once you will want to meet him again, and we don't blame you.

Ned Steel operates the Colusa theatre at Colusa and a house in Arbuckle. Ned says he doesn't agree with all we say. He thinks some of our stuff is pretty punk. We think so too and that makes it unanimous.

But doggone that C. C. Kaufman of the Gem theatre at Colusa. He tried to get us to stay over and go duck hunting with him when he knew we had a fambly to support by the sweat of April Shower's radiator and yet he had the nerve to put that kind of a proposition up to us just to see us squirm. Why, oh why didn't Columbus turn back before he got over here? Just see the grief that Hoosier has caused.

J. C. JENKINS,
The HERALD Man

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

THE WISECRACK PLAGUE

THE wisecrack of the talking screen has assumed the proportions of a plague. This mania of verbal banalities and abominations is most malodorously in evidence in the flood of ill-made shorts which have muddled the market of the current season. There has been a healthy increase in the output of quality shorts, but it has been all but obscured by a rush to short production by minor production forces eliminated from the drama by the economic pressures of sound and by semi-amateur entrepreneurs from the fringing horde which is always seeking to "break into the movies." The short is a quick, and often painfully cheap, method of relieving that cinema urge, much to the detriment of the art and the industry the while.

The wisecrack, alleged, which may be excavated from the lore of the centuries and the ancient mud flats of vaudeville, is now being extensively brought to the aid of a flood of nondescript, mongrel, misfit and junk negative which should long ago have been on its way to the reduction plant and the varnish works.

The newsreels are being wisecracked, in all known dialects and languages except English. The scenics are being wisecracked and little wits are getting funny about the Seven Seas, the Alps and all the majestic works of God Almighty. The adventure pictures are being wisecracked by funny men who were not among those present. The exploration pictures are being wisecracked by youngsters whose main ability is to get a steamship pass and keep out of work in the name of romance of which they impart none.

A long time ago, in the once famous Outing Chester scenics, Katherine Hilliker, in glib titles with a merry twist, started a screen trend. A flood of tinsel imitators came along in the years after, but happily those were the days of silent pictures and titles did not have to be read. When sound came, shorts went vaudeville regardless of all fitness and with that epidemic unanimity which is always so amazing in the picture world. In sound there is one Will Rogers, philosopher-and-Democrat-at-large. There is one Graham McNamee with the mass viewpoint of interest supremely crystallized. There is one Floyd Gibbons eternally burning with a synthetic but infectious excitement and yearning for the last drop of drama, or maybe it is the last dramatic drop. And there is, alack, a chattering locust flock of transient cinema raconteurs, commentators and soliloquizers too obnoxious to mention.

The world is not so funny, or else it is too much funnier. The wisecrack industry is bankrupt.

FOR ITS OWN SAKE

IT is to be observed that in most of the industries and all of the arts persons creatively engaged are in thought and activity generally far removed from the commercial and financial operations of the institution. One cannot well imagine a Steinmetz or a Langmuir of General Electric worrying much about the state of the stock market or who was to be president, vice president or general manager of General Electric. Mr. Wells probably is not sitting up nights about the directorate of Doubleday-Doran. The grey in the shaggy head of Mr. Frank Lloyd Wright did not come of worries about the building trades and their troubles. Mr. Eugene O'Neill's knitted brow was not knitted over the woes of Broadway. America's greatest automotive engineer does not know there is a motor industry. He builds one car at a time.

The stock ticker and home office politics are not factors of interest to the creative mind, to men blazing with the enthusiasms and interests of their work, busy, not at holding their jobs, but filling them. Somewhere in this there is, mayhap, a moral which might just possibly apply to the motion picture and the current but dangerously near chronic condition of mind which besets those bearing the burden of creative leadership.

Every great job in the world has been a one-man job—one man afire with the zeal of creation, interested in nothing else, sacrificing all else. Griffith was in the glow of such a flame in the making of "The Birth of a Nation." George Loan Tucker felt that way about "The Miracle Man." There was more than a glint of it in Jesse Lasky's enthusiasm which delivered "The Covered Wagon."

Presently somewhere, it may be among the great and the famous, or among the humbly obscure, a man will come who will make a motion picture because he wants to make it, and for no other reason, and it will be a great picture.

WAIT FOR THE GONG

UP in New England the Master Motion Picture Bureau of Boston is offering for sale to exhibitors a trailer, price $3.25 each, to present screen opposition to the proposed federal admission tax. Now it is rather well known that no bill has yet been introduced in Washington and that the fight can not be started until someone knows what the fight is about. There is considerably more enterprise than discretion in this premature trailer. It is just possible that conditions may be such that there will be no occasion for going to the public with a trailer at all. This is in sum a scheme to sell some bits of film, not a campaign for the rescue of the industry.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

IDLE HANDS

THE DISPATCH of COLUMBUS in OHIO feels that it has discovered that as the motion picture has acquired sound the audience has acquired silence. It remembers the glad hands of other days, thus:

Until just a few years ago, the accepted method of expressing appreciation for a performer's ability was to slap the hands together vigorously. For the benefit of the younger generation, let us explain that this process was known as "applauding." It was practiced at the finish of a well-rendered song or a satisfying act of a play; used to greet favorite players in the theatre upon their first appearance, reward dancers for exceptionally clever steps or express approval of a speaker's sentiments. Its uses were many and varied, but its principal utility was to give audiences an outlet for their emotions.

Why is it that applause is so seldom heard these days and when it is forthcoming, it usually is half-hearted? The answer, we believe, is mechanical entertainment. The motion picture and the radio have largely supplanted the personal appearances of human performers of all types and one does not applaud a machine.

Something of the joy of the theatre and auditorium has been lost by this change and as one who sighs in vain for a more glamorous day of theatre-going, we can only hope that eventually it will return. But, alas, while hoping for that, we also are compelled to hope for things more worth applauding than that which remains of so-called "flesh" entertainment in these days of decadent art.

FREE CRITICS

THE HERALD-TRIBUNE of New York, under the heading of "Free Criticism of the Drama," editorially ventures some interesting advice to Equity. One can not but be reminded in this discussion of the policy of the Shubert management in dealing with the newspaper critics—and the ultimate achievements of the Shubert organization in the amusement field. The editorial follows:

In attempting to secure the elimination from legitimate Broadway theatres of "the dramatic critic who exploits himself in his reviews instead of giving a fair appraisal of the production he is criticizing," Equity, the official publication of the Actors' Equity Association, would appear to have bitten off a bit more than it can discreetly chew. As a guild representing the professional actors of the American stage, Equity feels that it has a legitimate quarrel with "that school of professional journalism—with that type of critic who is more concerned with making amusing remarks or displaying an original personality than he is with weighing the worth of the play and the actors placed before him." Equity would curb these insincere commentators on the drama by closing the theatres to them.

To point out that in such a suggestion Equity is resorting to the tactics of the individual disgruntled producer who is miffed by the writings of an individual critic is an obvious comment, but it only partially answers the problem presented by dramatic criticism in general. Any sort of curb or barrier erected against even the most flippant of critics must necessarily and in the end militate against the integrity of free criticism as an institution. To exclude critics admittedly bent on self-exploitation (even if those falling into this category could be agreed upon) would be a wedge later to be driven home against any critic who has offended any actor or producer.

Despite the irritation occasionally caused by insincere criticism and despite even the harm that it may do to the theatre as a public institution, Equity would be well advised to tolerate the utmost liberty in the reviewer's field and not resort to a program which would only further confuse and complicate an already confusing and delicate problem.

HECHT'S ART!

THE STAR of KANSAS CITY is not exactly devastated by the loss of Mr. Ben Hecht's service to the motion picture, as announced in his recent exchange of courtesies with Mr. Samuel Goldwyn. Under a heading of "Sad Satiety" it editorially remarks:

Ben Hecht, said to be a "novelist-playwright," has become disgusted with the movies. He has quit 'em. Quitting 'em, he has said all the hard things about 'em he could think of to say. Samuel Goldwyn, retorting for the movies, has said all the hard things he could think of to say about Mr. Hecht.

With these sayings we are not concerned. They are overmuch personal. They betray wounded feelings, animosities, a mutual desire to injure. They are but sparks that fly from the wheel of their whirling emotions.

But what set the wheel going? That is what we are concerned with. On Mr. Hecht's part it was, we are inclined to believe, his discovery that the movies are not art. Mr. Hecht, as everybody knows, is a stickler for art forms. He writes "novels" on his thumbnail. They reflect "life" as the pulp magazines conceive it to be.

With these high ideas of art in literature Mr. Hecht must necessarily have been shocked at the revelations of Hollywood. What he saw wasn't art. Naturally he shrank from it, and naturally expressed his disapproval in correct art forms, designating producers as "crazy guys" and their artists as "squawking hams."

Mr. Goldwyn, on his part, very likely discovered what a great many persons could have told him virtually without cost to the movies, to-wit, that Mr. Hecht had nothing to contribute to that industry. Neither instruction, entertainment nor ideas.

Naturally they parted, disillusioned. Too bad their mutual discoveries had to be at cost to Mr. Hecht's artistic soul and Mr. Goldwyn's pocket.

SLIP-OVERS

THE AMERICAN PRESS, a newspaper business journal, is somewhat annoyed by Mr. Douglas Fairbanks' reference to Camel cigarets and like matters in his "Around the World in Eighty Minutes." It says:

. . . We are not particularly concerned with the effort of the movie producers to slip something over on the exhibitors, for which the exhibitors get nothing, but we are concerned with their gall in asking newspapers to give free publicity to pictures which are distinctly advertising media. The movies have it all over the newspapers in that they are not required by law to label advertising as advertising, while the newspapers are. . .

CURTAILMENT BY LARGER STUDIOS PROMPTS INDEPENDENTS TO EXPAND

150 to 200 Features Already Lined Up to Fill Big Gap by Revision of Programs of National Units

By LEO MEEHAN

Unusually active interest in independent production in Hollywood is manifest, now that a sharp curtailment of output from the larger studios is in prospect. Despite tight financial conditions, plans have been actually laid for between 150 and 200 independent features, and a considerable number of short subjects, most of which will reach exhibitors through state right exchanges during the coming year. There are probably as many more "on paper," which will be made wholly or in part, providing the producers can secure necessary capital.

Much is likely to depend upon the returns received from pictures made during the past two or three months and for the first quarter of 1932. It is definitely known there is capital watching independent possibilities, and it is expected the purse strings will loosen in the event the market seems able to profitably absorb a reasonable amount of such product. Financiers, however, are proceeding with extreme caution in spite of the importunities of producers and would-be producers who at the moment are expending much energy in painting rosy pictures of the clean-up prospects of the independent market.

See Good Market for Westerns

Westerns will constitute a substantial portion of the independent product, naturally. While the larger companies occasionally film feature Westerns, the less expensive ones are done almost entirely by "outside" producers and distributed through state right exchanges. Hollywood producers and their New York connections report an active interest in westerns, with a good market for those which can be made for reasonable money.

Trem Carr, for example, proposes to increase his 1932 program of westerns from 16 to 24, to be released through Monogram exchanges. Carr has been one of the most consistently successful independent operators. In addition to his westerns he announces he will make 20 melodramas in the coming year, an increase of eight over last year. The westerns will again feature Tom Tyler in one series and Bill Cody and Andy Shuford in another. This makes a total of 44 features in sight from the Carr organization.

Another ambitious independent program has been laid out by Allied Pictures under leadership of M. H. Hoffman and M. H. Hoffman, Jr. Hoffman announces they expect to produce about 30 pictures during 1932. These will include the balance of the series of "Stage Classics," the first of which is ready for distribution, "File 113." It is probable that "Vanity Fair" will be next, followed by "Parisian Romance," "Anna Karenina," "Iron Master" and "Madam Bonary." Allied expects to follow this with another series of six along similar lines. This concern also has signed Monte Blue for a series of eight, and will continue with Hoot Gibson, who will make eight westerns in 1932 against six last year. The Hoffman organization is also prepared to make at least two specials during the year, which may be roadshown.

12 Willis Kent Pictures

Willis Kent Productions proposes to make 12 pictures on the 1932-33 program, in addition to finishing the present program, with seven to go between now and early spring. Six of the new season's releases will be Westerns featuring Lane Chandler, and six will be melodramas.

Empire Pictures announces six action melodramas, featuring Charles Hutchinson.

Henry Goldstone, brother of Phil Goldstone, has announced the signing of Jack Hoxie to do a series of six for him. Charles Rogers, former production chief at RKO Pathe, is understood to be negotiating with Phil Goldstone for the creation of a new independent unit.

The several independent units headed by George W. Weeks of Sono-Art, also plan an expansion of production activities for next season. Action Pictures is the largest of the group.

Big Four Pictures, headed by John R. Freuler and one of the largest of present-day independent organizations, will turn out four Bob Custers, five Buzz Bartons, both Western groups, and six melodramas to complete the current schedule. Immediately after, the company will launch a new series of 12 Westerns, 12 melodramas and two specials.

Bromberg Plans 12 Westerns

Hollywood hears that A. C. Bromberg of Atlanta, a successful independent exchange operator, will arrive in Hollywood during January, and will immediately set to work on plans to make at least 12 Westerns. These he proposes to market himself through his own and allied independent distributors.

Sol Lesser, independent producer of silent days, is back in production since leaving Universal. Lesser owns the rights to a number of valuable properties, including several Harold Bell Wright stories. He has already announced a sound version of "Peck's Bad Boy," to be made probably in February, and he is handling several exploration pictures, including a Zane Grey fishing expedition to the South Seas in which the author appears and talks personally, and the pictures made by the last MacMillan Arctic expedition. He also plans to do Wright's story, "When a Man's a Man."

Novelty production angles will feature the program laid out by Dr. O. A. Peters of Gold Seal. Dr. Peters is the inventor of the "Psychephone," a process in which the camera takes the place of an actor, or rather, becomes an actor, so that the audience sees and hears as a part of the cast. Gold Seal is already making plans for three features and a series of two-reel shorts.

Richard Talmadge plans to continue production for the independent market. He still has three to make for the present season, after which he will decide definitely upon the extent of his activities for the new season.

Nat Levine will continue with his Mascot Productions program, which will include four serials and four features.

Supreme Pictures will continue the Harry Carey series. Two have already been made, with six more to come.

Bryan Foy, a pioneer director of talking pictures under the Vitaphone banner, has leased and equipped studios in Culver City, where he will produce several series of short subjects and may, at a later date, expand to feature length films.

Premier Attractions, headed by Morris Schlank, is preparing to do a series of 12 "class" melodramas, and are already in active preparation. These will be done at Tiffany studios.

G. H. Bowles Heads New Concern

One of the newest independent concerns is Standard Pictures, headed by George H. Bowles. This concern has taken over the old California studios, has made a large number of improvements, equipped for sound recording, and is preparing an ambitious program. Bowles reports that the company will do several features and three series of short subjects, 12 to each. One of these is a series of comedies featuring Nat Carr, another a series of shorts in Multicolor, and a series of musical shorts, which it is planned to make in Technicolor.

Another independent with a large program planned for 1932 is Ralph Like, who is preparing to do 24 melodramas. This company already has engaged Glen Tryon, Blanche Mehaffey, Rex Lease and Vera Reynolds to appear in a number of these attractions, and will cast others as they go into production.

Others' Schedules Awaited

Among the other independents who plan to make subjects, feature or short, during the year, but who have not yet announced definite schedules are: Douglas Dawson with the horse, Silver King; C. C. Reid Productions with the Burns Detective series; Nat Ross, Spencer Bennett, C. C. Burr, James Cruze Productions, Chesterfield Productions, Larry Darmour, Rudolph Flothow, Liberty Productions, headed by Herman Gumbin; Patrician Productions, Benny Ziedman, Peerless Productions, Webb-Douglas Productions, Robert E. Welsh and others.

This outline of independent activity only takes into consideration the pictures which will be distributed very largely through state right exchanges, or other means of independent distribution. In addition to these, of course, there are independent producers who release through the major companies, including such concerns as Harold Lloyd, the Christies, Mack Sennett and several others.

Hollywood Producers Report Good Market for Westerns; Financial Backers Await Box-Office Returns on Late Films

NEW CHIEF OF THEATRE OPERATION EXPECTED AS NEXT MOVE IN RKO

Schnitzer to Remain as President, With Headquarters in New York, Trade Understands; Marcus Coast Liaison Officer

The RKO pot continued to simmer merrily this week with many rumors, many conferences, and here and there a bit of clarification by action. It became known late in the week that the movement which placed Martin Beck of Orpheum fame into the vaudeville aspects of the picture was also likely to place a new chief in charge of theatre operations.

Joseph I. Schnitzer, president of Radio Pictures, arrived within the week from the Coast and went into conferences. It was accepted as settled that he was to remain in his post as president and operate from New York. Some eighteen months ago Mr. Schnitzer relinquished active operation in New York to go to the Coast to take charge of production.

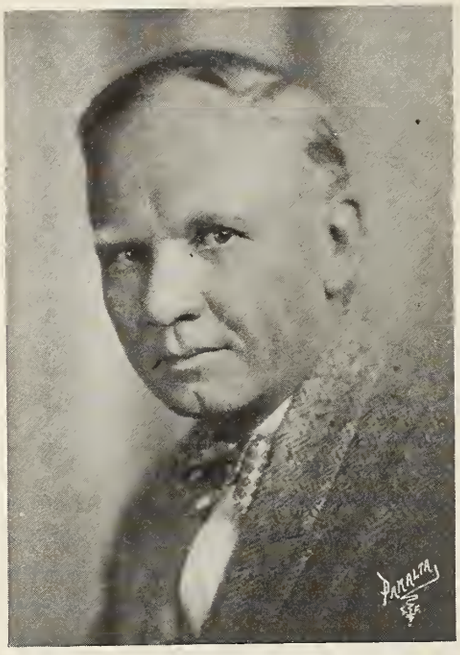
Marcus Liaison Officer

Lee Marcus, president of RKO Pathe, who has functioned as general manager of Radio Pictures since the consolidation, for operating purposes of the two companies, left this week for the Coast and it was semi-officially understood that he was to operate as a liaison officer between New York and Hollywood.

Meanwhile it became known that Frank Whitbeck, formerly exploitation, advertising and publicity director of Fox West Coast theatres, had been employed by Hiram Brown, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, to assume general charge of like operations for Radio.

The current Broadway and inner circle gossip had it heavily that Harold B. Franklin was to become head of the theatre department for RKO, a report which Mr. Franklin denied with considerable vigor. Meanwhile with equal fluency the name of E. V. Richards of New Orleans, and who is so fond of the Southland he would not accept New York as a gift, freight paid, was mentioned for the post.

Mr. Richards, according to the long twining grapevine, had a conference running into midnight hours with RKO on Tuesday night.



Policy of "No Relatives"

It was permitted to become known, most exceedingly unofficially, that the company was adopting a sharply defined policy of "no relatives." In sequel came the discontinuance of Abe Schnitzer, short subject sales manager, Cleve Adams, Pittsburgh branch manager and formerly a Western Division manager, and Earl Kramer, sales manager of the British subsidiary, and, according to report, Louis Brock, a short subjects producer in Hollywood.

Whitbeck, who is en route to New York from Los Angeles, will set about as chief to coordinate efforts of the various publicity, advertising, exploitation and press relations departments of RKO theatre and picture divisions. "Much effort now is being lost in publicity-advertising affairs," said an RKO executive in discussing Whitbeck's proposed duties, "and it is the intention of the management to coordinate efforts of the various units so that the division is placed on a highly efficient basis." At present, Hy Daab is in charge of all advertising, exploitation and publicity for the picture units; Jack Hess occupies a similar post in the theatre subsidiary; Mark Luescher is special publicity representative and Emil Orowitz supervises vaudeville exploitation.

It was explained by an important executive at RKO that progress in reconstructing a new executive setup has been delayed because the company had to concentrate on new financing, but with financial worries eliminated, all effort is being centered on the rehabilitation of its personnel, executive and otherwise. Discussions are understood to have been continued this week with minority leaders for an amicable readjustment of an executive setup and although the only official changes announced to date have been Beck's appointment and the resignation of Charles R. Rogers as RKO Pathe production director, it was stated that decision has been made to create a post of liaison officer for Lee Marcus, who will work on the West Coast.

"Nothing definite has been done with regards a complete executive setup," it was said, "although it appears certain at the moment that Joseph Schnitzer will assume operating control of both Radio and RKO Pathe at the home office in New York." Brown is president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, parent company.

chosen to coordinate the work of the various publicity, advertising, exploitation and press relations departments of RKO theatre and picture divisions, was director of advertising and publicity for Fox West Coast Theatres until his resignation some months ago. Whitbeck was born in the East, at Rochester, N. Y., the son of P. Charles and Catherine Whitbeck.

Whitbeck to Coördinate Publicity, Advertising, Exploitation, and Press Relations, as Chief; Personnel Changes Made

Earl W. Kramer, in charge of Radio sales in England, has resigned. There will be no replacement. Charles Rosenzweig, Eastern general sales manager, said yesterday that Adams and Schnitzer both will be replaced, but not immediately.

P. J. Scollard, a former Pathe Exchange vice president, resigned from RKO this week, and Charles E. Sullivan, likewise a former Patheite, joined the West Coast studio forces as an associate producer.

C. D. White has resigned as manager of the Radio studios in Hollywood. He will be succeeded by Val Paul until arrival of Hiram Brown. Max Ree has also left the company and has been replaced by Carl Clarke.

RKO's London affiliate, RKO-Associated Radio Pictures, has secured 50 per cent of needed financing to continue production in London. The remainder will be provided by RKO interests in America, which have at their disposal for distribution in the United States all features made by the British subsidiary.

Boyd's Charges Answered

In a demurrer and answer filed at Baltimore on Monday, the corporation denied the allegations of J. Cookman Boyd and Jacob Feigerbaum that the special stockholders' meeting held in December was illegal because of recesses in counting proxies. At the meeting, stockholders approved a plan of refinancing which a minority group now claim to be objectionable.

On Wednesday, the circuit court at Baltimore granted Boyd, who is a Baltimore lawyer and stockholder in Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, permission to examine and count the proxies taken at the December meeting. This was to be done Thursday.

Beck Conservative In Palace Policies

Conservative operating policies are being placed in effect at the Palace theatre, New York, this week, by Martin Beck, former president of the Orpheum Circuit, who has been given operating authority over the theatre.

Strictly conservative and restrained advertising styles will be followed both in newspapers and at the theatre, in accordance with Beck's instructions issued this week. The use of colors in lobby and theatre front advertising at the Palace comes under new bans, as does the use of

FOX 'COMEBACK' THROUGH TRI-ERGON AND INCLUDES WAR OVER HIS PATENTS

Belief Is Expressed That Former Chief Sponsored Rumors Of Return to Production To Cover Patent Fight

Developments within the week revealed new strategies by which William Fox, the silent man of mystery in the film world for the last year, is presently to emerge in a bold drive to collect patent tribute from the whole industry from studio to theatre.

Through his control of the Tri-Ergon patents, Mr. Fox, the historic foe of the onetime great Motion Picture Patents Company, has now become himself a motion picture patents company with purposes and plans as broad in scope as those of the "trust" against which he fought with force, finesse and injunction all the way from Fourteenth street to the White House in the bitter, violent days of 1910-14.

Interests which are close to intimates of William Fox and which are in possession of full details of Fox's "secret" plans are the authority which definitely establishes for the first time the nature of a scheme by which he hopes to attack practically every company in the industry and through vigorous court action seek to collect large sums.

It is believed in certain important film quarters that Fox has caused to be circulated stories which stated that he planned a production-distribution comeback in order to cover up the preliminary moves of his patent campaign.

Statements made in Los Angeles this week by Joe Leo, Fox's brother-in-law, in which Leo states Fox "will be engaged in every branch of the business—production, distribution and exhibition"—are smiled upon by executives who are familiar with the provisions of contractual relations between Fox and the Chase banking interests which have him tied up for three years more so that his direct participation in the picture business, other than with the Fox Film companies, is impossible; and the possibility of Fox taking an active part in the management of the Fox corporations is held to be quite remote.

Current reports, heard on numerous occasions over a period of several months, that Fox would rejoin his old company, by purchase or otherwise, were termed "fairy tales" by Edward R. Tinker, Fox Film president. In commenting on another report that the corporation had defaulted in its agreement to pay Fox $500,000 yearly for five years, Tinker said: "The situation between Mr. Fox and the company remains unchanged."

The fact that Fox is the possessor of a large fortune was admitted by those who discussed his Tri-Ergon plans. It is not definitely known exactly how far his financial holdings extend, estimates reaching as high as $50,000,000, a considerable part of which was gained in an extensive short-selling movement in which he is said to have been active in recent months. Fox was reputed to have several millions at the time of his deal with Harley L. Clarke for sale of the Fox companies, which also brought him many additional millions.

"The accumulation of an interesting bankroll and the recent victorious decision upholding his Tri-Ergon patents has made Fox quite 'cocky'," remarked one insider who is familiar with Fox's plans. "He even believes he can take all the electrics into camp for violation of these sound patents."

When Fox secured a ruling at Washington last November by which Judge Jesse Adkins, of supreme court, ordered the U. S. Patent Office to grant patents to Tri-Ergon, the unit immediately filed suit against Electrical Research Products, RCA Photophone, Paramount Publix and Radio-Keith-Orpheum, and notified 100 other motion picture companies that it intended to sue them for infringement unless all acquired Tri-Ergon licensees and paid royalties.

Two patents are involved, one known as the "flywheel" patent, which relates to certain methods and apparatus for uniformly moving the sound record film under the control of inertia, either in recording or reproducing machines, and in utilizing sound controlled light in translating the sound to or from a film record. This patent also involves the photoelectric cell when used with such reproducing apparatus, as is now the general practice. The second patent relates to the process for producing combined sound and picture film by photographing the sound and pictures on separate films so that they may be developed separately, and then printing both records side-by-side on a single film.

Fox, it is understood, plans to acquire theatre properties in strategically located sections of the country as the basis of a legal battle which he plans to launch soon against theatres, seeking injunctions to prevent their operation on the grounds of violating his Tri-Ergon patent holdings. By so doing he hopes to collect royalties from theatres, too.

LOW ORGAN NOTE— POOF! GOES BULB

It costs Loew's theatre, Louisville, 30 cents or 85 cents every time Haden H. Reed, the star operator of the organ, hits into certain low notes on the console, says a story in a Louisville newspaper. It is pointed out that a heavy loss ratio of electrical globes within the theatre, following observation and tests made with many eyeing a given section of lights, had shown that when certain notes were struck, the vibration set up in the globes would break the filament.

Walter McDowell, manager, was quoted as saying there were approximately 20,000 bulbs in the theatre, the life of each being figured at 1,000 light hours. About 2,000 bulbs have their duration cut in half due to proximity to the organ chambers, while 50 per cent of the others are affected in proportion to their distance from the organ pipes. Normal vibration is figured to knock off lamps at an average of one every ten minutes of the day, but when the deep notes are boomed, they go out in threes and fives.

Haden Reed, the organist, remarked that in a test a new light globe on an extension cord lasted less than five minutes when placed on one of the 32-foot tubes.

AN ANSWER TO SAMUEL GOLDWYN

An Exhibitor Applies Some Arithmetic To Show That Demand, Not Supply, Still Rules

By PHILIP RAND
Owner, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho

Philip Rand, owner and manager of the Rex theatre at Salmon, Idaho, is a close student of the industry, particularly in the light of the small theatre, as is attested by his frequent observations published in the HERALD. In the accompanying article, Mr. Rand analyzes the theories of Mr. Samuel Goldwyn in the December 26 issue, and finds points of agreement—and disagreement.

The years 1930-31 have been filled with strange theories in political economy, when the old laws of supply and demand were set at naught until a great depression showed the fallacy of such thinking. Now in 1932 comes Mr. Samuel Goldwyn to set forth a new revolutionary economic theory: that "the theatre must adjust to Supply not to Demand."

This caption sounds very intriguing, but has it validity? Let us turn to our arithmetic. If eight producing companies, say, should each make 20 outstanding pictures a year and only those totaling 160 pictures, should be shown in our large cities at the rate of two shows a week, we would need only one to two theatres to consume the output; if shown for a week, we would need three theatres; if shown for two weeks, we would need six theatres; or if shown for a month's run we would need 13 theatres. Perhaps this right here explains the over-seating fiasco of last year—not too many theatres, but too few big pictures. Think it over!

The number of theatres is not dependent on the supply but upon the public demand, for if eight companies could make only 20 real pictures, then, as I have said, it would take 13 theatres to handle the entire 160 wonderful productions; the patrons would find in the entire city three good pictures a week to view: whereas 160 poor pictures a year might need only one or two theatres, showing two or three changes a week, and these theatres doubtless would finally have to close down for want of patronage.

In 1931 I ran 156 pictures; the demand fell off so, that I now run at the rate of 104 a year, yet the supply of pictures is greatest now since the advent of the talkers.

It must seem obvious that the theatre does adjust itself to the public demand, which is just contrary to the assertion of Mr. Goldwyn. This has again proved itself conclusively in the last month. I lost heavily on eight plays because they were poor plays; I made on three plays because they were extra fine. Depression accentuated loss of attendance on the poor ones and depression did not hurt business on the outstanding ones.

Mr. Goldwyn also states that "it was the pictures which built the theatre and that it is only the picture that can maintain the theatre." Of what theatres is Mr. Goldwyn speaking? Before the first film was ever shown, all through the breadth of the United States, every town of 1,000 and upward had its Opera House. These so-called opera houses were built for entertainment purposes only, and to satisfy the demand came legitimate stage dramas, roadshows, home talent plays, minstrels, vaudeville, dances, special programs, basketball, hockey, prize fights and whatnot; but it was entertainment for the people who paid money to secure it. The masses demanded entertainment and these buildings were erected to house both the entertainers and the entertained. In the large cities many buildings specialized in various forms of entertainment, the legitimate theatre having the greater number.

The first motion pictures, after the nickelodeon, were shown in small storerooms before they ever entered the "Opera House"; then as feature length films were made and machines improved, the "Opera House" gave up most of its miscellaneous assortment of entertainment and settled down to running motion pictures. As this new form of pleasure took like wild fire, buildings were erected especially for the motion pictures. More companies began producing and competitive show houses sprang up, both, however, in response to the demands of the public.

When the silent picture was taking a fearful slump during its last two years, theatres could be bought at a song because the public had lost interest, hence the public's demand for pictures was rapidly diminishing. Then came the talkers. The public demanded this new form of entertainment and more theatres were built to fill the demand. After two years this demand decreased and today thousands of picture theatres are closed; yet the supply of talking pictures is greater than ever. It is evident that these closed theatres have not been "maintained by the picture."

In the final analysis, the theatres do not make the studio nor the pictures build the theatre—the desire for entertainment built both the old "Opera House" and the new "Picture Palace"; and also made possible the studio and Hollywood. This great desire for entertainment will go on and on through the years and if Hollywood's pictures cannot continue to entertain the masses then other forms of amusement will once again fill the theatres. As Mr. Terry Ramsaye succinctly puts it, "The theatre belongs to and works for the public, not the producer."

The question today on every independent exhibitor's lips is: "Will the talking picture last?" And the answer on the exhibitor's lips is: "It depends on the pictures."

Mr. Goldwyn makes one outstanding statement that all exhibitors will endorse. He says: "It has been said that some of the studios are equipped to turn out 50 pictures a year. I tell you that there is no studio that is mentally equipped to turn out more than 20 pictures a year, real pictures, and perhaps not that many."

Exhibitors have been crying for the last years for producers to make fewer and better pictures. Exhibitors have complained that the public—the last arbiter in the show business—want only outstanding pictures, at least one a week, but they have not been given 20 outstanding box office pictures in a year from all companies combined.

Hollywood will deny this and name picture after picture that was hailed "great" by the critics. True! But critics and the masses do not speak the same language. Hollywood has given way to the critics too long; empty theatres say plainly: "The masses are being bored to death; give us entertainment."

This question of entertainment is the crux of the whole situation. The masses must be entertained or there is no box office revenue, and box office revenues must be forthcoming to support Hollywood and the overpaid stars. Hollywood went sophisticate and gangster and the small town theatres closed their doors, though they may open them in time to some new form of amusement.

The relation between theatres and studio must be close. One cannot live without the other. The success of one is the success of the other: the failure of one is the failure of the other. The studio should be the sensitive finger on the pulse of the theatre and should prescribe remedies to suit the ailment. The studio must reflect the demands of the public, or fail. The theatre cannot for long bolster up the studio's erring judgment. The studio cannot arbitrarily dictate what kind of pictures shall be made.

Some form of national committee should spring up, comprised of representative men from the smallest to the greatest of theatres, and should sit in council with production managers and coolly and calculatingly find out just what kind of plays the masses want for their entertainment. For make no mistake—the masses crave entertainment of some kind as never before. They are shopping for pictures and uncannily know what they want. And they do not want what Hollywood in the main is now offering them.

There is no valid reason why the picture industry as a whole cannot use common sense and find that kind of talking picture that will satisfy in great measure the masses, and put back into the industry the money now withheld from the box office and consequently from Hollywood.

DEMAND FOR ORIGINALS GROWS, FILM STORY PURCHASING SHOWS

Fabulous Prices Are Asked for "Best Sellers" and Plays, and New Order of Economy Held To Be Motivating Factors

The original story as a source of screen material is becoming increasingly in demand with all producers, a study of the story purchases of the principal producing companies during the past six months reveals. The trend to originals, already marked by a decline in purchases of novels, magazine serials and short stories, is expected to reach a peak with the drafting of production schedules for the 1932-'33 season.

Fabulous prices being asked for screen rights to "best sellers" and successful stage plays, together with the new order of economies and retrenchments being placed in effect throughout entire production organizations, are regarded as being largely responsible for the new prominence of originals in the production scheme.

Story Buying at Standstill

Meanwhile, story purchasing by leading producers is virtually at a standstill for the time being. Chamberlain-Brown and the American Play Co., both of New York, report fewer story purchases by motion picture companies for this time of year than for many years past. The fact that purchases for 1932-'33 production schedules will not be in full swing for some time is not regarded as an explanation of the producers' buying inactivity by these two largest story agencies.

That an increase in story purchase within the next few months is assured, is not doubted by the agents, but that its volume will approach that of other years is regarded by them as unlikely. Contemplated reduction in the number of pictures to be made next year is also regarded by the agents as retarding, if not explaining, the present story buying inactivity.

Demand for Writers Grows

A second factor indicating the increasing demand for originals as observed by story agents is the increase in demand for writers, the bulk of whom are represented by the story agents. Studios, they report, are negotiating for large numbers of writers, with numerous options and contracts resulting. The explanation, the agents believe, is that studios are preparing for a vastly increased use of original material. Substantiating this belief is the opinion of the story editor of a major producing organization, who said: "We have experienced excellent results with original stories which cost us $2,000 or $3,000, and we have had indifferent results with 'best selling' novels for which we paid $30,000 to $50,000. Why shouldn't we use more originals?"

U. S. SHOWMEN RALLY TO FIGHT TAX PLAN

Congress Deluged With Letters In Spontaneous Movement; Response Mainly From Small Owner; Pettijohn at Capital

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Theatre operators all over the country have sounded a protest against the Mellon plan to cut the admission tax exemption to 10 cents.

Congressmen from nearly every state have received letters and telegrams of opposition to the tax in what appears to be a purely spontaneous and unorganized movement.

The only other tax proposal in which much interest has been evinced is that to put a sales tax on automobiles, which is being protested by automobile dealers.

While many communications of protest have been received from the large theatre organizations, the bulk of the letters are from the operators of small houses.

In many instances, theatre operators point out that they have already reduced their admission prices in order to meet the reductions of income which have occurred among the working men and mechanics from whom their audiences are drawn. If the proposed tax is imposed, it is declared, it will largely nullify their efforts to fight depression. This, it was explained by one operator writing to Congressman Goss of Connecticut, would undo the strenuous efforts the theatres are making to keep business up.

The Connecticut theatre owner has reduced his admission from 30 to 25 cents, and the proposed tax, he asserted, would carry the rate up to 28 cents. The exhibitor cannot absorb the tax, it was declared, and the public will not.

With hearings scheduled to begin before the House ways and means committee within a few days, speculation regarding the attitude of the Democrats to tax revision is rife in Washington.

Indications are that Democratic leaders are pretty well sold on the advisability of accepting the administration tax proposals as "good politics."

It was explained in behalf of one prominent Democrat that if the administration bill is passed and fails to raise the anticipated revenue, the Democratic party will be in a most desirable position in the coming presidential elections.

Politics will be the ruling factor in whatever is done in Congress this session. The Democratic majority in the House will fall in with the president's plea for relief legislation, since that cannot be avoided, but on every issue from which "hay" for the presidential campaigns can be made, both parties will spar for advantage. Thus it may well be that the Democrats will place the onus of heavier taxes upon the administration.

When the policies committee of the Democratic branch of Congress makes known its recommendations for raising revenue to meet a mounting government deficit, it is expected they will seek a passage of a $300,000,000 measure, in which gas and radio will be hit hardest, it is understood.

Producers and distributors will lead the fight against the proposed industry taxation before the House ways and means committee, it was learned in Washington this week with publication of the list of individuals and organizations who have indicated to the committee a desire to appear at the taxation hearing.

Prominent on the list were the names of representatives of every major producing and distributing organization. The hearings on the tax bill, scheduled to start Thursday, were in danger of being delayed by the current tariff hearing now before the ways and means committee.

Charles C. Pettijohn, of the MPPDA and leader in the industry's fight against legislative activities aimed at motion pictures, now is at Washington to attend the annual Jeffersonian Democratic dinner on Friday, and to survey the political situation prior to appearing before the House ways and means committee on taxation hearings, if a theatre tax reaches that stage.

large type and large amounts of white space in newspapers. Newspaper advertising will follow the semi-formal announcement style.

Beck also has indicated that no act, regardless of its strength or name value, will be held for extra time at the Palace, hereafter. All contracts will be for one week with no extensions considered. Accordingly, current plans to continue the engagement of the Four Marx Brothers for at least one extra week were dropped immediately after Beck assumed his new post.

In addition, little emphasis is to be placed on publicity during Beck's regime. Arnold Van Lear, RKO publicist, assigned to the Palace for some time past, will handle publicity for the Mayfair and Albany theatres only. E. T. Rogers, manager of the Palace, is now held responsible for such publicity as the theatre may require under its new policies.

The operating policies which have been in effect at the Palace up to now, according to insiders, have coincided with an increase in earnings which have lifted the theatre out of the red and placed it in the front of RKO profit makers within a period of seven months.

Beck has retained ownership of 49 per cent of the Palace Theatre stock since disposing of a proponderance of his former interests to RKO. He is said to have sought a voice in the theatre's operations for some time past. At the recent RKO stockholders' meeting at Baltimore, Beck delivered a large number of proxies favoring the company's plan of refinancing.

Beck's appointment to an active RKO post, it is reported, is expected to have the effect of quieting legal actions contemplated by certain minority stockholders' groups who originally opposed the company's plan of refinancing. Among these is that headed by Mrs. Caroline Kohl of Chicago. Beck is reputed to enjoy the confidence of that and other groups which feel that minority interests will be conserved with the former head of the Orpheum circuit active in RKO affairs.

No orders eliminating the newsreel from Palace programs have been issued by Beck to date, and the theatre management is of the opinion that the reel will be retained.

The motion picture came in for a curious sort of recognition by the second-hand automobile business in Chicago last week when the Studebaker Sales Company of Chicago offered RKO stock, along with other stocks, as premiums to boost the sales of used cars. One offering was a 1930 Pierce Arrow and 100 shares of RKO for $1,395. The newspaper advertising arrested the attention of the newspaper business journals and was reproduced in "Advertising Age."

COLLINS TELLS AMPA WHAT HE THINKS OF PICTURE ADVERTISING

Address of Macy Vice-President Is Sequel to Interview With Him and Responses Published in the HERALD

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers entertained Kenneth Collins, vice-president and advertising manager extraordinary of R. H. Macy & Company, at luncheon at Sardi's Wednesday. A pleasant time was had by all.

Mr. Collins, introduced as a "geni of merchandising" and "a modiste" of extreme skill in dressing advertising, in the words of Edward Finney of United Artists, president of the A M P A, got up at coffee time and laid his speech on a music rack and spoke freely.

Mr. Collins' appearance before the A M P A came about as a sequel to an interview with him published in Motion Picture Herald some weeks ago, and a series of responses and answers, published in The Herald and written by various advertising and publicity representatives of motion picture companies. Only one of these respondents attended the luncheon.

Sees Two Advertising Essentials

Mr. Collins spoke with plainness, vigor and candor. He admitted, exclaimed in fact, that the faults that he found in motion picture advertising were not peculiar and exclusive with the motion picture, but in truth common to many businesses, including his own, retail merchandising. He said:

"I have gained a somewhat unjust reputation, I think, as a young man who likes to run around the country telling the advertising fraternity every place that it knows nothing about its business. I say I consider this somewhat unjust for, by and large, I have tried only to ask some questions and to see if the answers appear to be sensible. They have not seemed so. And so, I believe, I am on safe ground in assuming that I have the right to pass on the commonsense fundamentals of what various advertisers are attempting.

"Type Abortions"

"It is often said that one advertising man can't know very much about another's problem. This I cannot follow for a moment. Whether we are selling attendance at moving picture theatres, babies' rattles, or Ford cars—our problem is essentially the same, and our approach to it has to be almost identical. There are two essentials, I take it, to advertising. The first is to understand the public, the second, is to understand the product you have to sell.

"An understanding of the public is, of course, a generalization that has been broken down in many ways. It involves a notion of what papers people read, what desires they have, what they are capable of absorbing at one sitting, and what their loves or tastes are, and so forth. A lot of these things can only be guessed at, others arrived at from a man's experience. Still others, however, can be made to be fairly factual. I know, for example, that some 60 per cent of the people in this country need glasses, 20 per cent wear them. And I know that even people with normal eyesight can only read type so small or be attracted by hand-lettering with a certain degree of legibility.

"I took the patience yesterday to look over a handful of moving picture advertisements. Of all the awful type abortions I have seen in many months, these were about the worst. An attempt was made to display everything with an absolutely reckless disregard for the laws of optics.

"I saw type so small that I could hardly read it, and I am exceptionally farsighted. I saw type set in the form of pyramids, inverted pyramids, everything I can imagine except the shape of the boss' hat.

"No one is going to persuade me that an out and out effort to make advertising illegible is going to improve that advertising. Most of us who are honest know why these things happen. First, it's a habit of certain advertising departments to produce advertisements that are filled with meaningless lines, rules, pictures, and funny lettering. Then there is a desire each day to prove to someone that a different layout from the one of the day before can be turned out.

"Fundamentally, there aren't many layouts that have a really attractive, strong selling appeal. You can't invent a new one every day. I know that the boss or somebody feels that if he buys X inches of space he ought to get X number of words. I don't care if he gets 10,000. If they aren't read, the advertisement isn't as valuable as one with 10 words.

Calls Typography Rules Ignored

"These seem pretty elementary and yet I was amazed at the utter disregard for the rules of typography. Now, again I simply raise the question as to whether this type of publicity can possibly produce in the manner you expect it to?

"Again I notice that virtually every advertisement I looked at had as its chief feature a large picture of the particular star's face. Now do we know that this fits in with the reading public's chief interest? I don't know. But the remarkable uniformity of all these advertisements leads me to believe that possibly a stereotyped form is being followed without any individual regard day to day to the particular picture being advertised. Then again I query—gross exaggeration. In about half of the advertisements I found statements such as:

You will never forget it as long as you live.

The most amazing picture you ever saw.

The incarnation of all you ever hoped for in woman, in . . . .

This is New York's best movie thrill.

Today . . . . to . . . . , enjoy Broadway's greatest show.

"It seemed that almost every advertisement carried some such statement. They can't all be true. I daresay that few of them even approach being accurate. If I strongly exaggerate to my friends, pretty soon my reputation for credibility is zero. Nothing I say is believed. Must not the same thing be true about advertising? I wonder how many of the people who wrote those advertisements actually, literally believed them? I am afraid very few.

"Taken Out of a Sack"

"I said a little while ago that it was my conviction that one of the two big things we had to know about advertising was the product itself. I do not know the facts, but I strongly suspect after reading this copy, that few of the people who wrote them had actually sat down and seen the film from beginning to end. Maybe there aren't enough hours in the day to do this. Maybe it isn't feasible. I don't know any of the good reasons why it can't be done. But I am cer-

MR. COLLINS REMARKED

"Sixty per cent of the people need glasses. Twenty per cent wear them. For the remaining forty per cent nearly all the advertising of motion picture theatres in the newspapers is totally illegible.

"I have seen theatre advertisements with the type in pyramids, inverted pyramids and every conceivable shape except the shape of the boss' hat. Too much advertising is tricked up with rules running this way and that, just to please the boss and make him think it is new. And the boss generally doesn't know anything about advertising.

"There is a great striving with handlettering and bold face type. When you put two blacks together you just get midnight.

"Most of the theatre advertising I have seen reads as though it had been written by persons who had never seen the picture. If they have seen it they are the worst writers in the world. If they have not seen it there is no adequate excuse.

"Look at the New York Evening Journal tonight or the News tomorrow morning and see how their reporters and writers sell a first class love affair. They do it without trick rules and freak type. Their copy pulls, too. They pull more attendance than the morgues can handle and they pull thousands to the gangster funerals. They sell."

Says Faults He Found in Film Ads Were Not Peculiar to Pictures But Common to Many Other Businesses

COLLINS TELLS WHAT HE THINKS ABOUT ADS

tain one gets the absolute conviction from this copy that these advertisements are being taken out of a sack and being made to apply to all kinds of diverse films.

"It would not only be presumptuous but foolish for me to claim I saw nothing admirable in this advertising. I, of course, know perfectly well the great mass of moviegoers belong to the middle and lower income groups of this country. I know that what they must seek in the movies is some sort of vicarious thrill. I know, furthermore, that illicit love affairs and tales of domestic infelicity have a strong appeal to the majority of people. Well, I find plenty of illicit love scenes. And these are apparently of vital moment in the lives of the average person who wants to spend a few hours getting a few vicarious kisses from Greta Garbo. And so it is proper to play these up.

"Stereotyped Screaming"

"But why can't it be done in other manners than this one stereotyped manner of screaming 'greatest,' 'biggest,' 'best,' 'most daring'? I have read of some swell love affairs and murders in more or less sensational newspapers—written in good journalistic style, accented in six or eight-point type and bold face, to give you the proper palpitation at the proper moment. Those stories drag thousands and thousands of people to courtrooms and morgues and gangster funerals. There must be many other methods of getting these stories across, and it seems to me vital in any advertising business to constantly seek for new ways of telling more or less the same story.

"I can see a very obvious endeavor—too obvious, through the tricks of typographers and hand letterers, in these advertisements to seek originality. But practically nothing is accomplished. Originality comes from a complete change of pace, a new method of presentation. A quarter of a page of white space with a 2-inch block of copy set compactly in the center might have far more attention value than the same space cluttered up with every device that can be picked up around the corner of the print shop.

"These are just some random observations that I made as I turned over a group of recent advertisements. Possibly they seem rather trivial and no doubt some of them are without real justification—but they represent what I honestly feel.

"Please understand. My business is just as full of blunders as yours could possibly be. I'll welcome any amount of criticism—for we're all in the same boat."

Monroe Greenthal of United Artists, in a somewhat general discussion which followed, rose to remark that it was his observation that the advertiser was forced into superlative claims and heavy adjectives for picture advertising by the practice of competitors. Mr. Collins replied that in his opinion continued misrepresentation and daily claims of "the greatest on earth" could only result in making the public discount and disbelieve all theatre advertising.

Michael Simmons took occasion to remark that while, as had been recorded in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the advertising of the industry had not yet sold Mr. Collins a seat at a talking picture show, that was because the copy which sold the masses could not sell Mr. Collins. Mr. Collins assented to that.

"Meanwhile," merrily continued Mr. Simmons, "I will continue to use an ad that I stole from Howard Dietz six years ago and have used with success ever since." That got Mr. Simmons a hand.

An exceptionally large attendance greeted Mr. Collins at the luncheon. Among those at the tables were:

Gabe Yorke and Jimmy McFarland, of Fox; Paul Greenhalgh, Philadelphia Exhibitor; Hortense Schorr, Columbia; Tom and Stella Hamlin; Virginia Morris; Joel Swenson, Fox; Marvin Kirsch, Film Daily; P. Columbia Wins Odd Verdict; Said Owner Damaged Print

The Jersey City (N. J.) Theatre Co. was held liable for a damaged print in an action brought by Columbia Pictures against the exhibitors this week. Damages of 3¾ cents per foot, or a total of $237.35 for the print, were awarded the distributor by District Judge Genung. Louis Nizer, secretary of the New York Film Board, represented the distributor, and Norman Samuelson, brother of Sidney Samuelson, head of the New Jersey Allied unit, represented the exhibitors. The action is said to be the first of its kind ever tried.

To Build Omaha Exchange

Paramount-Publix has announced plans for a new $40,000 exchange building in Omaha. It is understood plans for the removal of all exchanges into a film building to have been built have been abandoned.

"Supreme Court" of Films OK's Hughes Picture After Cuts

Approval of Howard Hughes' disputed feature, "Cock o' the Air," was voted by a committee of film executives in New York this week after the producer had agreed to make certain eliminations suggested originally by Col. Jason Joy of the MPPDA. The committee's action marked the entrance into production affairs of what is described as the industry's "supreme court." Failure to comply with the committee's decision, it is said, would have meant that the picture would be barred from all theatres controlled by members of the Hays organization.

"Cock o' the Air" was rejected in its original form by Col. Joy on the ground that it contained objectionable material as defined in the Production Code. Hughes took exception to Joy's decision and invited a group of Coast producers to view the picture. This audience concurred in Joy's opinion.

Hughes, now in New York, then submitted the picture to Will H. Hays for final disposition, but prior to its screening Lewis Milestone ordered eliminations identical to those originally asked by Joy. With these eliminations the picture was approved by the committee, which consisted of R. H. Cochrane of Universal, Jesse Lasky of Paramount, E. W. Hammons of Educational, in addition to Hays.

Hughes and his distributor, United Artists, were reported to be very much concerned over the picture's fate, as important opening playdates are imminent. One of these was for the United Artists theatre in Los Angeles, where the picture is scheduled to open next week.

Keough Appointed Paramount Counsel Succeeding Ludvigh

Austin Keough, formerly in charge of Publix legal activities, has been named to succeed Elek John Ludvigh, who resigned this week from the post of general counsel of Paramount, which he had held for many years.

Ludvigh's resignation was the subject of considerable comment within the industry, in view of the attorney's long and close association with Adolph Zukor. The former general counsel is resuming his law practice from headquarters in the offices of Nathan Burkan, industry attorney, and old friend.

For some years Ludvigh has been handling a number of estates and trusteeships. The plan which now returns him to his former personal practice he has entertained for some time past, he said, when commenting upon the severing of official connections with the company.

Young, Marin out of Paramount

Two associate producers, Felix Young and Ned Marin, have resigned at Paramount's Coast studios.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

A TWO-HOUR JOB. They're story-tellers, these boys—being the Fox writing team of Barry Conners and Philip Klein. But you gotta believe this one. It's a sea bass weighing 356 pounds. And if they didn't catch it, who did?

HOME AGAIN. And demonstrating, as it were, his feeling that once more he's on top of the world. Recovered from his appendicitis operation, Tom Mix will tarry awhile near his own hearth before beginning his impending Universal series.

MODERN MECHANISM OF MOTION PICTURE MAKING.. The Tiffany company making "Hotel Continental" is shown just prior to the shooting of a scene with one of the gigantic cranes evolved for stationary or moving shots at varying heights and angles, accommodating a perambulating camera and the required technicians. The crane is delicately counterweighted so that one man can easily manipulate the arm.

SEVENTEEN. Her age being guaranteed by Warner Brothers, which company has just signed her—Shirley Chambers—to a long-term contract. Miss Chambers was brought to Warners' attention upon winning a beauty contest.

EXPERTS. Sidney S. Lenz, bridge star, greeted by Major Edward Bowes, manager of the Capitol, New York. The car is the prize in the Lenz-Culbertson contract bridge match now being fought out.

NO SALE. For she's one who can look through those disguises by which the world principally knows him, and see the real "Chic" Sale. She's "the wife"—avisitin' the Warner star on the set for "Old Man Minick," his latest production.

CHIN CHOW. For whom every day is a dog's day since Sally Eilers' mother gave him (?) to the Fox star, here shown taking Chin out to see Hollywood. Miss Eilers' newest picture is "Dance Team."

THEIR DEBUT. Donald Cook, Warner player, exhibits some newcomers to his household. And if you like dogs, you'll love Mammy for that look on her face! And Donald, for the look on his!

HUSTON & SON. Walter, senior partner, is starring in two Universal productions, one of which, "Law and Order," has dialogue by son John. John is also writing an original, "Steel Men," for possible use by his father.

PROFILE. And if you think this picture is wrong side up, stand on your head and observe the earring. It's just a new angle on Lillian Bond, English actress under contract to Warners.

LUNCH TIME. No time to stop and pose, so the cameraman had to catch Victor McLaglen and Helen Mack on the run, as they legged it from Director Allan Dwan's "While Paris Sleeps" set to the Fox grocery emporium.

STEFFES NEW ALLIED PRESIDENT; MYERS NAMED BOARD CHAIRMAN

Richey Considers Post as Paid Business Manager; Association to Continue Fight on Percentage and Block Booking

W. A. (Al) Steffes has been elected new national president of the Allied States Association, it was announced by former president Abram F. Myers on Tuesday night, at the Chicago testimonial dinner for Aaron Saperstein, president of the Allied Theatre Owners of Illinois, which preceded a meeting of the organization's board of directors.

At the same time, the directors, attending from all parts of the country, approved the creation of a new post of paid business manager, to make his headquarters either in New York or Washington. H. M. Richey, business manager of the Michigan Allied unit, admitted the post had been offered him, but said he had not yet reached a decision on acceptance, as his association with Michigan Allied is still operative.

Myers, whose contract with Allied recently expired, has renewed his agreement with the association for a period of years. He will be general counsel and chairman of the board of directors, devoting his time to more important problems of the association and the industry generally. Appointment of an office assistant to relieve Myers of routine affairs in anticipation of an exacting legislative battle to be fought by the Allied leaders at Washington this year, was also approved by the directors.

Tribute Paid Saperstein

The dinner, tendered in recognition of Saperstein's leadership of the independent exhibitors' fight against the Chicago operators' union last summer, was attended by John A. Swanson, state's attorney for Cook County, and his assistants, Charles Lounsbury and Charles Bellows, who conducted the legal investigation into the affairs of the operators' union. Also in attendance were Barney Balaban, treasurer of Publix-Balaban and Katz; Jack Miller, president of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago; representatives of all Chicago exchanges and virtually every independent and circuit exhibitor in the city.

Allied begins the year with suggestions to its 6,000 theatre-members that they refuse to sign percentage contracts and that exhibitors continue their fight with distributors for "open" selling as against block booking.

The association expects judicial action on certain phases of protection "before the lapse of many months," and will soon offer a nationwide proposal for independent low-priced trailers, members are told in an annual message which emanated this week from headquarters at Washington.

In discussing seven of the most important activities in which the association is interested on behalf of exhibitor members, the message says:

A. Protection. Attacks have been launched on protection from so many angles that we may expect judicial determination on many important phases of this subject before the lapse of many months. The propositions sought to be vindicated are:

(a) That protection agreed to and put in effect by competing companies, like a price agreement, is illegal per se, regardless of whether such protection is reasonable.

(b) That inter-city protection never can be legal for the reason that it does not have for its purpose the "protection" of the theatre in whose favor it is given, but is designed to enable that theatre to draw unfairly from the theatre on which it is imposed.

(c) That intra-city protection is unreasonable when it extends beyond the close of the preceding run.

It is confidently predicted that protection imposed by the distributors in the interest of the chains, and without consulting or respecting the rights of the independent exhibitors, will be outlawed as completely as the former system of compulsory arbitration.

B. Music Tax. The resolute opposition of Senators Brookhart, King, Dill and Trammell prevented the passage of the so-called Vestal Bill without amendments which would protect the theatre owners in the matter of the music tax and unfair tactics of the Copyright Protection Bureau. To those faithful public servants the theatre owners owe a debt of gratitude.

Elaborate plans are being made for bringing the full power and influence of Allied theatre owners to bear on this matter at the present session of Congress to the end that these necessary amendments may be incorporated in the bill.

C. Block Booking. Exhibitors in many parts of the country report an increase in the amount of open selling, although block booking continues to be the practice of the industry. Action has been taken against the tying of features and shorts whenever instances of that practice have been reported.

D. Admission Tax. It now seems probable that an effort will be made at the present session to enact a so-called luxury sales tax including an admission tax on motion pictures and other forms of entertainment. This is being watched very carefully and everything possible will be done to prevent such outcome.

E. Labor. Your national association, through Mr. Steffes, has done what it could to aid the Chicago independent theatre owners in their terrific struggle against labor dictation in that city. The bitterness of that struggle illustrates the need of effective local organizations; the successful outcome demonstrates the advantage of being affiliated with a strong national organization.

F. Selective Percentage Contracts. Allied units have gone on record in the strongest terms against this innovation and have, we believe, convinced most theatre owners that the only way to prevent the spread of this practice is to refuse now to make deals of that kind. This practice is a very serious menace to the future prosperity and independence of the exhibitors and Allied will do everything in its power to prevent its spread.

G. Service Charges. Substantial reductions already have been secured and the work is going on. A proposal for independent low-priced trailers soon will be offered.

Support Vestal Bill

Allied has indicated that, in the event Federal Judge Morton's decision, rendered last May, holding the Copyright Law gives no protection against unauthorized exhibitions of films, is sustained, Allied will lend its support to the Vestal Bill. The Copyright Protection Bureau has appealed this decision, which is still undetermined.

If the Bureau's appeal results in reversing Judge Morton's decision, Allied will work for inclusion of an amendment in the Vestal Bill, which would "prevent imposition of penalties in the guise of liquidated damages in excess of possible injury for mere breach of license provisions."

The Vestal Bill in its present form provides a minimum penalty of $200 for each unauthorized exhibition, whereas the Hebert Bill, revising the Copyright statutes, already provides for a minimum penalty of $50 for a conviction, regardless of the number of unauthorized exhibitions involved in the violation. This moderate penalty appears to be in effect what Allied seeks to have included in the Vestal Bill. Just why the organization should favor the latter bill over the Hebert measure with its already reduced damage provisions has not been explained by Allied officers.

District Managers Meet On Warner-F. N. Policies

District managers of Warner-First National were arriving in New York Wednesday for a sales conference at the Park Central to be presided over by Edward Alperson, general sales manager; Andy Smith, in charge of the eastern territory, and Gradwell Sears, in charge in the West. Others to speak will be Charles Steele, supervisor of exchanges; S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, and Arthur Sachson, head of the contract department.

Among district managers to attend are N. H. Brower, West Coast; Fred Jack, South; Carl Lesserman, Midwest; Ray Haines, Mideast; Robert Smeltzer, East, and H. C. Paynter, from Canada.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

"RADIO CITY won't be done for another year, though, and I'm lucky if I can hold this job that long," complained the comely little manicurist in the Barbizon Plaza barber shop.

"There are plenty of good places to work between now and then," said the customer, watching the polish beginning to illuminate his nails. "And you'll be sure of a hundred a week or more, once you're over there."

"Honest?" purred the girl, the nail buffer poised in mid-air. "Honest can I make more than a hundred a week?"

"Why, certainly. That will be nothing to expect from the type of people who will come to Radio City."

"Gee, I dunno. Anyways, a year is pretty long."

She finished her job in silence. The customer arose and donned hat and coat.

"Well, thanks, Mr. Roxy," the girl called after him as the customer reached the door.

"That's Roxy," the manicurist explained to her new customer who took the recently vacated chair. "He's boss of Radio City an' he's gonna give me a job there when it's done. Hunnert a week, or more, I can make, he said. An' that's a lotta dough."

An executive of a national company which at the moment is undergoing reorganization of management told us this week that "what this company needs is SHOWMEN, not SHOEMEN!"

Did you ever know that the expression "In the limelight" was born in the warm 90's when "spots" and "floods" of those days were worked with gas flames played on calcium block?

Scott Leslie, our "eagle-eye" at Tampa, operated a theatre in those days and he still remembers when theatres used gas inside and out, along footlights and borders. When ready for the show, the immense borders were lowered to the stage, lighted with a wax taper and hauled back by way of a pulley which squeaked aplenty.

Just before the curtain rose, the gas was turned on in the foots and a boy stepped across the stage, lighting them with a taper while the "gallery gods" yelled: "Soup! Soup!"

"Those were the good old days," says Scott. "Kinda nice to look back to, but not to want to go back to."

A conscience-stricken patron who, many years ago, "gyped" the Collingswood theatre, Philadelphia, out of his admission fee, wrote Manager George Lessy the other day to inquire how much he owed, with interest. Lessy replied that the bill to date would be $52. The patron sent him a note.

Howard Hughes is quite anxious to meet some charitable gentleman who is willing to purchase a batch of good-looking notes, on guaranteed bond paper. THE total sum collected by the motion picture industry in its recent campaign to collect money at theatres for the nation's unemployed never will be known publicly. President Herbert Hoover is said to have made a personal request to industry leaders to withhold publication. The administration is bitterly opposed to a dole and Mr. Hoover fears that publication of totals collected by the relief agencies would aggravate the situation.

In a certain community down South, where women are women and men are glad of it, there is published a regional motion picture publication which still clings to the nickelodeon days of amusements. Regularly there appear advertisements which are inserted to sell "stage mazuma," slide projectors and other relics of the days when patent wars occupied the attention of executives who now are obliged to discuss advanced economics with masters of finance from Wall Street.

The current issue of this magazine contains several interesting sales messages, including health belts for those who recognize the importance of proper curvatures, and "Complete slide advertising business for sale—Cheap—$137.50." In a "classified column" appear two of the more interesting paragraphs, namely:

"WALL CLOCK—A need in every Theatre or Store. Big one, 43" by 16" wide. Have it Cleaned and It's a Dandy—$5.50."

"HIGH POWER RIFLES—1 Colt 44 and 1 Marlin 38-40. Either of These at $15."

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH takes exception to our recent paragraph in which we intimated his contract was "terminated" by Paramount a few years ago for producing that very unsuccessful "Sorrows of Satan," and that Paramount executives paid to him $100,000 in cash to sever the agreement.

Mr. Griffith authorized his spokesman, Vivian Moses, to admit that "Sorrows of Satan" was more sorrowful commercially to himself and to Paramount than it was to Satan, but D. W. asks that the record be clarified, and states that he never was responsible for its failure. He accepted its direction under written protest to Adolph Zukor, and only after Cecil B. DeMille, James Cruze, Herbert Brenon and other "ace" directors of Paramount turned it down, he says.

"It was as a personal favor to Mr. Zukor that I directed the picture, although I was much against making it," said "D. W," and he mentioned his "Sally of the Sawdust" and "That Royle Girl" as two successful predecessors of "Sorrows" under the Paramount contract.

Concerning the sum of $100,000, Mr. Griffith claims that he never saw that much money in one sum from Paramount. He accepted a few weeks' salary and asked Mr. Zukor to call the deal off and thus ended his association with Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation, says Moses.

DAVID SARECKY, who manages Skouras Brothers' Sunnyside theatre on Long Island, was haled into court the other day by indignant mothers of his community who requested criminal chastisement of Sarecky for advertising that a baby would be given away "FREE to the holder of a lucky number." The mothers charged cruelty to children.

While the machinery of the law was in motion, Dave had a hearty laugh. Lots of publicity for his theatre was certain, he figured, and when they find out that the "baby" is a baby pig, the mothers and the court will appreciate the joke.

Came the day for Dave's arraignment. Mothers of all Sunnyside and representatives of several women's organizations appeared against him.

Dave approached the bar. "Ha, ha, ha, I never intended to give away a real baby; it is a baby pig," he chirped, and then proceeded to leave the courtroom, until the judge stopped his departure and informed Dave that he is a prisoner under $100 bail for misleading advertising!

MAKE TALKERS FOR SCHOOL USE, BRITISH EDUCATORS TELL STUDIO

Declare Dialogue and Sound Films Definite Advancement Over Silent Days, Proved By 22,118 Individual Tests

By W. H. MOORING, London

Extensive experiments conducted by the National Union of School Teachers in collaboration with Western Electric, representing the film industry of Great Britain, have resulted in preparation of a report which urges the film industry to commence at the earliest opportunity the production of talk films for educational purposes.

Scientifically produced for school use, the report indicates, dialogue and sound films represent a definite advance over silent films, for educational uses.

The reports was drawn up after lengthy tests, carefully and expertly checked, in fifteen schools, including secondary, senior and junior institutions, in Middlesex, the London county area.

Over 3,500 scholars were included in the tests, their ages ranging from 8 to 18 years, and no less than 22,118 individual examinations were conducted by nearly 200 teachers.

All agreed that the value of the sound film as an educative medium was adequately demonstrated. The great snag is: there are no films! Nor has any British company so far commenced seriously to make them. The local educational authorities do not feel that it is expedient to install the necessary projection apparatus in schools until the films are available. And it is obviously a speculation of some risk for film producers to start the making of films until they have some guarantee that they will be booked.

Government assistance would break the vicious circle. Will the board of education take the situation in hand? I doubt it. If there were a Department of Public Morale, controlled by a Minister of Humor, something might happen, because it is certain that in view of the heavy burdens of taxation which the coming generation is to inherit from the present one, a few films educating the youngsters in the not-so-elementary art of procuring the "wherewithal" might at least do some good.

The extra burden of purchasing films for schools would be negligible if placed on a national footing.

There are already in existence in this country one or two units which might logically switch over to the serious business of turning out scientifically prepared educations. In point of fact British Instructional, under H. Bruce Woolfe, for years has engaged in semi-educational subjects of the character of the "Secrets of Nature Series." The Welwyn studios owned by this company have never been fully occupied. Under subsidy, with perhaps the active collaboration of educational experts, a worthwhile schedule of school films could soon be got through.

The empire marketing board is also engaging, under the control of John Grierson, in the production of propaganda films with a distinctly instructive flavor. Here again, with the necessary cash or its equivalent of a guaranteed outlet, films could be produced in large numbers for school screenings.

At this moment, however, I feel perfectly certain that what will happen will be something like this: America will be left the educational field, just as she was the theatrical field.

Some time soon, when present difficulties are overcome, instructional films will be made in U. S. A. and sent out the world over.

Western Electric will then undertake the wiring of British schools, and then the fun will begin! There will be loud wails from British "educationalists" who will deplore the cultural depredations of the foreign film upon the growing generation of Britons. That will be the second great mistake which the British educational authorities will have made, the first being that of neglecting to encourage production of necessary films at home.

Obviously it is to be desired that the widest possible range of educational films shall be available for British juveniles, widest not only in regard to the variety of subjects covered, but also to the sources of origin, styles of presentation, and forms and moods of elaboration.

That the motion picture industry has a stupendous mission to fulfill in the classrooms of the world is now beyond doubt: that mission will probably be found to transcend in the magnitude of its influence, anything however far reaching which the film has achieved in relation to world entertainment, and incidental propaganda.

Neither Britain nor America is yet bankrupt, and although financial stress may have its hold upon both of these great countries, it will probably be found that destitution in the vital forces of creative imagination and progressive determination will affect, more than mere monetary considerations, the future development of the educational film.

British and Dominions Profit

The report and balance sheet of British and Dominions Film Corporation, Ltd., at the year ended October 31st, provides a pleasant surprise for the British industry and for the shareholders. During the year the Company made a trading profit of £50,649, compared with a loss for a previous period of 17 months amounting to £35,442. The net profit for the year covered by the new report is £17,004, which compares with a loss during the preceding 17 months of no less than £48,742. This splendid result cannot fail to provide a stimulus to the British investor. It proves definitely that British and Dominions has, following the initiation of a sound financial policy by Hubert T. Marsh, the company's managing director, overcome what appeared to be almost insuperable difficulties and now enters the ranks of the well-to-the-fore among British production concerns.

The period under review has also provided evidence that the steady output of B. and D. has been of consistently high quality. A whole string of film successes has been turned out, and among them are several pictures which have achieved record total bookings. It is pointed out in the report, however, that only four pictures have been released during the period and that during the current year profits are expected to accrue from a greater number of productions, in addition to which it is expected that extra revenue will be derived from the third sound stage, just opened. The balance sheet at present shows, roughly, half-a-million in assets all at conservative estimates, and all this has been built up of a remaining capital of £22,000, left after the heavy losses sustained by the company in the changeover from silent to sound films.

And Mooring Predicts That Educational Field Will Be Left to American Producers As Was Theatrical Market

The report states that during the year it was found impossible to arrange a stock issue to fund the capital liabilities but with the increased earning capacity of the company it should be possible to arrange such an issue as soon as financial conditions permit and that when the time arrives a scheme of reorganization of capital will be prepared.

The report states that the purchase of the freehold of the studios was completed during the year and ten years lease of one sound stage for the Paramount Film Service was entered into. A first mortgage debenture amounting to £75,000, had, at the date of the balance sheet, been reduced to £70,000.

A. T. P. Shows £52,979 Loss

The second annual report of Associated Talking Pictures, Ltd., covering the year ended June 30, 1931, reveals a loss of £52,979. The directors in their report state that the period under review was not one of complete activity so far as the company's production work was concerned. Practically the whole of the first half of the year represented a transition period when the arrangements with RKO Productions, Inc., were revised and extended. The report further expresses the directors' regret that the first two pictures made by the company, namely "Escape" and "Birds of Prey," did not meet with the measure of success in America which was anticipated and provision had to be made in the balance sheet for anticipated loss on those two pictures: £10,519 being written off as regards "Escape," and £7,000 on "Birds of Prey."

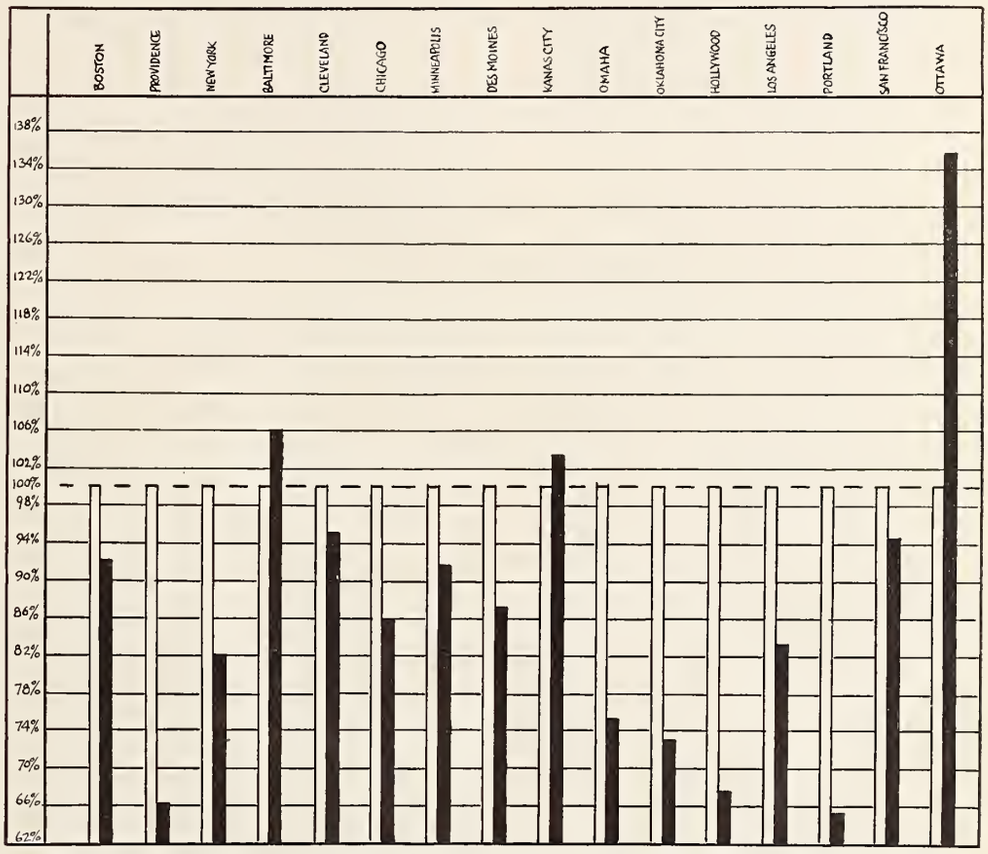
COPYRIGHT VIOLATIONS DECREASE IN ALL CLASSES BUT HOLDOVERS



Increase of Holdover Cases Detected Ascribed Largely to Growth of Percentage Playing, Says Protection Bureau

A decline in all classifications of copyright violations except holdovers was noted by the Copyright Protection Bureau during 1931, according to the fifth annual report of the Bureau just distributed to the sales managers of major companies. Instances of holdovers investigated and detected during the year were considerably more numerous than in any preceding year in the history of the Bureau. The increase in this type of violation is coincident with an increase in percentage contracts, noted during 1931, and is attributed in large part to the increased instances of percentage playing.

The report sounds an optimistic note on the subject of curbing violations of copyright in the future. The Bureau's hopefulness in this respect appears to be based on the effects of four major disciplinary activities pursued by the Bureau during the past year. These activities, all of which, it is set forth, served as deterrents to would-be violators, were: exposure of and court injunctions against bootleg exchanges; educational policies for the winning of exhibitor cooperation; legal and legislative activities strengthening the position of the Bureau, and discouraging disrespect for contract obligations by publicizing the Bureau's aims and operations.

Several thousand cases of holdovers were detected by the Bureau during the year, as against a few hundred instances of violations of other classifications, such as bicycling, switching and bootleg operations. The increase in percentage contracts, it is pointed out, offers an inducement to would-be violators to profit by unauthorized exhibitions which is not present in straight rental deals. A majority of the violations of this type detected, revealed that exhibitors playing a picture on percentage either opened the picture in advance of the specified playdate or held it for unauthorized exhibitions after the rental period. In either case, box office returns were falsified in such a way that no return was made the distributor on the first day of exhibition, returns being made only on the closing days of the engagement.

During 1931, the Bureau extended its operations to the investigation and detection of bootleg exchanges. The additional "police" work connected with this new phase of operations, together with the resultant legal costs of prosecution, appreciably increased the cost of the Bureau to distributors. Results attained, however, were deemed satisfactory enough to permit continuance of this activity. During the year, several bootleg exchanges were detected and prosecuted, and thousands of reels of bootlegged film were removed from the market.

This chart, based upon the MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S week-by-week compilation of box office receipts, shows the returns in sixteen cities for ten weeks, October 12 to December 19, 1931, as compared with the receipts for the corresponding period in 1930. The black vertical columns represent receipts for the ten weeks in 1931, while the 100 per cent verticals indicate the receipts for the same period in 1930.

Operators Re-elect Kaplan Following His Indictment

Sam Kaplan has been re-elected president of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' union, Local 306, New York, for a term of four years. The election occurred almost simultaneously with the indictment of Kaplan and other union officials for coercion and conspiracy in New York County.

With Kaplan were elected: Charles F. Eichorn, vice-president; I. R. Cohn, recording secretary; D. Engel, financial secretary; M. Feinberg, treasurer; P. Ciambrelli, sergeant-at-arms. Three trustees and an executive board of 10 members were elected at the same time.

Ohio MPTO Urges Fight on 10% Tax

P. J. Wood, business manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, has addressed a letter to all members, urging that they individually communicate with their Congressional representatives in an effort to defeat the proposed government admission tax of 10 per cent.

The letter points out that the average legislator labors under a misapprehension that film entertainment is a luxury, being deluded into the fact by seeing certain large de luxe houses recently constructed and by reading in the daily press of various star salaries.

The communication says in part: "As an industry we must, of course, do what we can to assist the government to balance the budget, but we feel that it is absolutely unfair to single out our patrons or customers and force them to pay a tax for the privilege of buying our merchandise, especially when we take into consideration the class of people who make up the bulk of our customers."

BLOCK BOOKING CASE IS IN ELEVENTH YEAR

And Record Before Federal Trade Commission Exceeds 32,000 Pages; There's Also The Matter of "Ingagi"

Herald Washington Bureau

Ten years of persistent effort on the part of the Federal Trade Commission have failed to dispose of the question of block booking, and the case originated August 30, 1921, against Paramount Famous-Lasky was still hanging fire in the Circuit Court of Appeals in New York at the close of the fiscal year on June 30, last, it is disclosed by the annual report of the commission filed with Congress this week.

Preliminary investigation covering a couple of years resulted in amendment of the original complaint in 1923 and hearings and arguments were held at intervals over the next four years. In July, 1927, the commission issued a "cease and desist" order; in 1928, dissatisfied with the report made by Paramount Famous-Lasky of compliance with the order, the commission filed with the court a petition for enforcement, together with a complete transcript of the hearings.

Totals 32,000 Pages

"This record, one of the largest ever before the commission," it is commented in the report, "comprised more than 17,000 pages of testimony and extensive exhibits consisting of more than 15,000 additional pages, a total of over 32,000 pages. By the rules of the second circuit the burden of printing the record in Federal Trade Commission cases falls upon the petitioner—in this case, the commission. The size of the record was, of necessity, one of the considerations which led the commission to agree that the issue before the court might be confined to paragraph 2 of the order relating to 'block booking,' and as a result of this decision considerable time was devoted to negotiations looking to the elimination of such of the testimony and exhibits as was irrelevant to the point at issue. By the eliminations referred to, the record was reduced to some 2,000 pages."

The original complaint of the commission named a number of respondents in addition to Paramount and charged them with a long list of offenses which were dropped by the wayside, one by one, as hearings progressed and the often none too brilliant counsel for the commission found themselves unable to make their allegations stick and more or less graciously "conceded" another point.

In the 32,000 pages of the record in this case will be found details of matters having absolutely nothing to do with the suit. In them, also, will be found the many rulings of the examiner which resulted in the commissioner's own admission that so much bias had been shown that the record would never stand up in court and their return of the case for further hearings to include material which, on protest of commission counsel, had been barred in the original hearings.

And There's "Ingagi"

The commission has another film case pending, also, the report shows. While the block booking case is of interest because of its antiquity, this second case concerns one motion picture, "Ingagi."

In April, 1931, the commission reports, it issued a complaint based on alleged misrepresentation in the advertising, distribution and exhibition of the picture.

"It is alleged that false and misleading statements have been and are being made in advertising the film involved, which is represented as an authentic African picture taken by a famous explorer and depicting his experiences in Africa when, in fact, there was no such expedition as described and the explorer is a fictitious person," Congress is told.

"Moreover, it is alleged that the film was made from cuttings from old films of prior expeditions in Africa supplemented by scenes and events stated and taken in or about Los Angeles.

"Many other misrepresentations are alleged, including representations of a nonexistent animal, of actual scenes of gorillas when, in fact, two were orang-outangs, one was a chimpanzee, and another was a man dressed in a gorilla skin; representation of the giving of a native woman to the apes when, in fact, the scene involved was staged and the woman was a negro woman hired for the purpose in Los Angeles and the gorilla was a man dressed in a gorilla skin. It is alleged that these representations mislead and deceive theatre owners as well as the public and result in the film being leased and patronized to the injury of competitors who distribute authentic films."

German Film Regulation To Have Legal Basis This Year

As the result of an emergency decree signed by the president of Germany, the present film contingent regulations will have a legal basis for the current film year. It is also looked upon as possible that the government may extend film regulations next year.

The Enabling Act which permitted the regulations ran out on December 31. The Reichstag should ratify the resolution extending the act, but since it does not meet for several months, the emergency decree was signed by the president.

National Board of Review Unit Picks 20 Best Pictures

The Exceptional Photoplay Committee of the National Board of Review, making its annual selection of outstanding films for the year from December 1, 1930 to December 1, 1931, lists 10 features which have been rated as outstanding by reason of certain phases indicative of a real advancement in cinematic technique from the artistic standpoint, and a supplementary list of 10 which were chosen for their quality in the matter of all around entertainment, rather than for unusual artistic merit, though the latter qualities may be present.

The first 10 and the distributing company of each follow:

"Cimarron" .....Radio
"City Streets" .....Paramount
"Front Page" .....United Artists
"Quick Millions" .....Fox
"Surrender" .....Fox
"City Lights" .....Chaplin (United Artists)
"Dishonored" .....Paramount
"Guardsman" .....MGM
"Rango" .....Paramount
"Tabu" .....Paramount

The supplementary group of 10 includes the following:

"Around the World in 80 Minutes" United Artists
"The Champ" .....MGM
"Public Enemy" .....Warners
"Skippy" .....Paramount
"Street Scene" .....United Artists
"Bad Girl" .....Fox
"Little Caesar" .....First National
"Sin of Madelon Claudet".....MGM
"Smiling Lieutenant" .....Paramount
"Trader Horn" .....MGM

Five outstanding foreign productions which have been released in the United States during the year, as chosen by the National Board committee include:

"Die Dreigroschenoper" ("Beggar's Opera") Warner's, German
"Das Lied vom Leben" (Song of Life") Tobis, German
"Le Million" (The Million")...Tobis, French
"Sous les Toits de Paris" ("Under the Roofs of Paris") .....Tobis, French
"Vier von der Infanterie" ("Comrades of 1918") .....Forenfilm, German

The selections are the result of critical re-examination of certain pictures which, when reviewed by the regular review committee of 300 of the National Board, usually in the projection rooms in groups of 10 or 12, are noted by ballot as worthy of review by the Exceptional Photoplay Committee.

The latter, a group of 13 men and women more highly trained as critics in the technique of the motion picture, examines the features originally set aside by ballot by the review committee. From these features are selected the first 10 and supplementary group. Last year only 10 pictures were chosen, the additional group this year having been decided upon by reason of the large amount of good material available for selection.

James Shelley Hamilton is secretary of the Exceptional Photoplay Committee, and is in charge of the work of that body. This committee has been in existence since 1920, and has evinced an interest in the sponsorship of various "little theatre" movements.

"BETTER" PICTURES WILL SELL BUT PRODUCERS ARE AFRAID: BARRETT

Technically Fine or Unusual Picture Growing in Market Value, Says Executive Secretary of National Board of Review

The producers of the United States are afraid, or unwilling, to believe that the great American motion picture public can not only appreciate the unusual or fine in motion pictures, but will pay its money willingly, will go to the theatre eagerly to see the "better" type of film, in the opinion of Wilton A. Barrett, executive secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

Leaning far back in his chair in his plainly furnished office at the National Board headquarters on lower Fifth avenue, in New York, Barrett took the opportunity to present some of those views on production, distribution and the theatre-going public of the nation, which was afforded by publication by the Board of the 20 American and five foreign selections of the Exceptional Photoplay Committee of the Board for 1931. Contacts with all phases of the business, including the innumerable club organizations of the theatre-going public, affiliated with the National Board in its work, have given Barrett a rather broad and perhaps slightly idealistic view of what might be accomplished by the industry in the making, and selling, of "better" pictures.

Barrett discussed at some length the reluctance with which major distributing companies look upon the unusual film. "Often I have been told by a company executive that a certain film, perhaps of foreign production, cannot be taken for national distribution because it will hurt the prestige of the company," he said.

"Any fine film," the Board official insisted, "properly exploited, if it really has something, will make a profit." Amplifying the point, Barrett expressed the opinion that distributors demand too much from their pictures, figuring that if a film does not cost a large five or six figure sum to produce, and result in a larger six or seven figure sum in profit, it is a "flop." Barrett takes issue with that contention, believing that if a film turns in a respectable profit over and above its production and distribution costs, it is to be counted a worthwhile piece of merchandise.

Veering to the better film again, Barrett emphatically refuted the long-understood producer-distributor conception that the unusual or the "art" type of film will not find a salable market among the rank and file of the picture public, taking the country by and large.

"Producers have underestimated the intelligence of the public," he said. "The technically fine or unusual picture is definitely increasing in market value in the smaller communities of the country." He cited numerous instances of this kind of picture which did splendid business in the special showing run in the large metropolitan center, then fell down in the outlying sections.

"If that distributor," he insisted, "had put behind that film the same kind of publicity and exploitation pressure he applies to his ordinary release, the film would have filled, to good profit, the smaller houses where it was shown."

Several instances were cited in which, when special films were tested at small town theatres at his insistence, with no advance publicity beyond the bare announcement of the showing, house box office records were broken for two, and three days and full week periods.

Questioned as to the potentialities in the small community of the clever or subtle stage play, whether drama or comedy, being transferred to the screen profitably, with the old bugabear of lack of understanding or appreciation from the town audience as the obstacle standing in the way, Barrett contended the small town audience will very definitely appreciate such a production and more than pay its way on the producer's ledger.

The small, more or less exclusive "art" house, common in several of the larger cities over the country, was mentioned to engage Barrett's attention and excite his comment.

It succeeded. He swung his hands from behind his head and leaned over the desk with his elbows on its surface. "The small 'art' houses have not special audiences, as so often insisted," he said. "They are the same audiences as you will find anywhere, but they are interested in seeing the finer work of the screen."

Then Barrett made a statement which at first blush appeared a bit difficult of ready agreement. "Pictures must be specialized for specialized audiences," he said. "The industry is in the position of a manufacturer of fine underwear who figures his product should be readily accepted by the Eskimos."

Asked how he thought such a differentiation in product, once accomplished at the studio, could be handled from the distribution or theatre angle, he offered the possibility that distributor-owned circuits should establish small "art" houses in many communities over the country, where the unusual type of film might be exhibited, in addition to the circuit's regular film, or vaudeville-film theatres in the community. He proposed, in a word, a wider scope for the circuit-theatre system, with "art" houses for special audiences.

But, he was asked, does that not present an additional source of competition to the independent exhibitor, which would, perhaps, "cut his throat"?

"I do not think so," was the reply. "These houses should not be a source of direct or harmful competition to the independent." The value of the "art" house idea, in Barrett's opinion, lies in the fact that more and more of the "average" motion picture public would attend these cinemas, until, in time, the whole bugaboo of the lack of profit in the production of unusual, or "better" pictures would be broken down, back to the very source of films, the studios.

Declares Small Town Audience Will Definitely Appreciate Clever or Subtle Stage Play Transferred to Screen

Admitting that there is no marked increase in the number of "art" houses in the country at the present time, Barrett attributed the latent condition to the lack of product available for those houses, but insisted there is room in the country for a large and decidedly profit-producing circuit of such theatres over the country.

The "little" theatre, which he called a "revival idea," that is, the reviving of the better things cinematic, cannot change its type of production, Barrett insisted. The moment it does the theatre loses distinction, and then becomes "just another film house." The fact that many of these houses, in just this manner, have fallen by the wayside, Barrett attributes first to the type of opportunist who has been operating certain of these houses "gyping" the public with ordinary films called unusual; and second the weakness of the source of supply for this type of house.

In connection with the selections of the Exceptional Photoplay Committee of the Board, Barrett incidentally expressed the opinion that most of the technical or artistic developments or real innovations cinematic come from the foreign countries, are found in foreign films. The chief reason he offers: "The European director has a great deal more freedom than the American."

Speaking for a moment on censorship, to which the National Board of Review is constitutionally opposed, Barrett described the industry as always on the defensive against censorship.

"If the industry will make pictures sincerely," he said, "and forget about censorship, it will be better off." He indicated that making pictures with an eye to the possible requirements of the censor board will be of no avail, since the censor will invariably find something else to set upon. Barrett based this statement on the belief that the censor must insure the permanency of his own position, for if he fails to find anything to censor in too many films, the need of his position, and of censorship, will be non-existant.

UNION CIRCUIT GETS EDGE ON HOYT IN RACE FOR FILMS IN AUSTRALIA

Acquisition of MGM Product, Except 12 Roadshows for Fuller, Gives Balance of Power to Greater Union Theatres

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

The fight for supremacy between Greater Union Theatres and Hoyt's Australian circuits promises to be particularly interesting the next 12 months. At the outset, the advantage appears to rest with the former, Union having by far the more arresting film array on its side.

Early contracts gave Union the services of Warner-First National, RKO Pathe, Columbia, Universal and British International, while Hoyt's had Fox and Paramount. It was generally conceded that, with United Artists remaining on the open market, whichever circuit got MGM would have the balance of power.

MGM has gone to Union, with the exception of 12 roadshows which have been bought by the Fullers.

In completing its deal, MGM was about six weeks behind the other distributors, and during the delay speculation was rife as to its intentions. Stories persisted that MGM would take over certain capital city theatres as Paramount did with the Melbourne Capitol, and that bids would be made for some of the assets of Union Theatres which have been advertised for sale by the receiver and liquidator. The final announcement shows that those rumors were unfounded. Insiders now attribute MGM's delay to the stiff prices asked by its chief, N. Bernard Freeman. Freeman knew very well that his product led the field last year, and he wasn't at all bashful, therefore, in demanding solid percentages.

Why Distributors Tear Their Hair

Of all film censorship tribunals, few have received more criticism than Australia's. A recent incident affords ample evidence why much of this criticism is undoubtedly well founded. "The Haunted Barn," a mystery burlesque produced by Efftee Films, local producers, was declared unfit for children, "because the wailing of the wind in the weird sound effects may have a frightening effect on the child mind." The ban was imposed by the Victorian official and was effective in that state only.

According to estimates in the past, however, the child ban in one state alone costs the producer or the distributor about $1,250 in every $5,000, and that was enough to start Efftee talking of throwing in the towel in Australia, if the censors weren't going to be more rational. F. W. Thring, head of Efftee, took his picture to the appeal authorities, and the restriction immediately was lifted. For the welfare of a considerable number of local artisans and players, it is just as well that it was. Thring certainly would have removed to London, and his heavy investments in the venture, already upwards of $250,000, would have gone with him. By producing in Australia, Thring will get his money back with interest, if the censors give him half a chance.

The Prince Edward Pays Dividends

While theatres 100 yards away are losing heavily, the Prince Edward of Sydney continues to pay dividends. It is conducted by Carroll-Musgrove Theatres, Ltd., and runs, mostly, extended-run pictures from Paramount with occasional specials from other sources. One of these, "Viennese Nights," held Paramount out while it ran for six months! In a circular to shareholders the directors talk of the encouraging results from operations during 1931 and point out that the whole of 1930 profits has been retained in the business. The dividend of 4 per cent of the 10 per cent participating preferences requires the disbursement of $10,000. That sum would represent the weekly loss of at least one and perhaps more Australian theatre circuits, if accounts were inspected.

Pastor Defends Films

The screen has been getting a great deal of adverse and beneficial publicity from the hands of a well known magistrate and a cleric who have taken up many columns of newspaper space in arguing the part that the motion picture plays in developing or stamping out crime among juveniles. So strongly does the magistrate feel that the screen casts an evil influence that in a case where a number of children were brought before him on a charge of thieving, he forbade their attendance at a film theatre for one year. The boys were residents of Newcastle, and local exhibitors accordingly wanted to know why they should be punished for somebody else's wrongdoing, declaring it was not fair to them that a magistrate's sentence should be so directly aimed at their livelihood.

The cleric agreed with the exhibitor and told his congregation, and, through the press, a great proportion of the Australian public, that "whatever harm some pictures may do, and it is my opinion such pictures are rare, the screen is calculated to do a mighty lot of good. Juvenile crime and immorality are not so much due to attendance at picture shows and the influence of the screen, as to non-attendance at church and Sunday school, and lack of moral discipline in the home."

The trouble is that the magistrate can't see it, and the next time a boy is called before him, no doubt the neighboring exhibitor will lose another patron for a year or so. Australia has a censorship system probably stricter than any other country in the world. Yet once a picture scrapes through there, it still remains at the mercy of district law officers who perhaps frequent the picture theatre twice a year!

Films For Foreign Market

Jack Bruce, a leading Australian cinematographer and a cameraman on James Cruze productions back in 1925, has returned to Sydney after a brief visit to America, with very definite opinions of Hollywood producers. He observes that they have the art of motion picture production as near perfection as they'll get it in black and white, but that they still labor under one big fault. He believes that they regard Australia, Canada and other countries outside England as just another territory, and are turning out product principally for the domestic market, with the result that so many of their pictures are proving unsuitable abroad. He feels that the larger corporations must soon realize their mistake and remedy it, or else their supremacy will be seriously threatened by Britain, whose output now rarely fails to fulfill the requirements of the dominions from which such big rentals can be obtained. He recalls how he sat in a New York theatre and heard an American audience roar with laughter at material which would be entirely shunned in Australia.

Winding Up Company Affairs

An order for the winding up of Union Theatres, Ltd., has been granted the co-related company, Amalgamated Pictures, Ltd., in the practice court, Melbourne.

In its petition, Amalgamated Pictures set out that Union was in its debt in the sum of $66,210 for money lent, Amalgamated alleging that Union was bankrupt and unable to meet its liabilities.

Union Theatres, Ltd., was registered in Victoria in July, 1914, and was capitalized at $5,000,000 in $5 shares. Paid-up capital amounted to $500,000.

WHAT PRICE FEELINGS!

Maybe it's worthwhile to change one's seat in the theatre, and then again, that depends a great deal upon the judge. Three plaintiffs sued Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., C. H. Lawd, manager of its Berkeley, Cal., theatre, and a city policeman, for $60,300, because, they claimed, they had been ousted from the house when they changed their seats. They were suing for $20,100 each. Superior Judge Gray, of Oakland, dismissed the case against all but the policeman. Deciding that the plaintiffs' feelings had been in a measure outraged, however, he rendered judgment against the cop for $10 each, which equals $30. What price outraged feelings, or changing seats!

INCREASED SALES AND ADVERTISING EFFORTS AID AMERICAN INDUSTRY

Advocates of This Policy Succeeded in Making Material Progress During Depression Period, Government Learns

In the belief that the focusing of attention on sound and successful operating policies will aid in developing motion picture business along constructive lines, MOTION PICTURE HERALD herewith presents the results of efforts made by the Department of Commerce to ascertain how American business leaders have succeeded in hurdling current economic obstacles.

Marked increases in sales and advertising efforts are the most important reasons given by the country's leading industrial and business firms which have made material progress during the present depression in maintaining or increasing sales volume or profits.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States Department of Commerce, in response to many demands from business organizations for such information, undertook several weeks ago the collection of instances where business and industrial organizations have made progress during the depression period. Three hundred and fifty-eight examples were gathered from the various district offices and from the commodity divisions of the Bureau and from business publications. These represent 202 manufacturing industries, 43 retail distributors and 10 wholesalers. They represent 74 cities, covering all key spots, in 30 states.

Many examples were not used in this study because their success, however pleasing it may seem, was not a result of their own efforts, but of a favorable demand caused by outside agencies. For instance, one manufacturer attributes its sales increase to the governmental stimulation of public improvements. There is, no doubt, some element of favorable general economic trend present in many of the cases analyzed, but wherever it seemed to be of greater importance than the business policies of the firm, the example was omitted.

In many cases, present success is attributed not so much to the present or to a change in policy, as to past policies, the soundness of which is accentuated by current conditions. Such instances are included, because it is believed by government authorities in charge of the investigation to be worthwhile to recognize policies which have laid a foundation of consumer confidence in the product and in the firm, and which have builded a strong financial structure, enabling the concerns involved to withstand the effects of depression and to make the now less expensive additions and renewals to plant and machinery.

In a few instances, certain firms have been included whose profit experience has not been wholly successful, but who have shown a definite plan of procedure to solve their problems, that appears to be sound and increasingly productive of good results as time goes on.

Policies Credited With Success

Summarized below are the reasons or types of policies that manufacturers and trades give for maintaining a successful record of sales or profits during the present depression period. Each figure represents the number of firms or industries that give the indicated reason as aiding in their success:

Marketing	254
Sales efforts	46

Other policies—administrative	7

With increased sales efforts and advertising policies leading as the most important reasons given by firms for their success, market research, reduced prices, cooperation with dealers, improvement of service and management of salesmen occupy a prominent position in the marketing program of the companies. Of scarcely less importance are the policies dealing with new products, quality, research diversification and modification. In their production policies, firms have focused most of their attention on reduction of operating expenses and the installation of modern equipment.

$1,895,467 Loew Net for Quarter

Loew's Incorporated reports net profit for the 12 weeks ended November 20, 1931, after depreciation and taxes, of $1,895,467, which compares with net profit of $2,687,-021 for the corresponding period in 1930.

The net for the 1931 period is equal, after preferred dividends on Loew's stocks, but before subsidiary preferred dividends, to $1.13 per share on 1,464,205 shares of no par common stock. For the corresponding period of 1930 the net was equal to $1.69 per share on the common, after both Loew's and subsidiary preferred dividends.

Operating profit for the 1931 period was $3,003,701, compared with $3,887,979 in the corresponding 1930 period. David Bernstein, vice president and treasurer, said most of the $800,000 decrease occurred in the first six weeks of the fiscal year, from September 1 to October 15. From October 15 on he reported business on a par with that of the like period in 1930. Depreciation and taxes for the 1931 period equaled $1,-108,234, compared with $1,200,958 in the 1930 period.

Rules Distributor Cases Be Tried at Location of Branch

Exhibitor defendants in court actions brought by distributors will henceforth be denied a venue change unless the convenience of witnesses is better served thereby, according to a ruling by Supreme Court Justice Horton at Buffalo, N. Y., this week.

Heretofore, exhibitor defendants have had the legal right to demand trial of the cases in which they are involved in a court of the county of their residence, thus making it necessary for the distributor complainant, on frequent occasions, to bring witnesses long distances to trials and, in every instance, at least forcing him to appear to make his motions for a change of venue to the county in which the exchange is located. Thus, according to the ruling, whenever the convenience of witnesses is best served thereby, film cases will be heard arbitrarily in the county where the complainants' exchange is located.

Sees Need of Reciprocity

Simon Rowson, important leader in the motion picture industry in Great Britain, recently expressed the belief that it is the duty of British exhibitors to get together and indicate to American film interests that there should be, and must be, reciprocity.

Russian Sojuskino Reorganized

Sojuskino, state film trust of Soviet Russia, is undergoing a complete reorganization, according to advices from abroad. A number of film trusts under state control are to be created, handling various phases of the industry.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

Executive changes are the order of the day at Radio. Charles E. Sullivan, formerly with E. B. Derr in the Howard Hughes organization and previous to that with the Kennedy-Derr-Pathe organization, goes in, presumably to be active in the business management of the big Radio plant on Gower street. Derr has landed with Metro as an associate producer. Louis A. Sarecky, long righthand man to William LeBaron at Radio, goes to Columbia as an associate producer. Charles R. Rogers is definitely out of the combined Radio-Pathe organization, and rumors are persistent he may engage in independent production. William LeBaron is now a unit producer for Radio, with a contract which runs for some time yet. He is supervising the Radio musical, "Girl Crazy." Mary Astor is the latest star to leave the Radio roster. It is announced she will freelance after finishing her part in "Lost Squadron."

The scene shifts from Hollywood to New York in the matter of union labor negotiations. A delegation from here has left to open producer-union conferences in New York next Friday. Studio locals of the ITASE are concerned, including cameramen, sound recordists, laboratory workers, projectionists and others. Sound men are anxious to win studio recognition for their union. Cameramen have resisted all effort to induce them to take cuts.

One of the most important meetings of the week here was that of Clark Gable and J. C. Jenkins, HERALD Columnist and roving ambassador. Jaysee was greatly impressed with Gable and promised to drop in at Cadiz, Ohio, next spring, to tell the local folks what a wonder their hometown boy had turned out to be. Jenkins leaves shortly for a tour of Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

Joseph I. Breen, executive assistant to Will H. Hays, arrived in town this week for an extended stay, accompanied by Mrs. Breen and four of the Breenlets. Breen will make a thorough study of the activities of the producers' association while here, with a view of keeping his boss in intimate touch with the business of making pictures in the future. General Hays is expected later in the month.

Wynn Gibson is the newest star on the Paramount roster. Due to her splendid work in "Ladies of the Big House" and "Two Kinds of Women," she has been given the title role in "Clara Deane."

A tip: all the wise ones say that Lubitch's latest, "The Man I Killed," is one of the best he ever has made, which is something. Features Lionel Barrymore, Phillips Holmes, Nancy Carroll.

Speaking of Paramount, they had some tough luck on "The Miracle Man," now being made into a sound picture. Tyrone Power, who was playing the title role, died in the midst of production. That old stalwart, Hobart Bosworth, is slated to succeed him.

Columbia studios will be inactive the next few weeks while Harry Cohn, production prexy, confers in New York with Joe Brandt and other home office officials.

Harry Arthur of Fox West Coast is returning to New York to complete the decentralization process on Fox theatre operations. Jack Frost, former Southern California division manager, has been transferred to Seattle. J. J. Porter, former owner of the United Artists house in Portland, is announced as head of all Fox West Coast operations in that spot.

Upon completion of the present program, no more short subjects will be made under the Pathe banner. New ones will carry the Radio trademark. No decision on number and character of the new season's short subjects from Radio will be made until Hiram Brown arrives to confer with studio executives.

Marion Davies was hostess to 2,700 children at a holiday party in the MGM studios. Every youngster went away with a valuable present. No one in the picture business does more for the needy—in fact, it is unlikely anyone else does so much as Marion Davies.

Having completed the move to its Westwood studios, Fox will start three pictures immediately.

Gene Stratton, starred in those old silent mortgage lifters, "Keeper of the Bees," "Laddie" and "Freckles," from the novels by her grandmother, Gene Stratton-Porter, made her stage debut Monday night with the Beverly Hills Little Theatre for Professionals. She had been out of pictures five years while completing her education, but hopes to greet you on the screen again soon.

Frank O'Hearn, vice president in charge of maintenance for Radio, is in Hollywood from New York on a tour of inspection.

Wehrenberg Plea Urges War On Tax

The greatest danger menacing the industry in 1932 is the threatened 10 per cent admission tax, it was pointed out by Fred Wehrenberg of St. Louis, chairman of the board of the MPTOA, in an appeal to exhibitors to unite for the defeat of the proposal. He brands the tax as "unfair, a nuisance and a discriminatory imposition."

The industry will go on record to that effect at the MPTOA convention, scheduled for March 14-16 at Washington, which Wehrenberg will attend.

In his capacity of president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, Wehrenberg issued a message to member-exhibitors, in which he said they will have to be real showmen in 1932. Pointing out that the film industry has not suffered to quite the extent that other merchandising businesses have, he said: "All of us are moving as close to the edge as we can to avoid embarrassment, yet despite all that, I see many bright spots looming in the year we are about to enter."

Egyptian Asks Clement Wood To Write Film Story Series

Clement Wood, author who has spent considerable time in Egypt, has been requested by Yussif Pasha, a wealthy Egyptian, to write a motion picture series depicting Egyptian life as it really is. The Egyptian government, says the official, is tired of seeing its country and peoples misrepresented on the screen as a land of murder and intrigue, or as an impossibly fantistic dreamland, born in the imagination of directors and writers who never have seen it.

"The land that gave birth to civilization gave the world its most famous woman. Yet Cleopatra, a great legislator, a queen, a woman warrior, the first woman who stood up for the rights of her sex in a man-made civilization, who first said, 'Give me liberty or give me death,' is known generally to Americans and Europeans merely as a fascinating harlot.

"Clement Wood, we hope, will accept the commission. We feel that he can put contemporary and historic Egypt before the people of the world as a real, existing, red-blooded country with the same faults and virtues as the rest of them."

See Ontario Failing To Get Convictions in Trust Cases

Two weeks remain during which the Ontario government must provide details of specific instances of alleged violations of the Canadian Combines Act by motion picture producers and distributors now under indictment at Toronto.

With this information not forthcoming from the government to date, betting in Toronto now stands at two to one that convictions will not be registered against the Toronto film exchanges and individuals in the prosecutions which will feature the York County Winter Assizes scheduled to start January 11. It is argued that if it was found at the preliminary hearing that the evidence was not sufficient, relatively the same conclusion will be reached when the cases are heard at the Assizes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Much as anticipated, theatre receipts for the calendar week which ended January 2, very materially "came back," as compared with the total for the previous two weeks. The total figure this week, from 185 theatres in 30 cities reached $2,702,683, an increase of $657,475 over the total for the last calendar week, ended December 26, of $2,045,208 from 178 theatres in 30 cities. Further indication of the substantial gain recorded this week was the establishment of new high individual theatre grosses in eight theatres with only two new "lows" recorded, which compares with last week's record of no new "highs" and 29 new "lows."

SELECTIONS

Made by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

An increased number of above-average productions in all classes is noted in Mrs. McGoldrick's Selections for the past month. The subjects described represent a veritable "Selection of Selections," including outstanding productions from the choices of various organized reviewing agencies, represented in leading church and civic organizations.

Family Suitability

BIG SHOT, THE — GOOD
RKO-Pathe

An amusing manner of presenting slapstick cemedy so that the usual offensiveness is lacking. There is a love interest throughout, also a rival reality in which the hero unwittingly becomes the proprietor of valuable sulphur springs which make his fortune. (Eddie Quillan, Maureen O'Sullivan and Mary Nolan.)

DELICIOUS — GOOD
Fox

The irresistible combination of Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell presented in a pleasing and romantic story, with fine musical accompaniment. "Delicious" is exactly what its name implies—an outstanding family audience picture without a risque line or situation and with clean, fresh humor. Those who have loved Janet Gaynor in "Daddy Long Legs" will find her equally attractive as a young Scotch immigrant, who, coming to this country, has unending trials to untangle before she solves the problem of her love affair.

EMMA — EXCELLENT
MGM

Marie Dressler reaches new heights in this story of the devotion of a servant in a motherless family, loving, self-sacrificing and misunderstood. Her tenderness to the children of another woman, and her deep goodness of heart are registered appealingly. Miss Dressler is pre-eminently suited to interpret the part of the understanding Emma, whose good humor and kindness carry this story to fine dramatic heights.

HELL DIVERS — VERY GOOD
MGM

This is an adaptation of a story by Lieutenant Commander Frank Wead. It is magnificently photographed and worked out with the cooperation of the U. S. Navy. The plot is incidental but convincing, and concerns the friendships and difficulties of two enlisted men. Pictorially the film is thrilling. (Wallace Beery, Clark Gable, Conrad Nagel, Dorothy Jordan, Marjorie Rambeau.)

MAKER OF MEN — VERY GOOD
Columbia

Football is the means used by a father to make a man of his son and to make him appreciate the traditions and standards of his Alma Mater. How the son succeeds in winning his father's approbation is shown in this clean, interesting picture having for its main feature some very fine football sequences. Jack Holt and Richard Cromwell are well cast in the roles of father and son.

PARTNERS — GOOD
RKO Pathe

A western that is convincingly done; has excellent riding and sympathetic characterizations. It tells the story of a Civil War veteran and his young grandson, who were befriended by a young ranchman. (Tom Keene, Nancy Drexel and Otis Harlan.)

POCATELLO KID, THE — GOOD
Tiffany

Ken Maynard plays the dual role of a young and likable bandit and his brother, a wicked sheriff. The bandit is forced into the sheriff's position and upholds the law that the sheriff had flouted. A fast-moving and enjoyable Western. (Ken Maynard, Marcelline Day, Richard Cramer, Charles King.)

PUSS IN BOOTS — GOOD
Picture Classics

A somewhat modernized version of the favorite fairy tale presented in the form of a children's operetta. The cast is well chosen and the parts well played. "Wee Willie" Robyn, well known on stage and radio plays the part of the King.

RAINBOW TRAIL, THE — GOOD
Fox

An adaptation of Zane Grey's novel of the same name which tells the story of Arizona's gold fields in 1880. Besides spirited riding, without which no Western could be a Western, there is bright humor and magnificent background, ably photographed. (George O'Brien, Cecilia Parker and Roscoe Ates.)

SOOKY — EXCELLENT
Paramount

This is the second chapter in the screened story of "Skippy," in which the two small boys, with their loyal passion for each other, have some highly amusing adventures and some heart-tearing moments of boyhood woes. In a sense it is a classic of childhood for adults, for notwithstanding the fact that its juvenile cast was intended to provide entertainment for children, its pathos is almost too much for them. The acting of Jackie Cooper as Skippy and young Robert Coogan as Sooky is a revelation; apparently never camera conscious for one instant, they go on the devious ways of boyhood with completely natural indifference. We hope these talented young actors will be cast next in a picture of light hearted laughter and happier accomplishments.

WONDERS OF THE CONGO — EXCELLENT
Martin Johnson

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson return from Africa with another nature thriller, presenting many new bits of the territory and animal life, but featuring the gorilla at his home in the forest. We believe that this is their best offering to the stay-at-homes.

Adult Suitability

ARROWSMITH — EXCELLENT
MGM

A unanimously acclaimed dramatic success that is a faithful reproduction of the Sinclair Lewis novel. This is the story of a young physician, Martin Arrowsmith, played in the picture by Ronald Colman, who as the doctor in a small town, becomes weary of the drudgery of his practice. He accepts an opportunity to become an assistant to a noted scientist, engaged in research work in New York. Although he loves his wife with a great love he is so obsessed by his work that he fails to give her the companionship she craves. His great scientific opportunity comes to him when he is sent to the West Indies to fight the dreaded plague, and there meets his own great tragedy. (Ronald Colman, Helen Hayes, Richard Bennett and A. E. Anson.)

BRANDED MEN — GOOD
Tiffany

Ken Maynard and his remarkable horse, Tarzan, are the leading figures in this story of the west. Clear photography and an exciting story in which the villains are finally caught by the sheriff and the hero struggles for his life on the edge of a precipice, make this good entertainment for those who will travel far to see an oldtime Western picture. (Ken Maynard, June Clyde, Charles King.)

CONVICTED — GOOD
Artclass

A mystery story of murder aboard ship with a clever crime investigator solving the problem. There is a romance that adds enjoyment. Several innocent persons are under suspicion and the solution will prove a surprise to the audience. (Aileen Pringle, Jameson Thomas, Harry Meyers, Niles Welch.)

FRANKENSTEIN — VERY GOOD
Universal

"Frankenstein" is the story of a medical scientist who attempts to create a living man and succeeds in producing a monster. This theme has been translated to the screen with brilliant technique. It is too horrifying in theme and in treatment, however, for young people. (Colin Clive, Boris Karloff, Mae Clarke.)

GALLOPING THROUGH — GOOD
Monogram

An oldtime Western thriller with fine riding and beautiful scenery. The hero performs the usual impossible feat of wiping out a band of villainous desperadoes. (Tom Tyler, Betty Mack, Al Bridge.)

THE GIRL OF THE RIO — VERY GOOD
RKO

Based on the stage play "The Dove," this picture is filmed against a colorful background of tile roofs, arched doorways and picturesque patios of a little Mexican border town, where the "Dove" fought for the life of her American lover, wrongfully accused of murder. Leo Carrillo's suave villainy and Dolores Del Rio's beautiful, appealing heroism, make it an original, interesting adaptation of an old success. The picture should prove good entertainment for any adult audience.

SELECTION OF PICTURE SELECTIONS

Paramount
Taken from the stage play, "Marriage Bed," by Ernest Pascal, this is the story of a wife's struggle to keep her husband and preserve her home. Realizing that his love for another woman is only temporary, the wife combats this infatuation by a wiser method than the usual divorce. Ably cast and well directed, this picture will prove entertaining to a thoughtful audience. (Clive Brook, Charles Ruggles, Vivienne Osborne, Juliette Compton.)

LADIES OF THE BIG HOUSE GOOD
Paramount
A story of a blind justice, tense and dramatic, but suitable only for mature audiences. A young couple are railroaded to prison for a murder they did not commit. Their helplessness in the face of criminal, official and political crookedness is clearly depicted but the story is given a happy ending. (Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond, Wynne Gibson, Earle Fox.)

MEN OF CHANCE GOOD
RKO Radio
A melodrama of the racetracks with some thrilling racing sequences and picturesque paddock showings, first at Longchamps and later in Kentucky. A quite believable story has been given life by the capable acting of its cast. (Ricardo Cortez, John Hallidan and Mary Astor.)

PEACH O' RENO VERY GOOD
RKO Radio
This is a real comedy, satirizing the Nevada six weeks' residence law. Wheeler and Woolsey are seen at their best as a firm of divorce lawyers. They are admirably supported by a well known cast.

PRIVATE LIVES VERY GOOD
MGM
Taken from the stage play of the same name, this is the story of a young couple who, having been divorced, marry again, and, while on their honeymoon with their new mates, meet at the same hotel. They decide they still love each other, and many humorous and ridiculous situations arise before this sparkling farce is brought to an end. The excellent cast and clever dialogue add to the entertainment value of this sophisticated production. (Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery, Reginald Denny, Una Merkel.)

RANGE LAW GOOD
Tiffany
An interesting Western story that is well worked out. The hero is in jail for a crime he did not commit, but escapes and gets the man responsible for his arrest. A series of fights, a stage robbery and a love interest develop with a final clearing of everything. (Ken Maynard, Frances Dade, Frank Mayo.)

THE SEA GHOST VERY GOOD
Peerless
This interesting story by Burnet Hershey is one of the sea and the secret of a submarine captain. There are fine scenes of a salvaging boat and divers at work. Well worth seeing. (Laura La Plante, Alan Hale, Clarence Wilson, Claude Allister.)

THE SECRET WITNESS VERY GOOD
Columbia
An entertaining mystery film based on Samuel Spewack's novel, "Murder in the Gilded Cage." Suspects are questioned, theories advanced, and a clever mechanical device used in the solution. An intlligent cast gives a convincing performance. (Una Merkel, William Collier, Jr., Zasu Pitts, Purnell Pratt.)

X MARKS THE SPOT GOOD
Tiffany
This is a well written and well played melodrama of crime and newspaper men. An actress is murdered and a reporter who has called at her apartment regarding a libel suit brought against his paper, is held. There is a tense courtroom scene and an exciting finish. (Lew Cody, Sally Blane, Fred Kohler, Wallace Ford, Mary Nolan.)

Foreign Features

BATTLE OF GALLIPOLI VERY GOOD
British International
Known in England as "Tell England," a better title, this film deals with the attack on Gallipoli during the Great War. Like "Journey's End," it has an all-male cast, with two school boys who enter the war together and go through until one sees the other die. The picture is a moving one and serves again to keep before us the horrors and the futility of war. (Carl Harboard, Tony Bruce, Dennis Hoey, C. M. Hallard.)

KILLING TO LIVE VERY GOOD
Amkino
This is a natural history, silent film produced by the Shock Brigade of the Educational Film Studio of Soyuzkino of Russia and offered with an explanatory lecture in English. It emphasizes the struggle for life of animals, reptiles and birds, and shows how one feeds on the other in the desperate fight to live. The underlying thought of the film is stated: "Philosophers have only explained the world; the thing to do is to change the world." Experiments in animal husbandry and artificial selections are pictured to show how this change is possible. Clear and beautiful photography, good continuity and well chosen material result in an unusually interesting film which, we understand, took two years to make.

Short Subjects

AFRICA SQUEAKS GOOD
MGM
A Flip the Frog cartoon, parodying "Africa Speaks."

BOOP-OOP-A-DOOP GOOD
Columbia
A Talkartoon showing the animals attending a circus. Amusing and clever in parts.

BATTER UP EXCELLENT
Warner
One of the "Penrod" stories, written especially for the screen, which are admirably adapted for children. This concerns itself with the affairs of a baseball team. (Bobby Jordan and Billy Hayes.)

BEYOND THE RIO GRANDE
Rothacker Productions VERY GOOD
One of a series of unusually interesting and beautiful views of Mexico.

CAMPING OUT GOOD
RKO Pathe
Edgar Kennedy, Florence Lake and Dot Farley make delightful entertainment of this story of a long-suffering husband who buys a trailer and with the family goes camping. His exasperation with his wife's relations and his attempt at self-control are very funny. The Edgar Kennedy comedies are genuinely funny.

GIOACHINO ROSSINI EXCELLENT
Fitzpatrick Productions
An incident from the life of the great composer is shown, with the Victor Concert Orchestra directed by Nathaniel Shilkret, playing selections from Rossini's operas. An excellent short subject.

JERUSALEM THE HOLY CITY
Ideal Pictures VERY GOOD
Beautiful views of the Holy City and its people, Christian, Moslem and Jew, with interesting comments by J. M. Kandel.

MUSICAL JUSTICE GOOD
Paramount
Singers and music are placed on trial with Rudy Vallee as judge and his orchestra as jury. A novel and entertaining short subject.

ONE GOOD DEED VERY GOOD
Warner
An episode of Penrod's career. This time he tries being a doctor, and with his dog makes a thrilling capture of an escaped convict. (Billy Hayes and Bobby Jordan.)

RED-HEADED BABY GOOD
Vitaphone
A Merrie Melody cartoon of a doll shop that comes to life after midnight.

ROCKNE VERY GOOD
Fox
Magic Carpet of Movietone. The fascinating career of the famous football coach, Knute Rockne, is outlined in this one of the well known picture series.

SIGHTSEEING IN NEW YORK GOOD
Picture Classics
The first of a series featuring Nick and Tony, two amusing Italians who conduct sightseeing tours around New York.

THE SPIDER AND THE FLY EXCELLENT
Columbia
All reviewing groups are unanimous in their conclusion that this is the prize winning cartoon of the year. The theme is worked out with brilliant originality in a series of clever drawings. The rhythm is perfect and the sound accompaniments exactly right.

SLIDE, BABE, SLIDE EXCELLENT
Universal
An interesting baseball comedy with Babe Ruth starring, circumstances that will especially interest boys.

TORCHY TURNS THE TRICK GOOD
Educational
One of the "Torchy" comedies. Torchy, the aspiring clerk, wins a steel contract with the help of his employer's daughter. (Dorothy Dix and Roy Cooke.)

WEEKEND MYSTERY VERY GOOD
Warner
A Van Dine mystery story. Who was the murderer? The mystery is cleverly solved by Donald Meeks.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" should prove box office for most every theatre by reason of its title, its cast and its powerful "audience values." While a wee bit gruesome here and there, it is stirring entertainment and can be counted on to click for most houses.

The title is certainly well enough known on the highways and byways and even the backwoods trails to mean far more than usual for the theatre which backs up this thriller with a strong selling campaign. It naturally lends itself to exploitation and all sorts of advertising ideas of the kind that not only attract the attention of the theatre patrons in search of entertainment, but make them curious to see how the talking screen has handled this old favorite. And its my pleasure to report that Paramount has done a grand job with this one. The same is true of Frederic Marsh, Miriam Hopkins and the others of a fine cast.

The picture, once you get them into your house, will hold them tight to their seats until the final fadeout. Camera work is nothing short of marvelous in the transformation scenes and helps make the character more real to the audience. So go ahead and promise them a most unusual evening of entertainment and you'll not be kidding them at all.

The theme of the picture provides a hundred different slants to go to work on. You'll have a tough time convincing any boss that you could not work out a business-getting campaign for a picture like this. Work on that title, the story, the stars and the powerful drama behind the plot, without revealing anything more than most people already know about this well-known character of fiction.

While the picture is not for children, it can fit anywhere else and should pay healthy returns at the box office as a reward for selling it the way it should be sold. The best thing I can add to this discussion about "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is that if Paramount will continue to deliver such pictures it certainly will have something to shout about.

"MATA HARI" gives you every angle for show-selling ever grouped into any one picture. It has a title with a peculiar fascination for the average fan; stars galore, with additional names to help it along—and an audience picture in every sense of the word. If you want more than that then you're hard to satisfy.

Without exactly giving any idea of the picture itself, here is a box office title. Where the story about this famous spy is known, it's just that much more of a pushover. Properly advertised there's nothing on earth to stop it from establishing a record for most houses and most certainly for the towns where Garbo is the ruling passion of the patrons.

In "audience value" you will rarely find a greater or more absorbing story to hold the customers' attention and interest right through. And even those who would turn up their noses a little at La Garbo will be won over by her marvelous work in this outstanding picture.

MGM seems bent on setting a pace never equaled in this film business of ours. How they can maintain that pace is what surprises all the know-it-alls who like to predict that "they can't keep it up." Well, they certainly seem to be keeping it up and have a batch of recent releases to prove it. But to let these pictures shift for themselves would be a crime of the worst sort. No showman can afford to let up on the advertising and merchandising of such product. That extra noise you make about these outstanding pictures is what breaks records.

We can be prepared for big business when you play "Mata Hari," but it merits more, the sort of campaign that one should look for on exceptional pictures.

Best played away from Sunday or kid days, otherwise the b. o. is wide open and you should fill the till with many a shekel that ordinarily might not come to your window. But this kind of product will make 'em steady fans. Get the full cast, etc., from the HERALD informative review in this same issue. Then get busy. You've got money coming to you.

"LADIES OF THE BIG HOUSE" gives us another pleasing performance from Sylvia Sidney and one that will add to her ever increasing popularity. Supported by a fine surrounding cast, we find in this picture screen fare slightly above the average, and possessing enough possibilities to bring the business of your theatre well above the average.

The title has plenty of TNT for the showman who knows enough about selling a picture to grasp the many angles and line them up for his campaign. Besides that title you have the star and her supporting cast to sell in larger-than-usual type. The prison angle gives it that much more pull.

In "audience value" it is far from 100 per cent, but in most spots will be accepted as a good picture. Where many a big city critic will find situations a little dragged out, the average audience will enjoy every moment of it. That's what counts anyway.

Selling angles can be centered on the tremendous love of these two young people or on the terrible trouble they are thrown into through no direct fault of theirs. Miss Sidney's work in "Street Scene" and "American Tragedy" is also a valuable angle to play up. However, that depends on how these pictures clicked in your theatre. The prison scenes are interesting even if some folk may doubt them a bit, but somehow or other anything about prisons attracts more than passing interest and here you get the women's jail angle. The cells for the condemned are likewise interesting, and though a bit morbid will give the customer something to shed a tear about. Many a tear was carefully injected into this one and maybe that's why the sob-sisters will get a full evening's entertainment when they buy a ticket to your theatre.

Get behind this picture and promise them a fine piece of entertainment plus a grand performance by Sylvia Sidney; you'll deliver the goods and should satisfy all of them. No good for the kids and best played away from the Sabbath.

Charlie Chan's Chance

(Fox)

Mystery

(Seen at Hollywood)

Here is another of those entertaining mysteries concerning Earl Derr Biggers' Charlie Chan, the Chinese-Hawaiian detective who rambles far from mid-Pacific to untie puzzling crime knots. The story of "Charlie Chan's Chance," done for the screen by Fox, lacks sufficient fast action, it was thought. As a murder mystery it has too much talk, delaying its surprises until their punch is gone.

Competently cast, well directed and skillfully enacted, the picture has everything except the requisite interest-tension, general comment indicated. This may mean that Charlie Chan is about to retire from print and screen, that the talented Biggers has written out the inspiration kindled when he went night-policing in Honolulu a few years since, to discover that some of the cleverest men of the island capital's detective bureau were of mixed Chinese and Kanaka blood.

Warner Oland, termed sincere and delightful as Charlie Chan, has to say a few too many of the quasi-Oriental epigrams which are a trademark of the character, such as "One lie may have many children and hold family reunion at liar's house."

Oland has capable support from Marion Nixon, Alexander Kirkland, H. B. Warner, James Kirkwood, Ralph Morgan and the others who make up rather a lengthy cast. Herbert Bunston was well received for his character sketch of a gentleman who tells cops with scorn what he thinks of them. Miss Nixon elicits sympathy in rather an unsympathetic role, but is shy of ardor in a brief love scene. Jimmy Wong has a pleasing bit as a Chinese Boy Scout. Linda Watkins' work is good in a small part.

The essentials of production, sound, art, direction and photography, were noted as well handled. Some of the scenes are of striking beauty.

Produced and distributed by Fox. From story by Earl Derr Biggers. Adapted for screen by Philip Klein and Barry Conners. Directed by John G. Blystone. Assisted by Jasper Blystone. Photographed by Joseph August. Sound, Albert Protzman. Art director, Gordon Wiles. Release date, January 24, 1932.

Mata Hari

(MGM)

Espionage Drama

Greta Garbo, blonde, languidly striking, delightfully accented of speech, played the screen Mata Hari, far famed German spy, to an enormous crowd at the New York Capitol during the New Year's weekend.

Partly responsible for the S.R.O. attendance, in addition to Miss Garbo, were the names in the acknowledged brilliant support: Lionel Barrymore, as the Russian general, infatuated with Mata; Ramon Novarro, Russian aviation officer, in love with, and loved by Mata; Lewis Stone, Mata's chief as director of German spies in France; C. Henry Gordon, French intelligence officer on the trail of Mata, and other in less important but equally effective characterizations.

Miss Garbo, comment indicated, rendered a sincere, living portrayal of the beautiful dancer and spy, who though she captivated men and showed no heart, as dictated by her profession, yet lost her heart to Novarro, and finally met her death, as a spy, before a French firing squad, in the cold dawn of a winter morning in 1917.

The story is perhaps too well known to require more than sketching here. Mata Hari, exotic dancer, exerts her languid, fascinating spell over Paris, the while she gathers her valuable information as a German spy. Infatuated with her, and used by her as an excellent source of information, is Barrymore, who responds to the crack of her whip. Accidentally she meets Novarro, and learning that he carries important dispatches to and from Paris and Moscow by plane, permits him to see her. Gordon, continually foiled, is nevertheless sure of her identity and sets trap after trap for her, all of which she eludes.

Novarro has important dispatches. She goes to his suite, entices him to another room, and the package of letters is taken, photographed, replaced. In a sharp, tense scene next day at the quarters of Barrymore, she admits her identity to Barrymore in order to quiet his suspicion that she has been making love to Novarro. He calls the police, and she kills him and makes good her escape. Hearing that Novarro has been wounded in flight, she seeks him in a hospital, finds him blind. On the way out, she is captured by Gordon. A short, but effective trial scene results in her conviction. The blind Novarro visits her in her cell before the execution, believing it a sanitarium, believing she is to undergo an operation. The scene gripped the Capitol audience, as Mata Hari, her career ended, her lover lost, is led away between ranks of French poilus, while drums beat the march and the dawn breaks.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by George Fitzmaurice. Authors, Benjamin Glazer, Leo Birinski. Additional dialogue, Doris Anderson, Gilbert Emery. Editor, Frank Sullivan. Cameraman, William Daniels. Release date, December 26, 1931. Running time, 91 minutes.

Man of Mayfair

(Paramount)

Jack Buchanan and Cinderella

(Seen in London)

This Paramount British picture is not made of the stuff which Jack Buchanan of Hollywood would have been expected to show Mr. Lubitsch. But it is amusing: even at times when it is supposed to bring tears to the eyes. It has been made obviously for the popular patron who likes a little off the trowel, even in a comedy.

Jack, who unfortunately or otherwise is Lord William Kingsland, falls in love with a little stage star, whose mother believes her to be a theatre dresser. "She must always behave as befits her station" says mother. So the girl reciprocates her lordly lover's affections. How can they get together in the open? Difficult. Mother keeps a country tea halt, so "m'lord" calls in the guise of a customer, and later again as a theatre fireman. He gets called upon to do all sorts of odd jobs, from hiving a swarm of bees, to washing up dishes and serving tea. All seems set for the happy ending, when the girl remembers there is a skeleton in the family cupboard: a brother in gaol. But so there is in the Kingsland family, so what does it matter? Mother is a bit dubious, but then she didn't really think a young lord could be such a nice fellow, which is more than all audiences will say about plain Jack Buchanan.

There are plenty of funny situations for him, however, and he gets in one or two of his own special dance turns—in the kitchen with stacks of plates, etc. Quite a good lightweight subject, without any claims to super rank. Acting, photography and direction are tip top: it is the story which weakens the film.

The Dragnet Patrol

(Action Pictures)

Melodrama

A rum-running melodrama with a fair portion of fast action on the water, is this latest from Action, independent company. Thought to have been performed by the leading players in a straightforward manner, and with no false motion, the story has its share, or perhaps a bit more than its share, of romance and domestic difficulties.

Glenn Tryon, sailor, leaves the naval service to marry Vera Reynolds, and incidentally, to become a member of the crew of a fishing boat. But Vera is much too much desirous of luxury for her husband to supply her wants as a fisherman. She induces him to try the rum-running racket as a means to quick and plentiful wherewithall. The idea works, and Tryon is counting his gold in large quantities, while his wife spends it for him in equally large quantities.

A girl, in the nature of a siren, steps into the picture and into the perhaps mutual affection of Tryon. The fact that she is, so to speak, the boss's private property, has something to do with the outcome. She gives Tryon a speedboat, and when he is wounded in a small battle with federal agents, goes to her apartment for treatment. The wife and the revengeful boss follow rapidly with revolvers, but the final sequence clears the situation.

Vera learns her lesson and Tryon goes back to his fishing boat, wiser but better off. Marjorie Beebe, Vernon Dent and Walter Long handle the other major supporting roles, while the direction of Richard Thayer was thought to have been capable in the handling of a melodramatic story.

Presented by Ralph M. Like. Distributed by Action Pictures Corporation. Directed by Frank Strayer. Supervised by Cliff Broughton. Story and adaptation by W. Scott Darling. Photography by Jules Cronjager. Release date, December 15, 1931. Running time, 59 minutes.

The Woman from Monte Carlo

(First National)

Drama

Warner Brothers here introduces to American film audiences the exotic, willowy and attractive Lil Dagover, imported from the German stage, where she has done innumerable things of note.

In this rather melodramatic story of a flashy woman who likes the better things of life, marries a French naval commander and is not able to make a go of doing the right thing, Miss Dagover is supported by Walter Huston as her husband, Warren William, lower rank officer of Huston's command, and lover of Miss Dagover; John Wray as the revengeful officer who desires Huston's command and is infatuated with his wife; George E. Stone as William's loyal aide.

All did well in their respective roles, it was generally conceded by several of the patrons at the New York Strand last week. The balance of the rather large cast was thought to have handled themselves in a capable fashion.

Huston brings his ship into port where his wife is waiting. Unable to go ashore, he sends William with a note, asking her to attend a dance aboard that night. Here we have a hint that the two were lovers previously. On board that night Miss Dagover becomes vastly annoyed at the captain's inability to give her the attention she desires as a young and vital woman.

War is declared while the dance is on, and the ship is cleared of guests. William is requested by Huston to escort his wife ashore. Instead, William takes her to his cabin. They are interrupted by Wray, who suspects, though the woman is hidden. Before anything can be done, the ship weighs anchor, with the woman aboard.

While the two men are in the cabin a ship is sighted, which flashes the "friendly" signal. It proves to be an enemy vessel and the battleship is sunk. William and Huston are wounded, and Stone succeeds in getting the commander's wife ashore safely. At the court martial which follows, Wray incriminates Huston by failing to admit he, too, saw the friendly signal. William enters the court to discredit Wray, but is believed insane. Miss Dagover, in a climax scene, testifies that Wray is lying, admitting she was in the cabin. Saving her husband's honor as an officer, she ruins her own. A final sequence finds her returned to her old haunts as a luxury-pursuing woman.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Michael Curtiz. Based on story by Claude Ferrere and Lucien Nepoty. Screen play and dialogue by Harvey Thew. Editor, Harold McLernon. Assistant director, Joe Barry. Art director, Anton Grot. Cameraman, Ernest Haller. Running time, 58 minutes.

The Pocatello Kid

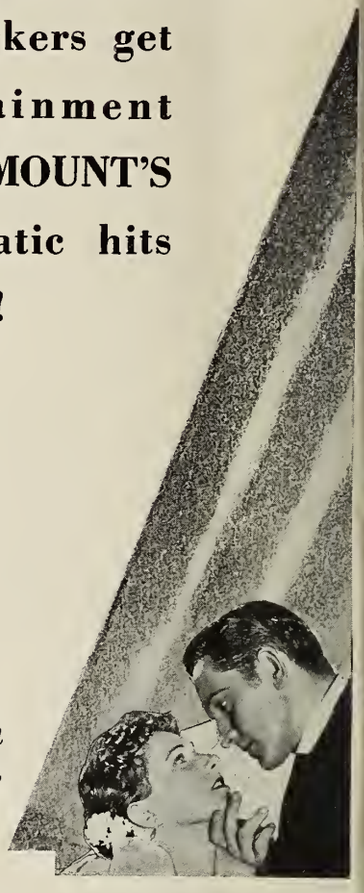
(Tiffany)

Western

Ken Maynard in another of his group of Westerns for Tiffany. In this case he plays the part of an outlaw, who turning to the straight path, and assuming, in an unexpected manner, the job of sheriff, does his part well, cleans up the bandit gang, and wins the girl, niece of the gang's leader. Marceline Day takes care of the feminine half of the romantic interest in the film.

There is no dearth of the hard riding, fast shooting and battles royal which western fans of all ages seem to thoroughly enjoy and youngsters devour in unlimited quantities. Ken's beautiful horse, Starlight, gives his master good service at all times, and is a joy to watch.

Maynard, serving time to save his worthless brother, the sheriff, escapes with the aid of the horse, but is wounded. He makes his way to a ranch, arriving just after his brother's murder, the latter having been working in cahoots with the cow thieves. Maynard is forced to change clothes with his brother and the dead sheriff, image of Maynard, is thought to be the escaped outlaw. That puts Maynard in the sheriff's office, where, discovering the manner in which his brother had been conducting himself, he turns straight and resolves to get the gang. Miss Day, niece of the leader, may have had something to do with the decision, we are led to understand.



The outlaws, realizing the pseudo-sheriff cannot be touched, plan to get him. In one of the several battles which thunderously occur, Maynard learns from a dying member of the

High Pressure

(Warners)

Comedy

This piece contains almost as many chuckles as there are lines, if an audience be any criterion. Incidental music isn't needed. If "High Pressure" had a theme song it would be drowned out by the bursts and choruses of ha-has that accompany the action.

As a basic asset, there is a clever and ridiculous plot, supplied by Aben Candel's stage play, "Hot Money." Adapted to the screen by Joe Jackson, the story is filled with gaiety and swift comedy action. Mr. Jackson also is credited with the dialogue, whose lines registered without apparent effort by the actors. Director Mervyn LeRoy was believed to have presented it with such vigor as to make the production a technical delight as well as a joy to the audience. The fun is perfectly timed, and essentials only appear in the finished play.

Called on to depict a high-pressure promoter who first promotes himself, Mr. Powell registered high with a Coast audience as a comedian —and as a promoter, too. George Sidney as Colonel Ginsberg, his financial backer, supplies so much of the merriment that he easily shares honors with the star. For that matter, there are honors all around—it was conceded—Evelyn Brent, charming and convincing as the hero's sweetie; Lucien Littlefield as a nut inventor; Evalyn Knapp as a darling office girl; Guy Kibbee as a pompous dummy president of promotion enterprises; Frank McHugh as the promoter's lieutenant; and so on straight through the cast.

"High Pressure" was thought to be a happy show, keen and clean and full of sly wisdom. It was called a handsome opener for Jack Warner's promise to make 1932 a laugh year.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Screen play and dialogue by Joseph Jackson. From the stage play, "Hot Money," by Aben Candel. Directed by Mervyn LeRoy. Release date, January 30, 1932.

Emil and the Detectives

(Ufa)

Juvenile

While this Ufa production, from the novel by Erich Kaestner and in German dialogue, is essentially of, by and for children, the adults in the audience at the Ufa Cosmopolitan in New York indicated thorough enjoyment of the picture. It is called Ufa's first feature length juvenile production.

The story concerns a piece of juvenile detective work, with seemingly all the children in Berlin doing the Sherlocking.

Emil (Rolf Wenkhaus) is sent to Berlin by his widow mother to bring 140 marks to his grandmother. On the train he is offered some candy by a man whom he doesn't like. The man in the stiff hat (Fritz Rasp) startles him into swallowing the bit of candy—and when he awakens the money is gone. Emil sets out to follow the man. He wins the support of a young gamin of Berlin, and before long a large number of children have joined in the pursuit.

The bellboy at the hotel where the mystery man is staying lends Emil his uniform. Emil takes the drugged candy from the man's pocket and places a piece in a glass of water—but the gentleman thief wants the water only to gargle. Emil manages to get the man's wallet, but finds it empty (the money is kept in his hatband).

Then the boys try psychology, though they wouldn't have known what that word meant. When the man goes out in the morning, the horde of children follow him. When he starts to run, they run. Finally he goes into a bank to change the bills. Emil brands him a criminal and as a test points out that his bills had four pinpricks in them. Sure enough, there they are. And then the police find that the man is already in the records of the rogues' gallery as a bank robber. The youngsters win 1,000 marks reward, and Emil and his confreres return triumphantly in a plane to Neusstadt and his mother.

Produced by Guenther Stapenhorst. Directed by Gerhard Lamprecbt. Scenario by Billie Wilder from the novel by Erich Kaestner. Camera work by Werner Brandes. Sound by Hermann Fritsching. Settings by Werner Schlichting. Music by Allan Grey. Release date, December 18. Running time, 75 minutes.

Law of the Tong

(State Rights)

Melodrama

A melodramatic effort produced by independent Willis Kent, featuring Phyllis Barrington, supported by Jason Robards as the tong leader and John Harron as the young lover of Miss Barrington.

An audience at Loew's New York, on Broadway, which saw the picture on a double-bill, gave no particular evidence of having been enthused over the film.

Miss Barrington, dance hall hostess, meets Harron, who convinces her she is in the wrong place. Quitting, she wanders the streets aimlessly until she is taken in and befriended by Robards as the tong leader and smuggler of coolies. He takes her to the Salvation Army, where she again meets the hero, only to find he is a government agent out to get Wong.

The tables are turned, however, Harron being captured instead of Wong. Miss Barrington, making a desperate, though unsuccessful, effort to save Harron, is herself captured, automatically coming under the law of the tong, which is to the effect that a white person, entering the tong headquarters, must not be permitted to emerge alive.

Wong again saves her by permitting her to escape through a bold stunt, and she returns with the police at the right moment to save her lover. Wong dies, murdered by one of his own men, and the two, hero and heroine, are brought together for the very much anticipated concluding sequence.

Produced by Willis Kent. Distributed by State Rights. Directed by Lew Collins. From the story by Oliver Drake. Release date, December 15, 1931. Running time, 56 minutes.

Mounted Fury

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Melodrama

George W. Weeks presents another of the Sono Art "Thrill-o'-Dramas," in this particular case the locale being the Northwest, rather familiar in song and story—and motion pictures. An audience at Loew's New York on Broadway seemed only moderately well satisfied with the film effort from the entertainment standpoint.

John Bowers and Robert Ellis play the combined masculine leads, while Blanche Mehaffey and Lina Basquette render feminine support. George Regas takes the unsympathetic role of the half-breed liquor smuggler, who is living with Lina.

Bowers and Ellis, we are given to understand, were pals in the A. E. F. After the war, Bowers becomes a Mountie, while Ellis, successful in business, marries Blanche. In danger of a nervous breakdown, he takes Bowers' invitation to visit the wilds. Meeting Regas, he lives with him for some time, despite the remonstrances of his wife and friend, drinking heavily, and becoming too attentive to Lina.

About to leave together, Lina and Ellis are interrupted by Regas, knife in hand. The girl is quicker and murders Regas, blaming Ellis for the knife-wielding. Ellis, dying from wounds received in the fight, is stricken with a heavy conscience and tells that Lina killed Regas, not knowing of her treachery. Much as expected, Lina is ordered out of the country and Ellis dies. He had told Bowers to take care of Blanche after he was gone, but Bowers would have done it whether he told him or not, and the audience was certain of it, in any case, so that the concluding sequence rings true to the pattern.

Produced by George W. Weeks. Distributed by Sono Art-World Wide. Directed by Stuart Paton. Story by Betty Burbridge. Release date, December 1, 1931. Running time, 65 minutes.

Sunshine Susie

(Gainsborough-Gaumont British)

New Type of Musical

(Seen in London)

This one sets a new pattern instead of following the beaten track: it is obviously German in inspiration which is not so surprising for a film version based on the German musical comedy "The Private Secretary." In any case it is a lively contribution to the "new musical" which filmdom has promised for so long.

It is the first film musical comedy which this writer has considered to be truly musical and truly comedy. There is sparkle in every foot, and it moves like rapids in the spring sunshine.

There is a story—simple enough—but feasible. Susie (Renate Muller) leaves her German countryside to seek fortune in Vienna. She smiles her way into a job, but soon discovers that the manager of the bank has a liking for figures other than the ledgered kind. She looks like having to be nice or get out, when she strikes up a chance acquaintance with the bank director—without knowing who he is—and a minor love affair develops. Meantime she is a close friend of the musically-inclined bank janitor (Jack Hulbert) whose nonsense in reality "makes" the film. Janitor is conductor of an amateur male choir, and they sing often in the Viennese beer garden where Susie and her bank director sip away their evenings. Finally bank director develops real ideas about a flat for Susie, and she being an unusual girl, packs her traps to return to the country. But the flat idea was only a test applied by the bank man just to see whether Susie was really as good as her smile. Plenty of singing, dancing and clowning, by Jack Hulbert and Renate Muller, punctuates the action, and the settings are as gay as the technique is slick. Victor Saville has sprinkled this, his first musical comedy, with liberal novelties in camera and cutting tricks. As a start in new style music films, and just by way of showing that Britain can get ahead of others in setting a vogue—there are to be others of its ilk from Europe and Hollywood—this is a feather, and a big one at that, in the cap of the Gainsborough Company. If America doesn't make room for this one, somebody will lose money they might have made.

PARAMOUNT has a money message for you

Produced by Gainsborough Pictures. Directed by Victor Saville. Photographed by Mutz Greenbaum. Recorded on RCA. Running time, 88 minutes.

Funny

Andy Clyde, always amusing with his appearance of hurt innocence, is amusing as usual in this number and will keep any audience in a state of good humored enjoyment. Planning a fishing trip, he and the wife go shopping for a pair of boots. Balance of the footage takes place in a department store, where the house detective keeps very close tab on Andy in the belief that he is a shoplifter. Situations are amusing and Clyde makes the most of them. In the cast: Arthur Stone, Dorothy Granger, Fred Kelsey. Direction was handled by Babe Stafford.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Desert Regatta

Water Rodeo
(Seen in Hollywood)

Pete Smith of MGM offers the "Desert Regatta," recently held on the Salton Sea. Here many of the most famous outboard motorists in the world competed across the saline waters. Smith has again combined remarks with considerable interesting information, and the film itself shows the little water bugs turn over, jump across one another, and otherwise gyrate alarmingly. It is literally a water rodeo, with the speedsters doing all the stunts usually done by cowboys on land. Jules White directed, with Pete Smith arranging the explanatory remarks.

Africa Squeaks

Amusing Animated

To the dark continent of Africa goes animated Flip the Frog, and his adventures there are of the stuff that makes the youngsters laugh and oldsters chuckle. When Flip is in the kettle and about to be boiled, the cannibal king cannot get the match to ignite. Flip hands him his cigarette lighter. Cleverly drawn, and with good synchronization, the short is amusing.—Running time, 8 minutes.

A Journey Through Germany
(Ideal)
Of Interest

Generally appealing in the travelogue style is this camera trip through Germany. Major cities visited include Munich, Bavaria; Cologne, Dresden and Morrisburg. Highlighting the short is a splendid shot of mountaineers struggling up a high peak of the Bavarian Alps. Buildings of importance are pictured in several other of the cities seen. An interesting number. Running time, 10 minutes.

Gaunt
(Steele)
Unusual

A novel three-reel featurette called "Gaunt" has been made by Joseph Henry Steele, more or less as an experiment in cinema production. Being his first directorial effort, it shows a keen knowledge of human values and camera possibilities. "Gaunt" is very much off the beaten path in length, theme and treatment, one of those pioneering things which often discloses promising talent in the making.

Ralph Lewis is featured. Actual interiors were used, and the whole thing done on the most economical basis possible. No doubt had Steele had larger facilities his little story would have been even better told. Lewis is the old bank clerk who absconds with funds after twenty years of faithful service, but whose conscience gets him in the end. It is stark tragedy, with no love interest, no comedy relief.

Steele himself did the screen adaptation from a story, "The Debt Collector," by Maurice Level. Ross Fisher photographed. Others in the cast include Clarence Geldert, John Beck, George Waggner, Murray Smith and Allison Larkin.

Doing this much in his spare moments and with his precious spare cash, it would be interesting to see what Joe Steele could do with a regular directoral job.

Fair

Bing Crosby, who demonstrates his talent as a purveyor of melody, but lack of histrionic ability, has the lead in this Sennett comedy effort. Several comedy situations of the slapstick variety draw a fair portion of laughs. Bing plays a small-town plumber, whose girl, after going to Hollywood, is successful. Her mother writes to Bing, telling him the engagement is off. Unsuccessful in getting on the set, he disguises himself as a colored boy and gets an extra bit. His voice is recognized by the girl, but the mother and a lion chase him, with rather amusing results. All in all, a fairly good comedy.—Running time, 19 minutes.

The best laughs come from Dooley's wild ride on a bicycle which has lost its crossbar.—Running time, 11 minutes.

The Melody Isle
(MGM)
Enjoyable

James A. Fitzpatrick has traveled to, and through, the Emerald Isle, Ireland, to gather the material for this MGM release, and much worth while his trip apparently was. Any type of audience should extract a few minutes' real enjoyment from the number.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Real Punch

He follows a professional team from the gymnasium to the rink, indicating their training methods. A thrill climax pictures a game between Boston and Detroit, with the Bruin's coach offering a lively and graphic description. The punch is in the game, and has been transferred to the short film.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Sold at Auction

Weak

A Daphne Pollard number which lacks in most of those qualities a good comedy should possess. The lines are hardly laughable and the situations, of the slapstick variety, less than inspired. A weak comedy at best.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Trader Hound
(MGM)
Laughable Dogs

One of the Dogville comedies, parodying, of course, "Trader Horn." There are more than a few real laughs, again a tribute to the Job-like patience of trainers and directors. "Trader" penetrates the fastness of the African wilds to rescue the fair maiden. Real actors, these canines.—Running time, 15 minutes.

The Fisherman

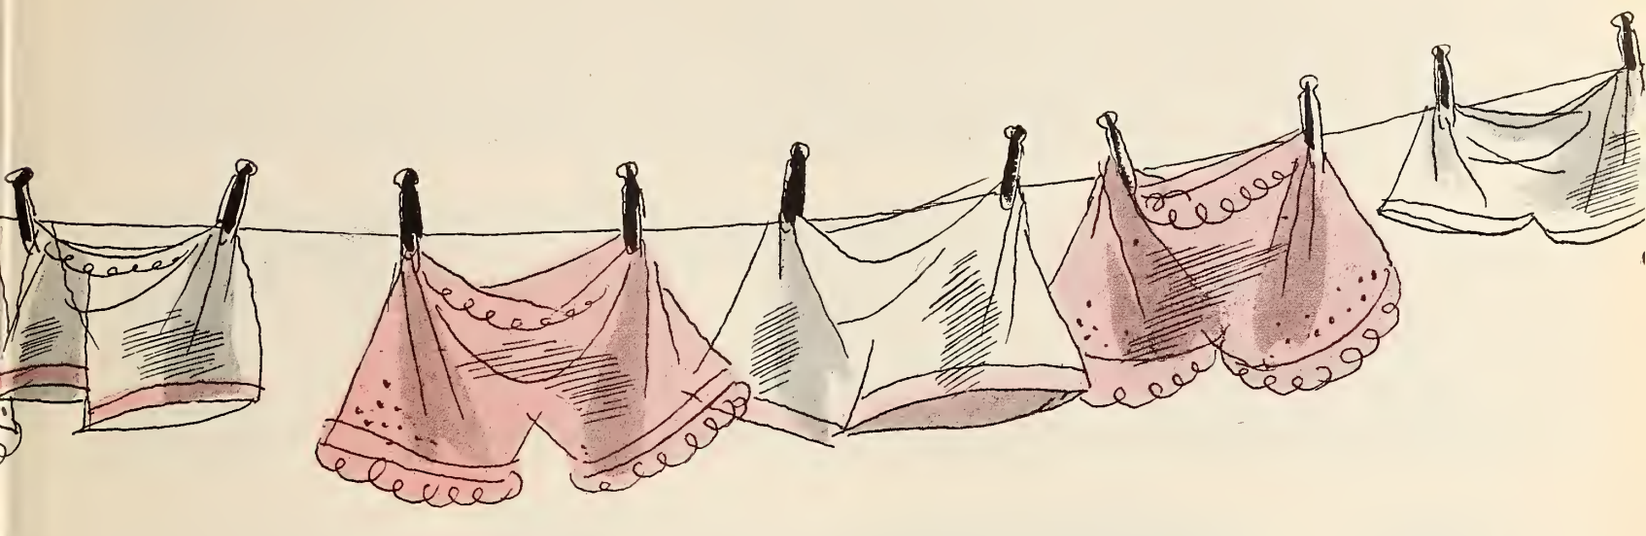
Good Cartoon



Oswald, the rabbit, has all sorts of tricks played on him by the cartoonist, but they are amusing for an audience. He has a difficult time, but manages to defeat the pirates to rescue his best girl and capture the treasure chest.—Running time, 7 minutes.

I Love a Lassie
(MGM)
Appealing

Harry Lauder, singing some of his most famous and popular melodies, which, with the injection of his delightful personality, makes for a particularly appealing number. The songs are rendered in a stage setting, with the cinematic audience joining in the chorus and applauding.—Running time, 8 minutes.

For the Love of Fanny
Amusing

Helen Mann tells Glenn Tryon that before she will reciprocate his avowed love he must become a member of Eta Bita Pie fraternity. The rest of the comedy is devoted to Tryon's comedic initiation, with policemen pursuing him all over the place. Audiences should get a few hearty laughs out of the situations and performances. Al Christie produced the short, which was directed by Robert Vernon.—Running time, 20 minutes.

1931 MIRRORS SWEEP OF NEW FORCES

The rising tide of change and the sweep of new forces is recorded here in the chronology of the stirring, exciting, if not joyously remembered, year of 1931. Last January, a mere twelve-month past, seems, as one scans the headlines of that new born year, a century ago in motion picture history. It has often enough been observed that in the swift evolutions of the motion picture, months, or even weeks, count as decades have in the other arts and industries. By 1925 that headlong pace had been arrested in a well crystalized silent screen institution. Today with half a decade into the marriage with sound the motion picture is again in the crucible of a new smelting. Here is the eventful year that just went past:

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

What Is Showmanship!

JUST what is this thing called Showmanship? From all sides we hear so much about it that we are wondering whether the general conception of showmanship is something concrete and tangible or a certain mysterious something or other that few, if any, really understand.

We have visitors who discuss this or that manager and tell us that he is a marvelous showman who does things in a showmanlike way. Or we hear of a campaign being chock full of showmanship. Then someone happens along who tells us that so-and-so runs his theatre with a lot of showmanship. Then again we are told that so-and-so injects unusual showmanship into his merchandiing efforts.

Showmanship! Showmanship! Showmanship! What is it?

Let's approach it from this angle: We are walking along the street and we pass a theatre. There is something decidedly different and attractive about that front which makes us stop and look. Or; we are sitting inside a theatre and the general atmosphere makes us feel that we more than like the house. We are not sitting in that house as an ordinary paid patron. We are there to find fault or favor. But somehow or other, without knowing exactly what it is that we like, we sense a feeling of satisfaction. Is it showmanship that the manager is using to bring this condition about, or is he just a good manager? And is THAT showmanship?

We sit in a vaudeville theatre and watch a particularly good performer; someone behind us says, "How that baby sells himself; what a showman!" Is THAT showmanship? Or we stroll down to the corner drug store for some of our favorite toothpaste and find ourself attracted to some merchant's store by reason of a window that is so attractive that it compels attention and admiration. Our mind immediately says: "What a showman that merchant is."

So we try to sum up our definition of the word and we have to stop and think of just what we can say. Maybe it isn't anything definite at all. Possibly it is not a particular thing, but rather, the way the thing is being done. Doesn't that sound more logical? Isn't it really the ability, or should we say knack, of a good showman to make his efforts more appealing, more convincing and more certain by reason of the novelty he injects, the attention he creates by the way he does these things?

That long-promised series on the Necessity of Advertising and Exploitation gets under way this week with a snappy article from Gabe S. Yorke. This will be followed by others from many different sources. Each one approaches the slant from his own angle, no two are exactly alike, and that should make the series still more interesting. If YOU have some thought on the subject, just send it along and we'll give yours just as much consideration as any of the others.

It is particularly gratifying to note the interest we have attracted to our section from some of the best ad men in the business. By reason of this interest we will be able to carry many model ads adaptable to most any situation and that in itself is good news because the newspaper advertising of any theatre is a most important part of its showselling activities.

H. E. Jameyson, Midwesco ad chief for Fox Theatres, has earned a reputation second to none in the field of original and creative advertising efforts. Whenever the opportunity presents itself we shall certainly pass along some of his fine ads and we venture to say that it will find favor with thousands of showmen all over the country who cannot afford an ad artist of their own.

We have sounded several warnings about the tremendous possibilities of the coming Washington Bi-Centennial Celebration which gets under way next month. In next week's issue we carry a special announcement regarding this important event. Just what are YOU doing about it and how big a part will your theatre play in the celebration and activities of your local committee?

A few thoughts for today and tomorrow: Watch your newspaper ads to avoid errors in copy. . . . Checking up on the advance trailers and other material to insure its arrival on time . . . ordering exchange accessories as soon as your dates are set. . . . Playing up the stars of each picture that mean the most to your box office. . . . Keeping a sharp lookout for dead lamps on your marquee and signs. . . . Making your lobby the most attractive and inviting spot in the whole community. . . . Giving your entire operation that personal touch so essential to proper management. . . .

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

The answer to this one is: send us some "Lobby Laff" suggestions so that we can keep Dick busy. He's willing to draw them if we furnish the ideas. Surely you all get a funny incident in the course of a day's work that would make up a peach of a "Laff." Send it in before you forget it. We've got to keep Kirschbaum busy and out o' mischief. Shoot them along NOW.

SILVERWATCH SENDS A FEW MORE NOVEL SHOW-SELLING GAGS

Our old friend Max Silverwatch, manager of the Strand Theatre in Amesbury, Mass., is still employing novel little gags to stimulate interest among the theatre-going public in his community.

For instance, prior to Thanksgiving he sent out a neatly printed card headed, "To Our Friends and Patrons"—conveying an expression of appreciation for past patronage and wishing them all an "abundant measure of happiness and security." The card was signed—"The Employees and The Manager of Warner Bros. Strand Theatre."

Just to demonstrate that Easter is not the only season when live rabbits can interest the kiddies, he advertised that free rabbits would be on hand for the youngsters in connection with a magician act put on by one "Tommy Tucker" on the occasion of a Saturday matinee following Thanksgiving.

Still another gag he used recently along with "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" was a herald asking for definitions of "Money Slanguage." Included in the list were such terms as 1 Century; 5 Bucks; 6 Bits; 2 Berries; 1 Grand; 1 Finnif; 6 Sawbucks; 50 Simoleons; 75 Jits; 35 Cartwheels; 50 V's; 95 Seeds, and 100 Coppers. The gag was to total the amount of this list and participate in guest tickets.

We are regularly expressing thanks to this Round Tabler for passing along a batch of interesting gags to his fellow showmen and we hope that he'll continue the good work. Let us know if you got set on that Gift Nite, Max, and if so, how it came out.

McDANIEL NOW WITH PUBLIX IN IOWA; IS SELLING HIS SHOWS

It's quite a jump from Kingsville, Texas, to Marshalltown, Iowa, but E. M. McDaniel made the leap and now he's at the helm of the Publix-Strand in the latter city instead of one of Hall Industries Theatres in the former town.

While Mack was in Texas he passed along a number of ideas on showmanship, and since his arrival in Iowa a few more of his slants on this business have come to light. For instance, he has found that Give-Away Nites are as popular in his newly-adopted state as in many other sections of this country. To his way of thinking, the gifts should be practical ones and varied sufficiently to suit the different types of fans.

He has arranged a tie-up with a local department store for give-aways of small autos and dolls for Xmas and is using the lobby for a large display of groceries as a tie-in for a deal made with the local A. & P. company for Barrel o' Gift Nites. These are scheduled every Tuesday night through December and are proving a popular attraction.

Other recent activities on McDaniel's included the featuring of a letter of endorsement from the local Police Chief on "Homicide Squad"; and the use of a toy Erector set, resembling a building under construction, for "Skyline." This also had a painted background of skyscrapers and a cut-out of Hardie Albright.

Like many other members of this Club, Mack has found that patrons are particularly receptive to give-aways. You all know how to handle these affairs, so it's hardly necessary to go into detail. That these "nites" should be attractive will not surprise anybody, for it's the old gag of getting something worthwhile for nothing.

He is also a great believer in the efficacy of the lobby as a business-getter, estimating that it amounts to about 75 per cent of the battle. Regarding the lighting of lobbies, he has found that moving displays and brightly lighted signs are the most effective.

Along with your fellow showmen, Mack, we hope that business will break as well for you in Marshalltown as it did in Kingsville, and that you will continue to keep your Club posted on all activities in show-business. If the move amounts to a promotion, which we assume it does, please accept congratulations. And don't forget that your slants on this game will always be of interest to other members of the Round Table.

ATTRACTIVE PROGRAMME!

Here's a programme which is really distinctive and attractive at the same time. Starting with the cover; we find this house organ different in at least one respect as compared with most others; they use no plugs or type matter of sort. To our way of thinking and for a programme of this kind, that's good dope.

The inside spread in a combination of several program styles. You could, with a slight stretch of your imagination, call it a newsette because of the reading matter carried on either side of the attractions. But that would not be exactly correct. The current pictures of their three change bill get the lion's share of space and attention. Then, instead of throwing some hold-over type matter into the sides for fillers they tie the reader space right into the rest of the spread by using only material pertaining to the attraction for that week.

KRENDEL MADE POOR NIGHTS PROFITABLE WITH TWO FEATURES

Two off nights of the week have been turned into veritable gold mines through employment of special features by Dan E. Krendel, manager of the St. Clair Theatre, Toronto, Canada.

Several weeks ago he chose Thursday, his poorest night of the week, for "Revival Night," advertising that following the last showing of the evening feature one of the big successes of the past season would be screened for those who desired to remain. He opened up with "Common Clay," followed with "Animal Crackers," "Let Us Be Gay," "Vagabond King," etc., and Thursday turned into the best night of the week.

His other weak night, Tuesday, has been converted into s.r.o. business by putting on "Dresserware Night," on which occasion each regularly admitted lady received one article of a 44 piece set of dresserware. Needless to state, the house is packed to overflowing with women every Tuesday night, with the balance of the week finishing off to sweet money.

The revival night idea has turned in business nothing short of phenonomal for Krendel and we're passing it along to those who may have forgotten that this is one of the good old dyed-in-the-wool methods of appeal to the bargain-loving public. It is also a fact that a great many people like to see their favorite pictures the second time and there's also a chance that it might be the first time. We take it for granted that Dan gets these films at a price that warrants the extra showing. Many have tried the dresserware night stunt and profited thereby. This one was handled in the usual fashion. We know this Round Tabler will continue his good work and we want to hear from him just as often as he can find the time.

COSTUME PARTY WAS STAGED BY CHARLES CLARK ON HALLOWE'EN

A Hallowe'en costume party and excellent campaigns on two feature attractions figured in recent activities of Chas. O. Clark, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, Md.

Three thousand announcement heralds were distributed among school children, outlining the evening's program for Hallowe'en, and radio messages were broadcast two weeks in advance. Trailers were also used two weeks ahead of date. Interesting awards were given the participants for the prettiest, most original and funniest costumes. Another stunt that furnished amusement for all concerned was a "fun barrell," from which twenty privileged children picked give-aways consisting of sausage, nursing bottles, Hallowe'en novelties, etc., all done up in packages and opened on stage. Guest tickets were also handed out at the close of an apple-ducking game. The lobby was decorated with a large cutout of a black cat and real pumpkins.

The screen attraction for the above occasion was "Monkey Business" and a cage of live monkeys, placed in lobby one week in advance, caused plenty of comment. Palm trees, from which cutout monkeys hung by tails, also lent to the general atmospheric scheme. Each monkey had a Marx Bros. head. Several thousand neighborhood programs and as many novelty envelopes, each containing two salted peanuts, were distributed throughout the theatre zone.

Clark's recent campaign on "Five Star Final" was featured by radio broadcasts one week in advance, tied-up with a food products company; three days use of sandwich signs; distribution of 3,000 programs; newspaper copy and critcisms on all one and three-sheets, shadow boxes and displays, and a ballyhoo front made to resemble newspapers.

MANY OBSTACLES DID NOT STOP MAT PRESS SECOND ANNIVERSARY

Extremely bad local business conditions plus a politically-controlled newspaper antagonistic to his place of business did not deter Mat Press, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Hattiesburg, Miss., from extracting excellent results from a campaign waged in connection with Second Anniversary.

Unable to secure co-operation from the paper in question, Press turned to a sheet of lesser importance and for "peanuts" obtained a two-page spread in addition to the many readers that appeared in advance and current with the anniversary. The spread played up the three attractions for the week.

The Governor of the State happened to be in town for a day during the celebration and Press staged a parade in which he prominently placed a float advertising the day's show. The front of the theatre, made up in advance, covered the entire week, but after the first half, was changed to cover the Thursday, Friday and Saturday attractions.

As the result of the above efforts, one of the days brought in the second largest day's business in the history of the house. This is particularly commendable in view of local conditions. The Club will be keenly interested in knowing how this member keeps the ball rolling along.

FLAM FIRST SOUGHT TO BUILD GOOD WILL IN A NEW COMMUNITY

The task of building up good will in a strange community has occupied an important portion of the working hours of David Flam since he received the assignment to manage the State Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., and from all accounts he's been making excellent progress.

To begin with he has gained the signal honor of being the first "picture man" in Johnstown ever taken into the sacred fold of the local Kiwanis Club and in appreciation of this event and with an eye toward making future contacts, he recently entertained more than two hundred members of this organization at the State.

Following the above occasion, Flam received a letter from the president of the Kiwanis expressing appreciation from all members who had attended the show. He also thanked this Round Tabler for the interest he had taken in the Orthepedic Ward of the Memorial Hospital on the occasion of appearing there with certain performers for the entertainment of the patients.

We don't think there's any doubt that Flam has built up a solid friendship with these two hundred Kiwanians and venture to state that many occasions will arise to justify his move. Now that Dave has found his way around town, we'll be looking forward to hearing about what he has planned in actual show selling.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

With regard to the antecedence of Joseph Dondis, we'll have to credit Russia as the birthplace of this aggressive and proficient showman, for data at hand records that he was born in that country on March 4, 1885. However, he bade farewell to his native land at an early age and immigrated to these United States, eventually halting his trek in the city of Fall River, Mass.

Joseph Dondis

After finishing with grammar school, it strongly dawned upon this young man that coin of the realm was most necessary to his existence, and so, as he frankly states, he entered show-business to make money. No frills and fancies; no artistic temperament, just an avowed desire to do things and get somewhere.

He started in 1923 in opposition to Paramount and tells us that he weathered some pretty rough storms before that company decided it could make more profit through the act of taking him on as a partner. And so he went with the big circuit, and at this writing we find him in charge of the Strand Theatre at Rockland, Me., where he is still a partner-manager.

Dondis is married, the father of several children, and an active force in community activities. He is a member of the Forty Club, an Elk, and belongs to the local Chamber of Commerce. Apparently, he's in this business for keeps.

HURDY-GURDY BALLY!

An old-time hurdy-gurdy was pressed into service by Abe Sunberg, manager of the State Theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., when exploiting "Sidewalks of New York." Something of a rarity in recent years, this old music grinder certainly caught the public eye.

POAG TIED-UP WITH INSTALLATION OF A BIG RADIO STATION

Down in the Mexican border town of Del Rio, Texas, where P. J. Poag manages the Princess Theatre, a broadcasting company recently celebrated the opening of what is claimed to be the largest station in the world, and Poag tied-in with the event for what might be classed as a unique stunt in theatre exploitation.

He suggested the term "Gala Week" to the town officials and merchants and they adopted it for the slogan during the festivities in which the Princess Theatre took a leading part. The photo on this page will give readers an idea of how the theatre was decked out for the occasion, with the 5-foot station letters X E R suspended across the front of the house. Wooden reproductions of the station's aerial towers stood at either side of the lobby entrance and the front was further enhanced by gayly colored pennants, strung across the street. The other portion of the photo shows a special 24-sheet made up for the week.

Poag also tied up with the 30-page special edition the local newspaper issued for the occasion, featuring his ads in prominent positions, and also got space in a 24-page edition of a local Spanish paper.

While free advertising is held to a minimum on the new station, appreciation for Poag's part in the celebration led the announcer to personally comment on pictures he had seen and to mention current and coming attractions.

Now that Del Rio has this powerful broadcasting station, we venture to state that trade at the Princess will continue to grow and that Poag will always manage to promote a portion of its time for the good of his house. With his able assistant Kessler on hand to construct signs and take care of other advertising, this combination certainly should keep right on hitting the ball. In the meantime, we wish this team lots of luck and will hope to hear more about what's going on down in their town.

IN EXTENUATION!

On page 48 of the December 26 issue of this publication we gave sole credit to Ralph Stitt for the execution of another attractive front for the Rivoli Theatre on the occasion of the showing of "Age for Love." While Stitt did have a share in its design, it would be an injustice not to call attention to the fact that Duke Wellington did the major portion of the work.

YOUNGSTERS CAN BE DIVERTED FROM SCARE TRAILER, SAYS STITT

Credit Ralph Stitt of the Rivoli Theatre New York City with this one.

The current picture playing Christmas week and, naturally, catering mostly to children is "SOOKY." Unfortunately, the trailer for the following week's feature, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is one of the most gruesome we've seen in many a day. Ralph got around it this way. He had a little advance trailer made to show prior to the main trailer which read:

"Notice to Adults with Children at this performance.

"The following sequences announcing the future presentation of 'DR. JEKYLL & MR. HYDE' are rather strong dramatically.

"We recommend that juvenile attention be diverted from the screen for the next few moments.
The management."

We pass this on to you, boys, because it can be used in connection with any trailer that requires it.

Good work, Ralph, let's have some more like it.

TOM PHELAN STAGED MIDNIGHT SHOW FOR UNEMPLOYED RELIEF

A recent report concerning the activities of Thomas Phelan, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Long Branch, N. J., discloses that his portion of the motion picture industry's charitable gesture to the unemployed was featured by a big midnight benefit show on Thanksgiving night. Cooperating with Phelan in this move were the Lions, Rotarians, Elks, Women's Clubs and many other fraternal and civic organizations of Long Branch. A capacity crowd attended the performance and all funds were turned over to the relief committee.

Tom has also been using "Opportunity Night" to bolster up his trade on Tuesday nights. This feature is under the supervision of Al Greene, a vaude artist who acts as M. C. and knows how to get a whole lot out of an affair of this kind. Prizes are awarded to performers according to applause from the audience.

We're glad to hear from Phelan again and now that the holiday season is over his fellow Club members will be interested to learn what took place at the Paramount during Xmas and New Years.

POSTER ART WORK! DRAWN BY CLAUDE BARNETT

By way of contrast we offer another poster on Clive Brook. Last week's was from Benton James; this week's is from a new contributor to the Poster Art Work series, Claude Barnett, poster artist for the Booth Theatre in Knoxville, Tenn.

Both Brook posters were exceptionally fine examples of the highlight poster art and both could be used to good advantage by any theatre with an artist who wants to make his work outstanding as well as business-getting.

There seems to be some difference of opinion about the size of these reproductions since we inaugurated the three-column make-up for the Club pages. The opinion, as a matter of record, stands even right now. Seven have found no objection to this size and seven others have. We would appreciate more comment before going back to larger size reproductions.

We hope that Barnett will now become a regular contributor to this series.

BEALS USED TRUCK STUNT AS PLUG IN RURAL COMMUNITIES

A number of amusing and profitable stunts featured the last Anniversary Week put over by Carlton L. Beals, manager of the Bijou Theatre, Pittsfield, Me.

He reaches into the rural communities for a substantial portion of his trade and therefore revived the old gag of giving awards to those who brought in the biggest truckload of patrons; to the truck that came the longest distance; to the oldest couple, and child who came to the box-office.

One of the patrons who came in with a truckload lost out by so close a margin and felt such keen disappointment that Beals softened up and gave him a pass good for a year. The man turned right around, left the theatre and turned up next Saturday with another big load of patrons. He will undoubtedly repeat again as he considers himself a privileged person in his community.

During the football season Beals gave a free show to a squad of 40 boys and coaches of the local prep school whenever he showed a Knute Rockne reel. It is interesting to note that the team won their first game through observation of a play they saw pulled off in one of the reels. Not long after this, a squad of players en route from Portland to Bangor stopped off to see a show at the Bijou and Beals promptly put on a slide to let them know that he was glad to have them in the house and wished them luck in the forthcoming game. Just a little gesture that will undoubtedly get them to repeat on other occasions.

He works hard for his theatre patronage, going into the rural districts some 70 miles every week. He carries window cards, heralds, etc., and stops at various points to hold a short chat with prospective patrons. But it all pays in the end for when these folk seek amusement they naturally think of Beals. More power to him, say we.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

At the age of 23 years George Earnest Gemming took a slant at show-business. It looked interesting and so in he went to learn the ropes. He liked the game, so in it he stayed, and at the present time we find him holding down the job of assistant manager of the Webster Theatre, Rochester, N. Y.

G. E. Gemming

Rochester is his native city, Gemming having been born there on October 17, 1902. After graduating from local public schools and assimilating general business experience in other lines, he entered the amusement business at the Rialto Theatre, a local independent house. He has since been connected with Schine Enterprises and the Genessee Amusement Company of Batavia, N. Y.

He would choose show-business again were he to start looking around for a business career and, therefore, at the present time, has no intention of leaving this field for another.

Your patrons are your guests treat them accordingly.

THE lobby and foyer of your theatre must be considered as you measure the box-office success. When your patrons step from the fresh air of the sidewalk into your lobby and foyer their nostrils are suddenly assailed with the heavy air that naturally predominates in a closed building. Whether your building is new or old or if it has been newly renovated and decorated . . . no matter how spotlessly clean it is kept or how well your auditorium is ventilated, there is a certain unpleasant thickness about the atmospheric condition of the lobby and foyer. You have noticed it and consequently so have your customers.

Would you subject a guest in your home to unpleasantness? . . . No! Why should you then allow a patron to be confronted with disagreeable odors, who has paid you for the privilege of being your guest and has the power to make or break your box-office? Filling the lobby and foyer of your theatre with the fragrance of fresh flowers by using per-fu will go far in bringing them back regularly.

per-fu is a concentration of solidified high grade perfume oils and being non-alcoholic has a lasting fragrance that is only equalled by freshly cut flowers. Just the turn of a switch is required to fill a room with the fragrant perfume odor of your choice.

It is economical to use as one pound is sufficient for about forty-five days and the cost per pound is but $6.00; $3.50 per half pound. All orders are prepaid when accompanied by check otherwise C. O. D.

WILLIAMS' SNAPPY XMAS DISPLAY!

Three weeks before Xmas the Toyland display shown in the accompanying illustration was placed in the lobby of the De Witt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J., by Manager A. Williams. Approximately $350 worth of attractive toys, ranging from small dolls up to expensive mechanical articles, were promoted from a local toy dealer, who also paid for the printing of 10,000 coupons and 2,000 stickers. The stickers were used along with careful distribution of 1,200 "Lionel" magazines in Bayonne schools. The coupons were distributed three Saturdays in succession, in the usual fashion, and children were advised that they must be on hand on the designated day for give-aways.

All in all the display, set off by a flasher—illuminated Xmas trees on each side, attracted attention from every side and caused plenty of comment from both children and adults. The final Saturday saw knockout business during the matinee show. Note the 40 x 60 in the foreground that calls attention to the give-away of 10 turkeys, 4 geese and 6 chickens. However, this number was increased to 26 instead of 20 and announcement of this change was made on screen.

We have not had the pleasure of receiving regular contributions from Manager Williams but any showman who can promote such a fine collection of toys at no cost to theatre cannot fail to become an asset to this organization. To our way of thinking he contrived a fine display at practically no cost to the theatre and the kids must have had a corking time. We hope Al will send further news about his work.

McGINNIS HAS BEEN PACKING HOUSE WITH ASSORTED GIVEAWAYS

One of the Club's newly-elected members, Herb McGinnis, manager of the State Theatre, Lima, Ohio, has been under the influence of Give-Away Nights over a considerable period and has found that this practice has found a ready response among patrons in his community.

On Saturday nights "Country Store" has been packing 'em in for months, he states, and at no cost to theatre he has promoted articles ranging from bath soap to canaries, with kitchen stoves, cabinets, radios and what have you in between.

Another Give-Away highly acceptable in this community has been "Coal Night," when three tons of coal and $15 credit on purchase are handed out. This stunt was also promoted free of cost to theatre.

To bolster up December business four new Fords were promoted 'way under cost and from all accounts to date the increase in trade has more than justified whatever expenditure was made. This stunt was a repeat of a similar one pulled successfully last summer.

Of course McGinnis gave the usual Thanksgiving party to the kiddies at the Orphans Home, and made arrangements with the Christmas Mother for a Canned Fruit and Toy Matinee, with barrels in lobby for donations of jellies and canned goods. He has also been using an honest-to-goodness organist as an added attraction three days a week—and the audience applauds!

So there you are Round Tablers—fight out the pros and cons of Give-Away between yourselves. Those in favor of the stunt will get a large sized kick out of Mack's success with the stunt. Those against will have something else in their mind. Of course it all hinges on what it costs the house. Mack appears to have gotten away with a whole lot at small expense. At any rate let's hear from fellows on either side of the fence.

By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

"TONIGHT—EAST LYNNE" OR THE CYCLES OF SHOW ADVERTISING

Herewith we start off what we hope will prove an interesting as well as constructive series dealing with the necessity of advertising and exploitation for all types of theatres. The thought behind this series is to bring to the surface the reactions of various showmen from all fields in the industry on the question of whether any theatre with the pick of product and doing a consistently good business must keep on advertising and exploiting their attractions. It is far from a foolish discussion because what you believe to be the obvious answer may not be the opinion of others. And vice versa. At any rate we start off with an article from Gabe S. Yorke, director of advertising and publicity for Fox Theatres and Fox Film Corporation, unquestionably, one of the leaders in the field of advertising and a man with a keen understanding of the manifold problems confronting the theatres of today and tomorrow in the matter of show-selling and its important part in the show-world's scheme of things. We liked this article from Mr. Yorke and feel certain that you will like it too. It will be followed up by others from well-known and not-so-well-known men in the industry.
"CHICK"

By GABE S. YORKE

Given a theatre that plays nothing but hits: can it get along without advertising and exploitation?

Given a theatre that plays more flops than hits: can it be pulled out of the red by advertising and exploitation?

Are advertising and exploitation really necessary to show business?

Can this man Chick Lewis ask questions?

NOW I'LL ASK ONE

Is show business really necessary? No, it is not—which is why civilized peoples have always insisted on maintaining and patronizing it. That sounds like a paradox and so it is. There's hardly anything in the amusement field that isn't paradoxical.

Of course, if show business is not necessary then its advertising and exploitation are not necessary. That answers Chick's third question, although in a left-handed manner.

Show business in all the centuries from the days of Aristophanes to the days of his fellow countryman, Spyros Skouras, has been always changing but never changed. (Another paradox.) Its advertising and exploitation follow that rule. The operators of the theatre in Elizabeth's time, and later, crabbed about the "useless" cost of the trumpeters and town criers who announced their shows—and eliminated them as soon as the first newspapers (tabloids, by the way) were willing to quote decent rates on theatrical copy. Current remarks about the futility of advertising and exploitation are, therefore, nothing new—and nothing to become excited about.

Nor should any weight be given to the thought that everything in show business has progressed but advertising. Consult Percy Hammond, Billy Phelps and Terry Ramsaye and you will find that all the plays ever presented, all the novels ever printed and all the pictures ever produced were based on exactly thirty-six original plots. The entry of sound into our business did not add to or subtract from that total.

WHAT PRICE "IDEAS"!

No one has counted the number of original ideas that are the bases of all our advertising and exploitation. I'd wager that it is not over fifty. In the past fifteen years theatrical advertising has passed through the following stages:

"To-night—'East Lynne'."
"'East Lynne'—The Newest, Greatest Sensation."
"Should a Husband Forgive? See 'East Lynne'."
"An Epic of Mother Love. The Masterpiece of the Ages—'East Lynne'."
"While His Hot Breath Seared Her Neck the Warmth of Her Body Melted His Shirt Studs. Passion Urged Them On in 'East Lynne'."
"It Will Tug at Your Heart Strings. With Sound Effects. 'East Lynne'."
"An All-Talking, All-Singing, All-Dancing Production—'East Lynne'."
"To-night—Ann Harding in 'East Lynne'."

Perhaps these are not arranged in proper chronological order. Perhaps intermediate stages have been omitted. But, by and large, there you have a complete revolution of the advertising wheel. Criticism of advertising and exploitation does not arise from the fact that at regular intervals we repeat ourselves. It appears, and rightly, when the advertising wheel stops revolving.

Chick's first question can be answered, therefore, in this manner: a theatre playing nothing but hits can get along without stationary, monotonous and unmodified advertising. But whatever success can be attributed to its product will be augmented by variety in advertising and exploitation. I've seen it done and will cite a specific instance later.

OLD IDEAS—OR NEW?

Successful showmen, be they authors, producers, actors or press agents may boast about their originality, but the truth is that their success depends upon the extent of their repertoires and the speed with which they can dig up old ideas to replace new ones. (Again a paradox.)

Eugene O'Neill writes dialogue with good, old-fashioned "asides" and garners greater glory by the very device that laughed the Victorian playwrights out of the theatre. Janet Gaynor, at the peak of the Sex Appeal Era, patterns her work after that of the Maude Adamsses that used to be, and is elected Queen of the Movies. Howard Dietz, consciously or subconsciously, goes back to the ancient circus principle of treating the yokels to some hula-hula in front of the tent, calls it the "living marquee" and stages one of the most successful ballyhoos of recent years.

There is a theatre on Broadway, operated on a long-run, two-a-day basis that has had the reputation of playing nothing, or almost nothing, but hits. But a new attraction never opens in it without a new lobby and a complete change in the electrical display, both of which are important forms of advertising and exploitation. No new attraction goes in without a hooray in advance of it on the theatrical pages of the newspapers.

The Republic Theatre in New York had a stretch of capacity business that lasted five years—the five during which it housed "Abie's Irish Rose." But there was not a week of that period when it did not get advertising and exploitation, if not in space that was paid for then in the more valuable free space that dramatic editors insisted on throwing at it.

DOES IT HELP THE "FLOPS"?

As to the question of what advertising and exploitation can do for a house that plays more flops than hits:

Mark this circumstance, which can be observed in any group of theatres operated by one chain. You will see two, three or half a dozen theatres of equal size and equal expectancy playing the same product but turning in unequal grosses. All the gags about house managers who don't know if their jobs are good until they read their morning mail, have their origin in that circumstance.

In some chains a manager who pulls a house out of the red is shifted to do the job all over again in another tough spot. In other chains a manager who cures a bad house is kept in it and the fellows who go from black to red get all the orders to move. But behind all the shifting of personnel and the unending firing stand the figures by which comparisons can be made. This, more often than the whims of executives, is what causes so many theatre managers to learn geography without the aid of books.

I know a certain manager who varies the business of moving from house to house within one theatre chain by moving from chain to chain. By every such move he has bettered himself. Even in these unhappy times there is competition for his services—and for just one reason. He has always made it a point to keep an air of liveliness about his theatre—for use as a cushion when he plays poor product and to squeeze in the last customer when he plays a hit. He changes his style of newspaper advertising frequently. He never lets a week go by without introducing his audience to a different gag in his lobby or on his stage. His repertoire is extensive and he can dig up old ideas speedily to replace new ones. You can not name a stunt, however old, that he has not used. He has discovered that his public is not so much taken with the originality of his exploitation as with the variety of it.

He keeps demonstrating that proper advertising and varied exploitation, even in a house that plays more flops than hits, find their justification in the extra business they bring in with good pictures and the minimizing of the losses on bad ones. There are many like him.

EVERYBODY'S DOING IT!

There has probably been no time when other industries copied theatrical advertising and exploitation more than they do at present. In Los Angeles they open new soda fountains with ceremonies copied after those that made Grauman's Chinese famous. The Sunshine Biscuit people during the past two weeks introduced a new product with advertisements that were deliberate and detailed imitations of the theatrical copy and layout. A prominent chain store organization has hired men from the motion picture business to stage the openings of new units. Department stores have not only adopted theatrical advertising but are putting on street ballyhoo. (Have you seen one of those Macy balloon parades?) The cigarette manufacturers pay us a compliment with imitation and even use our tools—the names and photographs of the stars whom our methods have made famous. As soon as a new device is used in lobby decoration it is sold for store window dressing.

While the rest of the business world is trying to jam a laurel wreath on our collective brow there are people in our own industry who ask whether our advertising and exploitation are necessary!

The inevitable paradox.

McFADDEN'S BOYS PLUG PICTURES!

Exploiteers always have an opportunity to make a big bally when a producer picks a "Liberty" serial for picturization. The finished article in this case was "Corsair," and the above photo shows a street parade staged by the boy carriers along Broadway, New York City. These demonstrations are generally arranged by giving a free show for the kids.

MAT SERVICE FIRM AIDED HILLYER TO MAKE A SPECIAL AD

Below is reproduced a combination ad and throw-away recently gotten out for an Owl Hallowe'en show by M. N. Hillyer, manager of the Downs Theatre, Downs, Kan.

This is particularly interesting, we think, because it well illustrates what can be accomplished through paying a visit to, or communicating otherwise with some printers mat service concern. All the atmospheric mats you see were obtained from such a company. The one on the picture ("Phantom of Paris") was taken from the press book. When issued for throw-aways this was printed on colored poster stock.

The above merely shows what can be done at short notice in the way of making up an attractive ad or throw-away. The idea as illustrated here need not only apply to the picture or holiday mentioned. Any mystery film, or any occasion for which this sort of atmosphere would apply, might be tied-in with similar copy. Thanks to Hillyer for passing this one along. We'll be looking for other examples of his interesting work.

RICE ADDED KIDDIE REVUE TO FOOTBALL PICTURE FOR WOMEN

Skeptical as to a football picture drawing women patrons, H. W. Rice, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Monroe, La., staged a kiddie revue in conjunction with "Spirit of Notre Dame," which not only accomplished its purpose but was a success from every angle.

The revue, "School Days," was presented on the stage twice daily during the run of picture. Twenty-two kiddies appeared in a show in songs and dance acts over a 20-minute period. By tying up with a local dancing teacher, the whole show was promoted at no cost to theatre.

Another recent activity of Rice's was the garnering of 168 inches of free space in a morning paper on the occasion of "Sob Sister" and the added attraction of an artist who was billed to answer a multitude of questions. The tie-up was made with the classified department, tickets being given with every three line ad that ran three days. The vaudeville artist answered questions for the readers of the paper at the rate of fifteen each day.

Both the above stunts, you will note, were put over without cost to the theatre and served their purpose in the way of safeguarding a show Rice had doped as a draw for men, and as means of drumming up some worthwhile publicity. These are stunts that can be adapted to any similar situation.

COPPOCK HAD SHORT TIME TO PUBLICIZE STARS BUT DID JOB

That E. S. C. Coppock, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Staten Island, N. Y., has established an elaborate system of communication throughout his theatre zone, is seen in connection with a personal appearance made recently by Richard Arlen, and his wife, Jobyna Ralston. Long before 7:30 the theatre was packed and by that time it became necessary to stop selling seats, and for Arlen to make a brief appearance in the lobby to satisfy those who could not be seated. Following introduction of his wife to the audience, Arlen also introduced three All-American football players.

The combined presence of the Arlens and star players undoubtedly did much to account for the satisfying gross piled up at this theatre for "Touchdown." What strikes us most forcibly is that Coppock only had a very short time to send out word on the personal appearance. It's further proof that this showman has been on the job since taking over management of this house.

ARRIVAL OF A NEW STAR WAS GAG USED BY MANAGER J. JONES

Arrival of a new screen star, Helen Hayes, was an effective idea used to advertise "Sin of Madelon Claudet" by J. Jones, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Pensacola, Fla.

He secured several trunks, covered with various stickers from foreign and American ports, and placed them on the sidewalk near the entrance of the theatre. A large hand-painted banner was used across the trunks, copy reading: "A New Star Has Arrived—Helen Hayes in ——." Sales copy, cast and playdates followed. A large cut-out from the three-sheet was mounted on a base, carrying hand-painted title of pictures, stars and sales copy, and placed in the lobby four days in advance.

Club members might keep in mind the above for use in connection with the arrival of any new star. It worked well with this picture and we can't think of any reason why it wouldn't fit in with another.

ANOTHER GROUP OF SINGLE COLUMN ADS WHERE SPACE RATES ARE HIGH OR THEATRES ARE "SCOTCH"!

SUTARIA SENDS US SAMPLE OF TEASER CAMPAIGN IN INDIA

When it comes to putting on an effective teaser ad campaign, we'll have to admit that S. F. Sutaria, this Club's representative 'way over in Hyderbad, India, is quite on the job.

In advance of "Just Imagine," full column ads were started in the local newspaper headed, "Just Imagine—1980—You'll be astonished at the fashions." The two lead words were the keynote of the entire series, all copy dealing with what one would do if awakened 50 years hence, and leading up to final announcement of showing. Several hundred bills and exchange heralds were also sniped throughout the city one week prior to opening.

Naturally the above picture was played a long time ago by exhibitors in this country but things are different in more ways than playing time in the land of Sutaria and Mahatma Gandhi. For instance, Indian theatres do not maintain "staff artists." Cuts are generally ordered from an exchange and these are ordered as well as charged for as single column, three column, etc. The exhibitor hasn't any choice in the selection. Two column 2 inch cuts are paid for at the same rate as two column 10 inch cuts, and it naturally follows that adaptation to larger space becomes most difficult.

Availability of all that is necessary to carry out smart campaigns and flexibility of same in this country draws a sharp comparison between local methods and those of India. We're sure that foreign versions of show selling will be interesting to many of our members and will therefore look forward to hearing further from our brother member across the seas.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Show-business claimed the attention of Chas. L. Oswald at the age of 16 years when he sold his services to a road show as a pianist. However, after trying that for a short time, he resolved to complete his education, so returned to a prep school in Portland, Ore. Graduating from prep, he entered Reed College, Portland, and followed up with courses at the University of Washington and Oregon Institute of Technology.

Chas. L. Oswald

With the exception of time spent with aviation and infantry units during his enlistment period in the late war, Oswald has since devoted attention to the business that first caught his interest. Following discharge from the army, he went with Publix as a district booker for five years. Then he became associated with Publix-Saenger for a year in southern territory. When Publix formed the Comerford affiliation in Scranton, Pa., he went there and continued on that job until he connected with the Warner circuit. He acted as booker over a period, was transferred to operations and has since been managing theatres. At the present writing we find him holding down the job of city manager in Martinsburg, W. Va., with headquarters at the Apollo Theatre.

TAYLOR AND SEYMOUR RIGGED AUTO COUPE TO SELL NAVAL FILM

We've already had occasion to let readers know some things about the activities of Frank Taylor and G. D. Seymour, two recently elected Round Tablers, and this time present a small photo showing how their coupe auto was rigged to make a float ballyhoo for "Suicide Fleet." Incidentally, that's Taylor standing by the side of the coupe. He's the manager, and Seymour takes care of advertising. The float was so constructed that it fitted over the car.

In addition to routing the auto through all surrounding towns, an advertising campaign was started in the newspaper five days in advance. Leading up to a preview at Saturday midnight, four one-inch ads were scattered through the paper and the Saturday edition carried a seven-inch ad announcing the pre-view. The picture opened Sunday.

Now that Taylor and Seymour are regular Round Tablers, we'll expect to be kept informed on all that's going on in showbusiness out their way. Shoot your ideas along, boys, and headquarters will do its part.

ED HIEHLE STAGED BIG FOLLIES SHOW FOR A RELIEF FUND

Among the many members of this Club who have lately engaged in benefit shows for the Unemployment Relief Fund, we note that Edward J. Hiehle, manager of the Midland Theatre, Newark, Ohio, did his share through a tie-up with one of the local newspapers. With this cooperation, he and the paper put over a big two-day show called the "Newark Follies," which netted over $500 for the fund.

We can also easily see that Hiehle hasn't lost his knack of being able to go out and put over a double truck co-op whenever the situation is ripe for a move of this kind. We'll say he promoted a corker in connection with "Palmy Days," with his theatre getting the usual fine break of space in the centre of the group of ads. A banner line across top of page read, "Eddie Cantor Says Enjoy Palmy Days—Buy Now."

It's always a pleasure to hear from loyal old Round Tabler Ed Hiehle and while his writing hand occasionally gets a bit cramped we never lose faith in knowledge that he'll come through sooner or later with some good suggestions for his fellow Club members. As the result of his holiday drive we're sure there's a bag full of tricks up his sleeve and we'll await further information. In the meantime, we and all his friends wish him compliments of the season.

WHEELER WITH ALLISON

Ed. A. Wheeler, formerly with the Park Theatre in Johnstown, Pa., recently joined forces with R. Allison, general manager of the Rivoli Theatres Co., with home offices in Cresson, Pa. Wheeler is acting as general supervisor and assistant to Mr. Allison.

BUILT-UP FRONTS!

Theatres located on transient streets have found it worth while to go in for built-up fronts in place of the usual art posters or other stereotyped displays. From several sources we find that the cost of these fronts for one or two change houses are not so expensive as to make the idea impractical for the majority of houses. Smart showmen have worked out a plan whereby they have two built backgrounds on which they tack, or otherwise mount, the smaller cut-outs, eight by ten's or stars heads. Then a little atmospheric treatment according to the picture lends the finishing touches.

The idea possesses merit where theatre fronts constitute an important part of your seat-selling ideas and should therefore be given more than passing consideration. Consult your sign man; whether he is employed by the theatre or the shop where your present work is being done; they will be able to help you in the selection of the two fronts which you can alternate on each change of program.

This, like many other merchandising angles, is a matter of simple arithmetic, so sit yourself down and find out what your present front is costing you for each change and then compare it with the cost of the idea suggested above. If they are close enough together to warrant such a radical and attractive change in your theatre's front appearance then you ought to get the necessary approvals and go to it. It may mean a decided improvement in your b.o. receipts by reason of the attention these special fronts grab from the passing prospective patron.

WEAVER EXPLOITED FILM WITH WINDOW OF WEDDING RINGS

The old wedding ring gag, with a variation, was successfully used to exploit "Road to Reno" by L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz.

He tied-up with a local jeweler for a window display of 550 wedding rings (exchange rings) with mirrors placed so as to multiply the effect.. The public was invited to estimate the number of rings in the window and receive guest tickets for their efforts. The window also contained a number of 11 x 14's, as well as copy relative to picture, theatre and playdates. When the picture became current, the rings were placed in small envelopes inscribed, "A Souvenir Found on the Road to Reno." A line of credit to the jeweler paid for imprinting and distribution.

Both theatre and jeweler shared in publicity and cash returns as the result of using the above stunts and we are obliged to Weaver for making it possible to pass his tip along. We will look forward to hearing what he did in show-business over the holidays.

SID LAURENCE USED A MARRIAGE FOLDER TO EXPLOIT PICTURE

When exploiting "Susan Lenox" at Schine's Piqua Theatre, Piqua, Ohio, Shine's district man Sid Laurence used a folder in the form of a marriage contract, red seal and everything.

Copy on inside of folder read: "Susan Lenox and Jeb Ferguson—Marriage contract—(date). I, Susan Lenox, being of sound mind and free will, do hereby agree to become the wife of Jeb Ferguson on or before Nov. 8th, in return for the payment of—One Hundred Dollars—To my uncle Alan Hale, and whatever cattle he may assign the prospective husband, of a monetary value not to exceed Twenty-five Dollars—Witnessed by John Miljan, Jean Hersholt—Signed by Susan Lenox and Jeb Ferguson."

A note at the bottom read: "Results of this marriage to be heard at Schine's Piqua Theatre, where Greta Garbo with Clark Gable, present 'Susan Lenox—Her Fall and Rise' Sunday and Monday, Nov. 8th and 9th."

FOSTER AIDED BOX OFFICE WITH GIVE AWAY OF MOTOR CAR

Ten thousand 18 by 12 inch broadsides were distributed in town and surrounding communities on the occasion of the give-away of a popular priced auto by G. H. Foster, manager of the Kenton Theatre, Kenton, Ohio. The centre portion carried theatre ad and a number of merchants' announcements appeared on sides and at bottom.

One-half the cost of the car and the entire cost of the throw-aways and distribution of same was paid for by merchants tied-up in the deal. Privileges to participate in the give-away were obtained by applying at both theatre box-office and merchant's stores.

We don't doubt for one moment that Foster's auto give-away brought in the looked-for returns to theatre and merchant, and in these days a great many communities will react most favorably to a promotional stunt of this nature.

BIG SPACE SECURED IN SPORTS SECTION OF PAPER BY EASSON

Many effective write-ups were obtained in sports columns, etc., in advance of the showing of "Spirit of Notre Dame" by Allan Easson, manager of the Tivoli Theatre, Hamilton. Canada.

For several weeks ahead, a leading column gave valuable mention to the theme of the picture, always linking up with the name of the late Rockne. On one occasion, an entire review, including cast, was published on a page in the sports section.

We are indebted to Joe Weil, director of exploitation for Universal, for a glance at the many tear sheets testifying to the large amount of valuable space garnered by Easson on the occasion described above. We do not recall any past contributions to this department from this showman, but now that the ice has been broken, we'll look forward with pleasure to hearing from him again.

WOODIN HAS METHOD TO TEST THE POWER OF RURAL NEWSPAPER

Slants on what is doing in show business down in Wellsboro, Pa., where Larry Woodin manages the Arcadia Theatre Co., continue as interesting as ever, for this Round Tabler is always experimenting with some idea that we can pass along to other members of this organization.

Recently he's been testing out advertising values of out-of-town newspapers and as a result of this has entirely cut off two of these mediums and doubled up the appropriation in another. To do this he spotted a coupon in the ad which, when brought to the theatre, was good for one admission on a designated night. He made the coupon inconspicuous as possible and gave out no information concerning it; hence the reader had to digest the ad in order to see the coupon.

Another stunt that Larry's using these days to boost kiddie attendance at Saturday morning shows is the give-away of a convertible wagon and bob-sled. He promotes these from a local firm which is glad to make contributions in lieu of advertising.

Still another little gag he tried out during football season helped both school athletic board and theatre. He made arrangements with those in charge of the local High School team to give free tickets every Friday evening to those who appeared regularly for practice. This made a hit with the athletic board and created a lot of good will advertising for the theatre at the cost of but a few passes.

Regarding Woodin's ad test plan, he has found it to be an excellent method to determine what paper is reaching the out-of-town customer. As to how to promote those free wagon-bobsleds, he states he'll gladly let Club members know where and how he gets them. Furthermore, he wants to know "who said depression?" The Arcadia recently broke an attendance record that has been standing for ten years. That arouses our curiosity for the reason that Larry failed to let us know just what was responsible for this record show.

BROADWAY'S LATEST NECK TWISTER!

Reminds you of that famous sign made for "Big Parade" doesn't it? But it's just the latest mammoth electrical stunt rigged up by M-G-M on the front of the Astor Theatre, New York City, to twist the necks and attract the eyes of traffic along Broadway. No need to name the picture, for the sign speaks for itself—and how! How many lights make up this sign we don't know, but there are a-plenty.

START THE YEAR RIGHT—JOIN NOW!

W. J. McLAUGHLIN is in charge of the Strand Theatre, the Warner first run house in the downtown section of Brooklyn, N. Y. His name has been missing from the roster of this organization for some little time and it's a pleasure to include his application for membership. We've had occasion to watch the work turned out by McLaughlin and his able corps of assistants and they've pulled off many a live wire stunt. Now if Mack will just take off a little time now and then in order to jot down a few notes, we'll promise to keep all his brother Club members informed about his activities.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ELVIN J. KUDLACEK is all set to carve a name for himself in this business of selling shows. His father has just placed him in sole charge of the Roseway Theatre in Ranier, Ore., and he's taken out a subscription to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. All he needs now is to keep the seats filled and since he's armed with the combination of youth (just turned 16) and the HERALD, we certainly think he's off to an auspicious start. His dad is a veteran showman, having operated a Nebraska house for several years, and will be right there to give a helping hand when necessary. Okay, Elvin let's go! And don't forget to keep in touch with your Club.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHRISTOPHER PARILLO is the assistant manager of the Maplewood Theatre in Maplewood, N. J., and the Club welcome is also extended to this new member. He's 23 years of age and has been connected with this theatre for a matter of ten months, starting in as usher and going on up the line. According to his boss, H. E. Broach, Chris is a most enterprising young showman and predicts that it probably will not be long before he moves up another notch. We will be interested in his success and hope that both he and his chief will let the Club know what's going on in Maplewood.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LEN FREID manages the Wisconsin Theatre in Eau Claire, Wis., and we can tell right off the bat that this new Round Tabler is going to prove a source of many a helpful hint to pass along to his brother showmen. He's been using a little gag in the local high school that has proved most productive, and we'll see that it appears in an early issue. In the meantime, Len, tell us more about what you are doing in show-business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES W. HARFORD is in charge of the Rialto Theatre, Eureka, Calif., and we're very glad to welcome this seasoned showman to the ranks of this ever-growing organization. Prior to going with the Rialto he sold shows in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland, Calif.; and in cities in Oregon and Illinois. He has been in the game for fifteen years and we're sure that all will benefit through his recent affiliation. We'll be on the lookout for his next communication.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROLAND H. RUDEN is the assistant publicity director of the Warner-Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., and we're mighty glad to welcome another representative of this live-wire house over in New York's largest borough. The last publicity man connected with this house we had occasion to write of, Hal Slazman, has gone on up the ladder, and we wish the same success to Ruden. Please give our kindest regards to your boss, W. J. McLaughlin, Roland. In the meantime, let's hear about what you are doing in the way of publicizing shows.

H. R. WALKER is located up in Dartmouth, N. S., Canada, where he both owns and operates the Royal Theatre. Somehow or other his original application became lost and this is the first opportunity we've had to record that he's a full-fledged member of this organization. We believe that Mr. Walker is in an excellent position to let his fellow showmen know what's going on in showmanship in his section of the country and will look forward to hearing from him again in the near future.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT L. GARDNER has the task of assisting Leo Young with the management of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., since the transfer of former assistant Ed Hough to the Ritz Theatre in Columbia, S. C., and we are indebted to Young for sponsoring his application for membership in this organization. Both he and Gardner are busy taking a sock at old man depression and it's a cinch that all their fellow Club members will want to hear about what weapons they are using to whip the old man.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

B. W. FELDMAN was recently promoted to the post of manager of the Marbro Theatre in Chicago, Ill., and this assignment came after several years of hard work. One of the first things he did was to send along his application for membership in this Club and we're mighty glad to have him with us. He's on top now and well deserves the promotion. We'll be looking for further word concerning this showman's method of selling entertainment.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE F. "CRISS" CRISMAN hails from the good old city of Milwaukee, Wis., where, according to advice from Round Tabler Harold Janecky, it's still possible to quench a thirst with a glass of decent beer. He manages the Riviera Theatre and we're mighty glad to extend the Club welcome to Criss and know that he will do his share toward making constructive suggestions for these pages. We'll be looking for his next communication.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SEYMOUR JONAS is the manager of the State Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., and he's still another Brooklynite in line for introduction to his host of fellow Round Tablers. We are very glad to include his name on the roster and hope that he will do his share to make these pages interesting to the rest of the gang. Shoot along some ideas, Seymour, and we'll do our part to see that the other boys know what you are doing.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DAN CLINTON sent us word some time ago that he was an assistant manager and would like to join this Club. At that time he was working under Manager Brown at the Rex Theatre, Panhandle, Texas. Since then, Brown has gone on the road selling advertising films and Dan has fallen heir to the job of manager and at this writing he becomes a full fledged member of this organization. Now that he is in a position to act we sincerely hope that he will do his part to keep the ball rolling along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RICHARD V. KIRSH is located down in Reading, Pa., where he manages the Astor Theatre, and with his membershpi application at hand the ranks of the Pennsylvania contingent grows another notch. Now that you've taken the step, Dick, remember that it is the duty of every member to keep others informed on what's going on in show business in respective communities. So let's hear from you soon.

BURTON L. PRINCE manages the Lenox Theatre in Hartford, Conn., another Warner house, and he's the next man in line for introduction to his fellow showmen. We've had occasion to print many a live show tip from Club members over his way and hope that Prince will continue the good work. Now that you are one of the gang, Burton, come through with an account of what you did to step up the box office over the holidays.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY KNOBLUACH is in charge of the Nixon Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa., and it is our pleasure to record that he is the second showman bearing that name to become a member of this Club. This Round Tabler is a veteran theatre man, having at one time operated his own theatre circuit in Pennsylvania before hooking up with the Publix circuit. At present he is located in the district of our old friend Monty Salmon, to whom we also pass along best regards and wishes for much success during the coming year.

H. JACK HUWIG is both pilot and skipper of that very unusual theatre down in Baltimore Md., which is known as Loew's Valencia. It is a theatre on top of a theatre, having been erected over Loew's Century and it's atmospheric from stem to stern. Well we remember an account of the opening of the Valencia as written by Robert Garland, at that time with a Baltimore paper and now with the "New York Telegram." He described the general effect as a "Spanish Omelette," the atmospheric design being something of an innovation in those days. At any rate, we have Jack's word for it that he's in charge of a very attractive house and we would like to hear more about the show selling end.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 112—(A) Will every projection arc operate best at one voltage? Explain your answer. (B) Your 60-volt arc is pulling 70 amperes. What is its resistance in ohms? How did you arrive at the result? (C) Set forth the formula for calculating projection arc voltage. (D) Set forth the "rule o' thumb" formula for calculating projection arc voltage. Is it accurate?

Answer to Question No. 106

Bluebook School Question No. 106 was: "(A) Describe the RCA Photophone photoelectric cell. (B) Describe its current operations. (C) Name all the various elements of the RCA sound reproduction system."

At the time of writing, 986 answers have arrived, out of which the following men made acceptable replies. (I must apologize for the fact that Section C is a question which was asked in Question 102. My error, gentlemen.) An asterisk following a name signifies an especially complete reply. The acceptable replies came from C. Rau and S. Evans*, Van Buskirk and Kroll*, Lester Borst*, Lewis A. Goldman*, Roy J. Arntson*, G. E. Doe*, Bill Doe*, John Wentworth*, Will Peck, P. L. Davis, Frank Oliver*, S. Emmerson, P. F. Daniels, A. L. Davidson, Charles Tamper and George Baker*, A. Dexter, Tom Murphy and Jack Gill*, Seymour Carroll, James Traxler, Dave Anderson, Mike Mcguire, Nic Cranby, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Andy Rangor, H. B. Becker*, S. T. Jones*, Dave Andrews, John Williams, H. B. Billings, James Devoy*, P. T. Garling, Thomas McGruder, N. D. Garling*, K. L. Knight, H. D. Schofield, S. Kay, Sam and Andrew Wells, Dan L. Simmons, Roy J. Arntson, R. Lester*, James Ledbetter, William Bogert, Henry B. Coates, Tom Hazelton*, Dan L. Graves*, Cyrus T. Davis, Tom G. Graves, William Boradbent, Jack Billings, Pat O'Brien*, Larry Tipton, Robert Banning, Andrew Davis, H. D. Tyler, T. L. May, Andy Bailey, John C. Davidson*, Richard Singleton, P. L. Toeping, Dave Lode, Chick Peters, Dan Roxbury*, Frank Burker*, D. L. Warren*, A. Gibson, O. Cranby, Alonzo Zerach*, John Cermak, G. Richards*, Don Taberson, Dave Goldberg*, Tom Wgitnath, F. G. Garison, Henry Edwards*, P. H. Bondom, Art Daniels, H. G. Tonlin, Henry Sicmann, Frank D. Roller, Dave Bitdoll, R. L. Little, Richard Micheals, John G. Farmann, D. Samuels and George Thompson.

The answer presented by Evans and Rau, Van Buskirk and Kroll, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe and Bill Doe were essentially of equal merit, though worded quite differently. I have selected the answer of Messrs. Evans and Rau as perhaps best suited to the needs of publication. These gentlemen say:

"(A) Two types of photoelectric cells are used in RCA Photophone equipment; viz., the UX-867 and the UX-868. Of these two, the UX-868 is used almost exclusively, as it is smaller than the UX-867 and uses only 90 volts d.c., whereas 200 volts is required for the UX-868. Another difference in the tubes is the cathode, that of the UX-867 being on the inner surface of the bulb. It consists of metallic silver, that same being, in turn, coated with a thin layer of caesium, the light sensitive material. On the other hand, the UX-868 has a curved plate cathode, which is coated with caesium. The anodes of both cells are much alike.

"(B)A photoelectric cell is a device which varies in electrical resistance in proportion to the amount of light falling upon it. The active metal used in RCA photoelectric cells is called caesium. When light falls upon this metal, electrons are emitted from its surface. The number of electrons emitted is directly proportional to the amount of light falling upon the surface of the metal. In order to make use of this fact, some method of collecting the electrons is necessary. To obtain this end a plate coated with the active material is placed within a vacuum tube and an electrical connection is made from it to the outside of the tube. Another conductor set in the proximity of the plate is also placed within the tube and has a lead brought out for electrical connection. The surface coated with the active material is called the cathode. The other conductor is called the anode.

"If the cathode is connected to the negative side and the anode is connected to the positive side of some source of d.c. potential, the anode will collect the electrons emitted from the cathode. Since the number of electrons emitted depends upon the amount of light falling upon the cathode, the number of electrons collected by the anode will vary with the amount of light falling on the cathode. The electrons collected by the anode do not remain there, but flow off immediately in the form of an electric current through the external circuit, therefore a varying amount of light falling upon the cathode will cause a varying current in the external circuit. This circuit contains the primary of a step-down transformer, and this step-down of the voltage with the consequent raising of the amperage obviates the necessity of mounting a p.e. cell amplifier at the sound head in order to eliminate the chance of microphonic noises affecting the weak electrical impulses emanating from the p.e. cell. The current goes from the secondary to the fader, and then to the primary of another transformer, where the voltage is stepped up to its original value as it came from the p.e. cell.

"(C) The important elements of the RCA reproduction system are (a) an exciting lamp, (b) a slit, (c) a slit optical system, (d) a film sound track, (e) a photoelectric cell, (f) a 200- (or 90-) volt storage battery, or its equivalent, (g) a 12-to-1 transformer, (h) a fader, (i) a 1-to-12 transformer, (j) a volume control, (k) various stages of amplification, and (m) loud speakers."

A Different Idea

A different and proved successful method of presenting advertising on the theatre screen has been inaugurated at the Denver theatre in Denver, which has the happy faculty of advertising without incurring boredom on the part of the patrons. The films, each running about five minutes, are shown prior to the stage presentation, the series being titled, "Know Your Denver." Various industrial plants in the city pay the bills, including ads in the local papers calling attention to the theatre presentation. The local chamber of commerce sponsors the films and the city of Denver has received a good deal of publicity from the idea.

THE EMBLEM OF RCA PERFECT SOUND
PHOTOPHONE
INC SOUND EQUIPMENT

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE EN ROUTE.

Dear "J. C.":

Thanks for your letter in reply to mine of December 19. Also thanks for setting me right on Vernon E. Ross of Toledo, Oregon. Next time you see her, please apologize for my having thought "she" was "he." Am glad to learn that she is so well satisfied with the RCA Photophone sound reproducing equipment, and when you say "it may be of interest to you to know that I have come in contact with quite a number of RCA Photophone sound installations and can't recall a single case where perfect satisfaction was not given," that makes me glad, too. Although reports of a similar nature come to us from all sections of the country, it is encouraging and pleasing to receive so frank a statement from one who comes in contact with so many exhibitors. I rather imagine you will find all RCA Photophone equipped theatres are giving the same brand of "sound" satisfaction to their patrons. . . . But there's a reason, "J. C." In fact, there are several reasons. One is superior apparatus and another is courteous and efficient service following installation. Figures compiled for the district served by our Philadelphia office happen to be before me; they justify and prove our contention. Covering a period of six months, the emergency calls to the office averaged one call per theatre in ten months. Now, that's something to arouse the interest of all exhibitors, large and small. Think of it, "J. C." Those figures mean that an exhibitor may reasonably expect RCA Photophone equipment to function satisfactorily for five years with not more than six emergency calls for the entire period, and the Philadelphia figures also show that hardly one of those calls will uncover trouble of a serious nature. Ponder over those figures, "J. C." Thar's gold in them facts.

Here's the best of luck to you,
All the way through '32.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Fresno, Cal.

DEAR HERALD:

Jevver see a theatre made out of redwood logs? We saw one at Scotia. Scotia is located in the Eel river valley in the mountains. You drop down off the mountains into this town and meet up with the surprise of your life. Scotia is a mill town right in the redwood forest and the Winema theatre is owned by the mill company and managed by A. C. Edwards. The theatre is what will give you a shock because it is so unique. It is made of logs and finished inside with redwood lumber that takes a polish like marble.

Mr. Edwards insisted on us staying over to go hunting with him. He said: "I understand you are very fond of huckleberries and we have some marshes here that are full of huckleberries and bears and we will go out and get some." And we said: "Bears, who's lost any bears?" And he replied: "Oh, the bears won't hurt you if you kill 'em first shot," and we said: "Oh yeah, but if you don't kill 'em the first shot then it's their turn. No thank you, we'd rather play with the baby."

Then he wanted us to go deer hunting and trout fishing with him up to his cabin in the mountains. (Note: Now you exhibitors have got to stop asking us to go deer hunting and trout fishing with you. You know darned well that we've got one wife and one daughter to support and we can't do it while deer hunting and trout fishing, and an invitation of that kind is what throws a wet blanket over the joys of having to work for a living. Gosh-all-fishhooks, or worse than that. Some day we hope to go back there when we've saved up enough dough to keep the wolf away from our front door for a week or so and then it will be too bad for those trout and deer.)

Fresno is where the raisins come from. When you are in Fresno you think of raisins. When you are in Neligh, Nebraska or Nashwauk, Minnesota, and eat raisins you think of Fresno. That's why Fresno is so well advertised. Fresno makes other things out of raisin grapes but we didn't get any of it because they ship the most of it to Hollywood. Fresno is a nice place during December, January and February; the balance of the year there is a tremendous demand for refrigeration and B.V.D's.

We called on Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Harris at Stockton. They operate the Rialto theatre, an independent house, and we found them very lovely people. Mr. Harris says business is not what it used to be but it could be worse were it not for his determination to see to it that it doesn't get that way. This is evidenced by the manner in which he bills his shows.

The Fox California at this place is about as beautiful a theatre as we have visited in a long while. Mr. N. O. Turner is the manager and a very fine gentleman to meet. He's a little different from a lot of them we have met; some of 'em are.

Dinuba is a little town of about 3,000 folks and here we found another Hughes-Franklin house which, like the other Hughes-Franklin houses we have called on, is much more beautiful than one would expect to find in so small a town. This theatre is managed by W. J. Roberts who, again, is like all Hughes-Franklin managers we have met, a regular fellow who treats you like you were one of the home folks. Roberts was on top of the marquee putting up some Christmas decorations but he took time off to show us through the house. Somehow when we find a Hughes-Franklin house we feel right at home, that's why we are strong for Hughes-Franklin. Sorry we can't say that for all circuit managers.

Dinuba is bounded on the east by grape vineyards, on the south by grape vineyards, on the west by grape vineyards and on the north by grape vineyards, the balance of the country is given over to the growing of grapes. There can be enough "concentrates" made here to satisfy New York on a New Year's eve, and you know that will take SOME grapes.

W. R. Conley manages the Star theatre at Reedly. The Star is one of the circuit houses operated out of Frisco, of which we have found a number. Mr. Conley is doing his best to put this theatre over, and if he succeeds under present conditions he's a good one, and we judge he will, for he's a live one.

We stopped in at a cafe to get a cup of coffee and there was some kind of an argument going on back in the kitchen, for one fat gal who weighed around 200 said, "No-matter whatthehel I do it's all wrong ain't it."

Long Beach

Just before we got into Hollywood we saw a big sign by the roadside which read "STOP IN HOLLYWOOD" and the boy who is driving us read it and said, "What's the use in doing that now, Clara Bow is married."

We went into the HERALD office to call on the folks and found them all strangers. Some of 'em never heard of us before. We couldn't blame 'em for that, for maybe some of 'em don't read. We met Mr. Meehan, the manager, and had two hours of delightful conversation with him. We expect to go back and call on him again.

We like Long Beach for two reasons: It is located on the Pacific ocean and there are so many Nebraska folks here. Outside of that we wish we were back in Nebraska where we could get warm. This cold northwest wind right off the ocean reminds us of the Masaba range where Crockett Brown lives. When it rains out here and up to Portland and Seattle they will tell you that it won't wet you. That's because your clothes are so full of fog that they can't absorb any more moisture. We got soaked six weeks ago and the chair is still wet when we get up. But for all that we like this country notwithstanding they soak us more for oranges than they do back home and the meat they serve you would make a Mexican farmer wonder who killed his burro. If you are coming to California to get a job, stay at home. If you are coming to California to spend the winter bring your overcoat and check book, you will need both of 'em.

Eddie Grossman, popular manager of the United Artists branch, will leave Chicago soon to take over the post of manager of the company's Cincinnati branch. Ben Fish, who has been district manager, will succeed Mr. Grossman in Chicago. The change occurs through the recent decision of United Artists to eliminate district managers throughout the country. An active worker and a leading spirit in all movements pertaining to industry problems locally, Mr. Grossman will be missed by many friends along the Row.

Use Paper Floors on Sets

Paramount, after successful tests, has bought several tons of a new wood-pulp paper flooring for studio sets, which is said to so muffle floor noises that furniture may be moved and people walk without interfering with the recording of dialogue.

Schools Testing Value of Films in Teaching Science

The junior high schools of Lynn, Quincy and Revere, Mass., are beginning this week an experimental period of six weeks during which talking films will be tested as supplementary aids to the teaching of science.

The films were produced by the University Film Foundation and the tests devised by the Harvard Graduate School of Education. The tests are financed by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which granted $25,000 "for determining the value of mechanical aids in education."

A theatre group is being organized in San Francisco for the interpretation of ultra-modern plays that may later find their way to the screen. Dr. Alexander Arkatov, who brought "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" to this country, will direct the group.

International Show in Prague

The first International Film Exhibition is scheduled for Prague, Czechoslovakia, at the Exhibition Palace, March 13 to 20, 1932. Rudolph Myzet, Czechoslovakian Hollywood correspondent, will handle the cultural part of the American exposition.

MUSIC AND TALENT

34 MUSICIANS RETURN TO HOUSES IN MILWAUKEE; 20 AT THE WARNER

Heinz Roemheld Directs New Orchestra at Warner Theatre; Majestic Engages 14-Piece Band; Organists in Service

By Staff Correspondent

Organists and orchestra players are coming back into their own, at least in Milwaukee. The advent of sound pictures had shelved no small number of organists and orchestra players. Indications are now that the tide is turning.

Prior to sound pictures, all of Milwakee's first runs featured an orchestra and organist, and in addition there were two vaudeville houses in town. More recently only two theatres maintained that policy, Fox's Wisconsin and RKO's Riverside.

Christmas Day, however, brought players in person to two more houses on Milwaukee's Wisconsin avenue and an organist to the third. All of which augurs well for the musician and organist, in the estimation of Frank Hayek, president of the Milwaukee Musicians Association.

Thirty-four musicians returned to their own on Christmas Day. The Warner theatre has engaged an orchestra of 20 under the direction of Heinz Roemheld, who several years ago directed the orchestra ot Universal's Alhambra theatre in Milwaukee and recently returned from Hollywood where he was one of the musical directors for Universal. Al Gullickson continues to preside at the theatre's organ.

The Majestic theatre, playing six acts of vaudeville and operated by Lew Kane, has engaged a fourteen piece orchestra. Terese Meyer, WTMJ organist, was featured at Brin's Garden during Christmas week as an added attraction. All this is considered a favorable sign.

Other downtown theatres and even the neighborhood houses are reported to be giving heed to the growing public chorus, "We want music."

Hearst Takes Radio Station

A special program January 4 signaled the change in ownership of station WCAE, Pittsburgh, which has been affiliated with the Sun-Telegraph, newspaper owned by William Randolph Hearst. The station is associated with an NBC network.

May Resume Stage Shows

Loew's theatre, Canton, Ohio, will resume vaudeville attractions in addition to films, sometime this month, it is reported. Stage shows were discontinued there two years ago.

Corporate Changes in Radio

Corporate changes in radio field recently noted at Dover, Del., include: Harvard Radio and Television Company, Inc., new name; Universal Radio Producers Corporation, incorporated to produce plays of all kinds; W. J. S. V., Inc., incorporated to produce plays of all kinds.

Store Buys Radio Station

The H. & S. Pogue Company, Cincinnati department store, has taken over station WKRC from the Greun Watchmaker's Guild which had been operating it for the past few years. Columbia network programs will be continued.

TED MEYN

This well-known organist, who uses, as a caption to his name, (the name is Mine) is now featured organist at Loew's State theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. Ted has been at the Loew's Jersey theatre, Jersey City, for the past two years and the huge demonstration which the local high school and the local Masonic lodge gave him, when they learned of his transfer, was one of the greatest proofs of the popularity of an organist we have ever heard of. Not only parties, parades and so forth were given for him, but even the writing of a special song with which he was serenaded both at the party and at the theatre on his closing night. Ted's not stepping into a new spot, because he has just as many friends in the house where he is now as he has in Jersey. He had, two years ago, been brought on from the State to the Jersey.

STAGE SHOWS

Week ending January 1

Fanchon and Marco's "Tintypes" Idea opens in a photographer's studio with a large cutout of a photographer standing besides his camera as a background. Oscar Taylor, in the role of photographer, sings introductory numbers, and the first tintype is that of a group of croquet players, with the chorus going through its paces attired in an odd lot of assorted costumes.

The Aaron Sisters entertain with spirituals as they step from another old tintype setting, while Pressler and Klaiss, in the role of old-fashioned newlyweds, sing "Sweet Adeline," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," and "You Great Big Beautiful Doll."

Marie Remington, an acrobat on skates, performs some nimble feats without batting an eyelash. The setting is that of the living room in a home of the early nineties.

A young man delights the audience with a number of classy paper tricks in connection with which he tears out a diversity of designs without once looking at what he is doing.

The chorus' next number is a quadrille followed by the Aaron sisters who croon "On Our Golden Wedding Day." The girls' voices blend well and they get a nice reception.

Pressler and Klais again entertain with a comedy skit, the man clowning at the piano, while the young woman sings "Roll on Mississippi, Roll On."

With motion pictures of Civil war scenes flashed in a cameo setting, Oscar Taylor in the role of a Civil war veteran sings of the death of one of the generals. He winds up with "Your Flag and My Flag," while the chorus in blue and white military uniforms perform atop stilts on roller skates.

New York Capitol

Week ending January 7

This week's bill has as its outstanding bit of entertainment, "Mata Hari," featuring Greta Garbo and Ramon Novarro. The stage-show, "Frolics of 1932" though finely staged and presented, could not compare in entertainment value, to the feature picture.

It was devised and staged by Chester Hale, under Mr. Louis K. Sidney's personal supervision. Opening with a colorful Russian dance routine by the Hale Girls, which serves as an introduction for Joyce Coles, Nicholas Daks and Carlos Peterson, who offer an eccentric Russian ballet routine. The 3 Pasquali Brothers follow with difficult feats of balancing and tumbling which they apparently do with the greatest of ease. Jimmy Savo, comedian, lives up to his reputation and goals them with his comedy antics. For the finale, Joyce Coles, first leads the Chester Hale Girls in a smart routine and then the entire ensemble assembles as curtain lowers. Effective staging, together with a snappy and fast program makes this an entertaining show.

In case you may never find it out otherwise, "Tweet" Hogan, orchestra director, was christened Francis Joseph Hogan. . . . Harry Kogen, NBC orchestra conductor, isn't composing any more in the small hours of the night. He's been in the habit of working out melodies on his apartment grand when sleep failed, but a neighbor wrote him a courteous little note about it the other day, and now Harry hasn't the heart to thump the instrument at 2 a. m. . . . Jack Fulton has adopted a stray dog of no particular ancestry. . . . Mildred Bailey has added another chow to her collection of seven. . . . Matt Malneck, one of the country's youngest composers, has dedicated his latest song, "'Leven Pounds of Heaven," to his boss, Paul Whiteman. . . .

To be happy, says Eddie Cantor, NBC comedian, a wife should love a husband as well as he loves himself. . . . Clyde McCoy, whose orchestra is heard from the Merry Garden Ballroom, tells this one about his recent fishing trip. His companion was a doctor and strangely enough after an hour or more he got a bite. The fish was landed but the M.D. had some difficulty in extricating the hook. Gazing into the limpid pools of the victim's eyes he sighed professionally, "Say 'Ah,' please." . . .

Vincent Lopez, NBC orchestra leader and pianist, once was a stenographer for the president of a milk company. The job brought him eight dollars a week. . . . Roy Shields is doing a great job on the Armour program. . . . Buddy Rogers, noted film star, has deserted the screen to organize and conduct his own orchestra, and also sing, over NBC networks, it was announced by George Engles, NBC vice-president in charge of Artists Service, who also said that Rogers has signed a contract placing him under the exclusive management of the NBC Artists Service. . . . Lawrence Tibbett, Metropolitan Opera baritone, made his initial appearance as an NBC artist on January 4. . . . "What this country needs," insists Ray Perkins, NBC singing humorist, "is a castiron toothpaste tube that can't be squeezed in the middle."

Frank and Edward Monroe opened the program with fun on a spring net which was concealed by a decoration in the foreground on the stage. These comedy acrobats mixed pantomime with their somersaults in mid air. The act clicked.

Jerome Mann was on next in a single spot and imitated several stars, among them Al Jolson, Maurice Chevalier and Pat Rooney.

Billy Hibbett and Marie Hartmann provided most of the laughs, with the major honors going to Miss Hartman.

Anatole Friedland's Affairs of 1932 closed the bill with eight petite dancing dolls who did a series of dance steps including buck and wing, soft shoe and toe. Ken Harvey did a corking good banjo solo. Jerome Mann acted in the capacity of M. C. for this last number and the stepping girls again appeared, this time doing the "Rhumba."

As an extra added attraction, the management presented the Bonner School Dancing Kiddies, 60 youngsters.

STAGE SHOWS

Cincinnati RKO Albee

Week ending December 25

There were three acts instead of the customary five, but this was due to the time consumed by Horace Heidt's orchestra, headlined. The bill makes up in quality whatever it may lack numerically as to acts.

Pep Golden's Revue of 1932, with fifty local aspirants to stage fame, trained under Golden's personal direction here, occupy the hello spot. The aggregation consists of juvenile talent, well developed, in an array of singing, dancing and acrobatic turns.

Jay Mills and Florence Robinson follow in a skit labeled "All Work and No Play," which is hodgepodge of violin playing, songs, hoofing, wisecracks, and general hot stuff, the latter supplied mainly by the auburn-haired Florence. The act was good for a generous number of laughs.

Horace Heidt and his Californians, well known here through having played a protracted dance engagement at one of the leading local hotels last season, provide just about everything that even the blase theatregoer could possibly ask. This applies not only to the harmony, but to general diversion as well. Heidt does a very graceful waltz with Miss Florence Platt, who subsequently acts as trainer of a "man-made horse." Another feature quite foreign to an act of this nature is a highly trained dog in a series of tricks which are near-human. There is a burlesque number on a woodland dance in which the entire company participate, and which for sheer comedy is a knockout. Heidt does some vocalizing, plays the violin and piano, swings a mean baton and is constantly on the move while his men are in action. A highlight of the act is the harmony and rhythm produced by simultaneous playing of twelve violins, and later twelve cornets. The glee club, singing spirituals and other songs, pleased the customers mightily. Heidt had virtually to beg off after he had been recalled, together with his men, time and again.

Conrad Nagel appeared personally in this selection of Loew's Glorified Vaudeville Acts, reversing the usual procedure and leading the other acts instead of coming on as next to the last act. Introduction was made by a closeup of the Metro trademark lion growling the presentation announcement, then a picture of Conrad Nagel doing a twin act on the screen explaining slang terms of the studio and telling of the act. Then Nagel in a naval officer's uniform went into his act with Ruth Marsh, concerning a dumb girl taking a test for the film. The second part of the act was dramatic, with theatre and stage darkened and the heads of Nagel and Miss Marsh lighted by baby spots while Nagel did the trial scene from "Mary Dugan." Next came the regular presentation, staged by Arthur Knorr and supervised by Louis K. Sidney. Seven Chester Hale Girls in white "Beau Brummell" costumes did a toe routine, and others in black followed suit. After the Kerns Sisters' high kicking steps came the specialty, "Good Night Sweetheart," sung by Don Howard. The Chester Hale girls in various costumes danced while Howard sang the same song in German, Spanish, Argentinian, and then for American jazz. The girls wound up showing the kissing styles of all nations. Next the Kerns Sisters did a novelty jazz tempo dance followed by Charlotte Ayres and Rene in a classic ballroom dance, then joined by two men and going into adagio work. Carleton and Julie Ballew next did their comedy, song and piano act.

Dorothy is not only an accomplished organist but also substitutes the accordion for the organ too. . . . She has been at this house for the past eight weeks and has introduced modern mike work in her solos. . . . Earl Estes, who I believe was formerly featured in Chicago is now featured at the console of the RKO Rivoli, Toledo. . . . Ken Widenor, who is well-known throughout the country is now featured at the Skouras-Fox theatre, Hackensack, N. J. . . . This house, without a doubt, is one of the most beautiful in the country and Ken has a great instrument on which to work and, knowing him, can safely say he'll do well. . . .

Dropped into DeSylva, Brown and Henderson's offices the other day and watched those two youngsters, Al Salomon and Molly Schrager, work. . . . They are just about the youngest persons in charge of an organ and slide department that I know of and they sure are doing a great job. . . . Herb Oehmler, who has been out on the west coast for the past year is now in this city, where he intends opening offices and writing material for organists in this vicinity, just as he has done in the past for a lot of you fellows out of town. . . . Herb was baptized "God's Gift to Organists" by Gaylord Carter, featured organist at Warner's Hollywood, Hollywood, Cal., and I'm sure a lot of you fellows for whom he wrote will agree that the moniker is apt. . . . If any of you, who know him, want to drop him a line, temporarily, you can address him, in care of yours truly. . . .

The Roxy theatre has offered many innovations to its patrons. . . . The latest is three voting machines which determine the reaction of the customers to the show programs. . . . From time to time the patrons are asked what kind of music they like most, what type of stage productions they prefer and whether or not the film fare is to their liking. The quickened tempo of the stage-shows, the adding of "names" to its program and the installing of Fred Waring's Synchro-Symphony Orchestra are results of the votes recently cast by patrons. . . .

See you next week. . . S'long. . .

Alice White on Loew Tour

Alice White, who has been making personal appearances throughout the country since last July, has been signed for a tour of the Loew de luxe houses, beginning in Columbus, Ohio, January 15.

Adopts Thursday Changes

Loew's State in New Orleans is inaugurating its policy of changing bills on Thursdays, in order to keep in line with the Saenger and Orpheum. This applies to vaudeville as well as films.

ORGAN SOLOS

TED MEYN (Cleveland State), who is back at this house after an absence of two years, was royally welcomed by the audience, most of whom still remembered him. His opening number was the good old "California, Here I Come," with the opening words, "Hello Cleveland" substituted. He followed this with "Harvest Moon," "River Stay 'Way" (this he sang via "mike"), a whistling chorus to "Turkey in the Straw," comedy lyric to "By My Side," written about popular cigarets, "Minnie the Moocher," and a final chorus of "I Call it Love." It is apparent that Meyn will have no difficulty in regaining the popularity he previously enjoyed here.

DOROTHY SARBER (Columbus Neth's Grand) offered for her fourth week here a solo entitled "Olde Tyme Songs." In it she used the "mike" to rare advantage, and a clever combining of slides and an old silent melodrama. As the film was shown, Miss Sarber "synchronized" her talk to fit the situation and at opportune moments panicked the audience with local comment. The idea as a whole was outstanding and the Grand is a good entertainment bet, both for ability and attractiveness in Dorothy Sarber.

DICK LIEBERT (Jersey City Jersey), the new guest organist who opened here Christmas Day, has started off very well, giving the audiences the same type solos as Ted Meyn, his predecessor, gave them for the past two years, consequently making it an easy task for the audience to take to him. A nice bit of showmanship was evidenced by Liebert, when he opened his first solo with the reading of a greeting both to himself and the audience by Meyn. From then on, the audience were for him and all joined in singing as they usually do at this house. These songs were: "Don't Know Why," "Somebody Else," a most clever special about audience being ritzy, a laughable tongue-twister, special to "Million Dollar Baby," "Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean," one of the most cleverly worded parodies on "When I'm Gone," "Good Night Sweetheart," and in closing a special expressing his Holiday greetings in song. The reaction of the audience was most favorable.

ADOLPH GOEBEL (Omaha Paramount) for his opening solo surprised the audience with a novelty which was outstanding in its merits. A scene, showing the interior of a broadcasting studio, is first thrown on the screen. A man (it is Goebel but the audience are unaware of it as yet) announces through a microphone that an organ recital will be broadcast over station P-U-B-L-I-X, with Goebel at the organ and the Paramount Theatre Mixed Chorus as the special attraction. Before going to the console, he introduces himself and then plays "Out of Nowhere," "You Call it Madness," an extremely laughable tongue-twister, a smart parody on local scenes, "River Stay 'Way from My Door," a special Christmas parody, some humorous imitations (which elicit much applause), "Good Night Sweetheart," and a special chorus on "You're the One I Care For." As he is taking his bows and acknowledging his applause, a slide bearing his likeness and with words of greeting appears on the screen. Applause was strong during several of the numbers and especially at finish.

TED CRAWFORD (Santa Barbara Granada) played for his final solo at this house a very beautiful arrangement of "Sweet Mystery of Life," followed by two choruses of "Faded Summer Love." First chorus of this was offered in ballad style and the second for the audience to sing. Unpretentious as it was, the solo received a terrific hand, and as a touch of irony, Crawford encored with "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone."

OVERTURES

HAL SAUNDERS (Cincinnati RKO Albee) selected a medley of popular numbers highly appropriate to the season, and gave his men ample opportunity to display their individual talents. It seemed that the musicians were more inspired than ever, symbolic of the holiday spirit. The two numbers which seemed to stand out most prominently were "Jingle Bells" and "Holy Night."

During the rendition of the latter number, the audience burst into vigorous applause long before the selection was finished. An effect which considerably heightened the work of the orchestra was the throwing of vari-colored lights on the screen.

The orchestral overtures are well liked by this audience, who apparently enjoy good music.

BENJAMIN KLASMER (Baltimore Hippodrome) took the spotlight for his overture played as an introduction to the Christmas bill presented at this theatre. The music started with "The Doll Dance," then swung into a lively march, gradually turning into Christmas carols with Klasmer playing "Holy Night" as a violin solo, then finishing with full orchestra in the "Adeste Fidelis."

Klasmer received a very good hand for his efforts, as did the orchestra.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra offer "Gems from Gershwin," in which the "Rhapsody in Blue" is featured, along with airs from the "Man I Love." The organ is brought into use in producing some of the effects for which George Gershwin has become famous. After an absence of a week Joaquin Garay is again heard in solo work, offering "A Faded Summer Love."

EDWARD PAUL (Brooklyn Paramount) conducted the Paramount Pit Orchestra in an unusually pleasing orchestral overture and production, the stage-setting of which was produced by Frank Cambria. It was entitled "Ginger Bread Land," and made use of the Lovas Troupe and a number of show girls in the Bines dance ensemble.

The overture itself was a compilation of Christmas carols, beautifully played by the musicians and ably conducted by Mr. Paul.

It is inconceivable to this reviewer, just why an orchestra as well liked as this one, is not built up in its personnel. The additions would surely be justified.

FONTANA (New Orleans, the Publix Saenger) took the place of LOU FORBES as conductor for the week because Forbes failed to see an open trap door in the platform he had built over the elevator pit, and broke two ribs. The orchestra presented a Christmas overture, handled in fine style by Fontana, whose combination of musicianship and showmanship enables him to sell both the popular and the finer types of music. He opened with the "Toy Shop," followed with a Christmas carol, and then a chorus of about twenty, garbed in medieval costume and appearing before a street scene set, sang three carols in the choral style, closing effectively with "Holy Night." The orchestra took the spotlight again with "Jingle Bells" and a comedy number in which various members, clowning with Fontana, played toy instruments. As a closing number, the chorus appeared again in a church set, singing "Kamenoi Ostrow." The overture was produced by Forbes and staged by Tony Alloy, who made his scenes effective through intelligent lighting. The church scene with the tall candles was beautifully done.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

FREE WHEELING

EXHIBITORS and distributors have intermittently waged valiant warfare against the practice of certain newspapers, originally conceived by "Mae Tinee" of The Chicago Tribune, of attempting to classify pictures by the arbitrary and unreasonable arrangement of designating them as one, two, three, four or five star pictures.

Newspaper publishers whose journals have persisted in the practice have been deluged with protests. They have been repeatedly assured that this means of classifying pictures is unfair and unjust.

It would now seem—if we are to judge by an exhibit in front of The Rivoli Theatre, New York City—that if a sufficient number of stars are allotted to a picture the practice is all right.

The Rivoli last week displayed a huge sign under the marquee proclaiming that the current picture has received a four-star rating from Miss Kate Cameron in The New York Daily News.

From this point on it may be assumed that the newspapers will consider that the controversy has reached—for them—a victorious conclusion.

A TRIUMPH OVERSEAS

PLEASANT tidings come from the Folies-Dramatiques in Paris where the cables tell us the box office records have been broken by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Dance, Fools, Dance," dubbed and refurbished for Gallic consumption under the title of "La Pente." At last, it would appear, the cinema critics have abandoned their chronic stance of patriotism extraordinary sufficiently to permit eleven of the fourteen of them to admit merit in a "dubbed" American picture. Meanwhile the Parisian public, encouraged by the critics, have gone to the theatre to discover the first appearance there in talking pictures of Joan Crawford and Clark Gable, with a high degree of resultant satisfaction. There is passing amusement in the fact that the French comment finds the story a shade too strong, a bit brutal. That is hard to believe of Paris.

Good news of American product abroad is good news for the industry and the exhibitor at home. Ever since the dawn of the feature era the American theatre has enjoyed production supported by a world market. The diminution of that market has been, admittedly, a factor in bringing about some aspects of the production situation afflicting the box office of today.

The adjustment of production to a diminished world market, and some manful endeavors to recover for the American product a larger share of its old dominance, are in tedious progress in Hollywood now. This is a process which is considerably more important than conspicuous.

JUST REMEMBERING

IN all the excellent appreciation and acclaim with which the press is just now paying tribute to Mr. Tyrone Power at his passing, none has remembered that beside the glory of his career with Janauschek, Terry, Irving and the like, he also had a dash of picture adventure in the early days of the feature. The production was entitled "The Planter," independently produced and variously hawked about Broadway until it found release on the "Mutual Program" in 1916. Mr. Power, a part of the best tradition of earlier glory of the stage, unhappily was never quite to bring a share of it to the screen.

MISS GRETA GARBO, who just recently specialized in not being interviewed in New York, appears to enjoy excellent publicity advice—excellent in her own behalf and for the industry. She is getting attention in the press by her silence and elusiveness beyond any space she could hope to command with anything she might properly and capably say. Further, the motion picture in general and Hollywood in particular could do nicely just now with an extensive application of mystery. The public knows a great deal more than is necessary about most of the players. A lady known as Miss Maude Adams once upon a time did very well by being seen and heard on stage only.

SAVED BY THE SCREEN!

LO, a miracle appears! The press of this great America has discovered and recorded in the imperishable amber of publication the fact that the motion picture has at last taught "a great moral lesson." It was first reported in the Herald Tribune of New York, and subsequently in many papers across the nation, that one little George Simon, aged 10, ran away for a life of wild adventure and on the second day, after seeing "Are These Our Children," repented of his waywardness and went home. The theatre at which this occurred may well be marked by the industry with a bronze tablet, unveiled with proper ceremonies with an invocation by Canon Chase.

AND WHO CARES?

A TERRIFIC pother is going on in the columns of the London Times over the question of the authenticity of various dialects on stage and screen. The purists are still shouting. They have been shouting down the ages, making the last century's slang the accepted idiom of the next. The authorities of lauguage are always a century behind the people. Meanwhile the radio, the screen and the public will continue to make their language as they go along, and very well, too. The rules follow the practice, later.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

FALSELY SMART

MR. ROBERT E. SHERWOOD writing in McCALL'S MAGAZINE rises to remark in effect that the motion picture, having played for a while with the material of the stage, might well return to the motion picture industry. In the course of his article Mr. Sherwood says:

* * * The present sickly state of the motion picture industry is largely attributable to the fact that it has lost much of its former innocence. It has developed a sort of surface sophistication, the brittle Broadway kind of sophistication, that is essentially as false as was the sticky sentimentality of bygone days. Perhaps it is best expressed in that one, supposedly world-weary ejaculation, "Oh, yeah?", which the Broadwayite uses as a means of dismissing all the troublous problems of life.

The over-boiled wisdom of Times Square does not become the cinema which, for all its talk, remains what it was ten years ago when Harry Leon Wilson, in "Merton of the Movies," dubbed it the "Peter Pan of the arts," and condemned it justly to a state of eternal infancy. With or without sound, the movie has the divine power to appeal to the childish imagination which lurks in even the most aggressively adult, and when that power is ignored, or willfully perverted, the movie is attempting to be something which it emphatically is not

. . . So when Mary Pickford says that she wants to bring children back into the picture theatres, she is not referring solely to those of meager years. She is referring to the children that exist in all of us, the children that are thrilled by the sight of a fire engine and moved emotionally by the sound of a Viennese waltz.

ADULT OHIO

THE OHIO STATE JOURNAL of COLUMBUS asserts its impression that the state of Ohio is probably mature enough to get along without the parentalism of state censorship of motion pictures, saying:

Not only is it un-American for any governmental agency to pick the public's entertainment for it, but a state censorship is unnecessary. . . . No intelligent man or woman cares to be handed ready-made entertainment, or entertainment that has been scanned for naughtiness. Obscenity is difficult to define. And aside from all this there is the question of how much actual influence upon people's private lives moving pictures have. Our own guess is that they have little. . . .

It is time that movie censorship was removed from Ohio. This state is grown up and its citizens are not so feebleminded as not to be able to witness uncensored entertainment.

"BLUE BLAZES"

ERIC M. KNIGHT, writing in THE PUBLIC LEDGER of PHILADELPHIA, which he serves as motion picture critic, feels that Hollywood has perhaps been taking the critics too seriously. Mr. Knight takes off his whiskers and writes:

Hollywood should begin 1932 properly by telling everyone to go to blazes and then concentrate on giving us good jolts of strong dramatic fiction. If the films are good enough no one will yowl. They can make a story right now and put a movie critic in it as the villain and I won't yelp—as long as it's a good film.

INCREDIBILITY

THE TRIBUNE of TAMPA in FLORIDA does not feel so badly about "Five Star Final" as some of the several papers which have recently been professionally outraged about it. It says:

. . . "Five Star Final" is a remarkable piece of dramatic work, well adapted from stage to screen, strongly played by a capable cast. After all, how much business could the talkies do if they were not overdrawn? The public seems to like incredibility as an essential element of screen appeal.

SOUND DESTINY

THE DAILY GAZETTE of BERKELEY in CALIFORNIA is cheerful at least in the assumption that the art of the sound picture may be art and may be getting somewhere, eventually. It says:

Another movie, made with plenty of sound but a minimum of dialogue, is attracting full houses everywhere and causing critics to expound the theory that dialogue belongs to the stage, that pictures belong on the screen, and that sound accompaniment may be worked in quite successfully with a minimum of talking. Says one critic:

"When producers understand that pictures have appealed and always will appeal to that vast audience which demands relaxation in the film theatre, then we shall have the kind of pictures for which the screen was created —silent pictures. But today, that, of course, means pictures without dialogue but with sound and musical accompaniment."

There were a few timid souls, when the talkie first appeared, who maintained that the screen lost some of its freedom and greatly narrowed its range when it began to talk. Time appears to be justifying that viewpoint, although the last word about screen drama has not yet been said.

[As a strict statement of fact, the public never did see a picture in silence. The musical component of the presentation was always definitely a part of the show. The acquisition of sound-on-film has resulted in a probably temporary insistence on talk. Screen evolution is likely to show a general diminution in the verbal content of screen product.—THE EDITOR]

RATINGS

THE EAGLE of BROOKLYN presents Martin Dickstein's opinion that classified rating of pictures is being found of large service to the public. Mr. Dickstein says:

This idea of rating pictures according to their suitability for family audiences and children (see "The Cinema Circuit" in the daily issues of The Eagle) seems to have made a lot of new friends for the department, if you will permit it to say so. . . .

You see, there are, after all, some folks in our town who would rather see a good wholesome film like "The Champ" or "Sooky" than all the passionate sonatas like "Left Over Ladies" and "Men in Her Life" that have ever been made. . . .

MPTOA PLEA TO REDUCE SERVICE CHARGE IS BRINGING NEW FIGHT

Spokesman for Erpi Brands Move as "Destructive"; Electrics Announce They Will Refuse Further Cuts

A battle looms between the electrics and theatre owners who seek further reductions in charges for periodic servicing of sound equipment. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, headed by M. A. Lightman, will seek "a new deal" on these charges, which both RCA Photophone and Electrical Research Products say they will refuse.

If and when the MPTOA formally petitions Erpi for a reduction, and it is expected it will, the committee will be met by a verbal bombardment by Erpi officials, who will charge the association with being "destructive and not constructive," according to executives at Electrical Research.

President Lightman, now in New York from Memphis to formulate details for the association's forthcoming annual convention at Washington on March 14, said this week that owners of small theatres are unable to continue the "burden" of present servicing fees, and unless they are readjusted serious consequences are almost certain. He mentions 50 per cent as a justifiable reduction for small theatres, and indicated that servicing is to a large extent unnecessary, saying:

"We have passed the experimental stage, for which we paid handsome fees to the electrics, and now a readjustment should be made which would be more in keeping with a normal standard of operation."

"We would like to see in operation a constructive unit of exhibitors instead of an organization which proves itself destructive by trying to tear down that which any right thinking exhibitor feels to be necessary," said an Erpi official, who vehemently denounced the proposed demands.

Urges "Constructive Unit"

"Western Electric will abandon the equipment business entirely rather than discontinue servicing, and we do not intend to do either," said the spokesman for Electric, who added that the corporation does not contemplate any reduction now. They have been reduced to the lowest possible level in keeping with economic phases of operation, and further reduction would impair the standard established by "our" organization, he asserted. "Who are they that think they are in a position to determine whether or not a company should go out of business. They are most unfair to the great body of exhibitors," he said.

"It is impossible to grant a cut, and the MPTOA delegates will be so told," the Erpi spokesman said. "On five occasions Electrical Research has voluntarily reduced these charges. While it is true that projectionists are now better equipped to care for sound than previously, the policy of this company insists upon the maintenance of an established standard of quality which we know can only be continued by periodical visits to theatres by our own engineers who are familiar with the continuous laboratory development of sound machines. $750,000 was saved exhibitors last year by a reduction effected one year ago."

"Only Erpi, and not MPTOA officials, or executives of any other association can determine when conditions will have arrived permitting changes in charges for servicing," he continued. The executive pointed out that already more than 2,000 sound devices of various makes, mostly "bootleg," have been taken out of theatres throughout the world because of their rundown and ineffective condition brought about by noncompulsory servicing.

In answer to a statement made by President Lightman, the Erpi executive said: "Certainly, old users of sound pay more for their machines than do present purchasers, and this because of the laws of general business. We paid more for a Ford car 20 years ago than is charged at present. However, the scale of servicing remains equal for all, because all receive the benefit of the research and engineering development of the Bell laboratories, which developed 'noiseless recording,' and which will soon announce the biggest improvement in sound since sound started, much more important than 'noiseless' recording and reproduction."

Lightman remarked that "the MPTOA fully realizes the splendid job which the electrics have performed in bringing quality sound to the theatre. However, despite previous adjustments, the small exhibitor still is carrying too heavy a load and must be accorded additional relief.

"In the early days of sound, weekly inspections of equipment were essential. However, with our operators now skilled in the handling of the equipment, such servicing is not required so frequently. Servicing monthly or bi-monthly would be sufficient, as most operators now are thoroughly versed in taking care of equipment, and, in fact, because of their close association and familiarity with it, are best equipped for such servicing."

When the MPTOA meets at Washington in March, said Lightman, the matter of service charges will be brought to the floor, if a readjustment is not made in the meantime. He indicated that the delegates will be asked to act on the abolition of score charges, which still are collected consistently by "two or three companies." As already announced, the convention will vote on a change in corporate structure by which independent owners will receive a "stronger" voice in association affairs and in its operation.

Efforts will be made to induce theatrical unions to accept "a fair readjustment of wages."

Lightman called the unions "traitors to the cause" and charged "they are chiefly responsible for the slow recovery to normal business. They receive salaries which are all out of proportion to the new economic level and should be forced to accept a wage cut in accordance."

Operation Costs Up a Third

The advent of sound has increased operation costs of small town exhibitors by 30 per cent, said Lightman, and exhibitors are finding they cannot absorb the increased overhead, because receipts have not jumped accordingly. The service charge is one of the biggest obstacles and the score charge is another stumbling block, he said.

Invitations now are being sent out to unaffiliated units to come into the MPTOA under the new setup which will assure independents the operating control of the organization. Under the plan, each unit will elect an independent exhibitor to the board of directors. Affiliated circuits will have one director each. Thus there would be five affiliated directors on the board.

Regional groups in interlocking territorial divisions would unite on selection of the

Erpi About To Announce "Biggest Improvement in Reproducers Since Sound Started"; Union Cut Urged

A meeting of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in New York this week to formulate plans for the association's forthcoming annual convention at Washington on March 14 resulted in:

1. A tentative proposal demanding a reduction in sound service charges, which was characterized by Erpi officials as being a "destructive move," and the announcement from RCA and Erpi that they would refuse a cut.

2. Severe criticism was leveled at "exhibitor organizations" by a spokesman for Electrical Research, who said that the company would go out of business rather than discontinue servicing.

3. Erpi said that the company was on the eve of announcing "the biggest improvement in reproducers since sound started; more important than 'noiseless recording'."

4. Decision to seek complete abolition of score charges.

5. Completion of details pertaining to the final draft for a change in MPTOA corporate structure, which will give independents a "stronger" voice in its operation.

6. Announcement that an effort will be made to obtain a lower scale of union wages. President M. A. Lightman described unions as "traitors to the cause" and said "they are chiefly responsible for the slow recovery to normal business."

7. Prediction by Lightman that motion picture companies will engage in a wholesale divestment of theatre holdings, realizing, he said, that independent management is best.

FILM LEADERS MARSHAL FORCES FOR TAXATION FIGHT AT HEARINGS

Representatives of Exhibitors and Distributors Confer at Washington on Presenting Case Before the Committee

Dependence for a large part of the increased revenue to be derived from tax legislation is placed on admissions by the administration, the House ways and means committee was told Wednesday by Secretary Mellon at the opening of tax hearings.

Figures submitted by Mellon show that if a new admission tax had been made effective at the beginning of the year $56,000,000 additional revenue would have been secured to June 30, and it is figured $135,000,000 will be secured during the fiscal year beginning July 1, next.

The only other tax from which greater additional revenue will be secured is the income tax, Mellon showed.

Marshaling of the industry's opposition to the proposed federal theatre tax gathered momentum this week. Representatives of exhibitor and distributor organizations are conferring in Washington on presentation of the industry's case to the House ways and means committee, before which public hearings on the tax plan are scheduled for January 21 and 22.

J. J. Strickland, well known Texas exhibitor, and Ed Kuykendall, Mississippi exhibitor leader, are in Washington to present to legislators the views of southern and western theatre owners on a ticket tax. C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays office legal staff also conferred with legislators and exhibitor leaders in Washington late last week. It appears likely that Pettijohn will be selected to present the main arguments against further taxation of theatres during the 45 minutes which will be allotted motion picture repersentatives to state their case before the ways and means committee. Representative Collier (D., Miss.) is chairman of the committee, which is composed largely of southern Democrats.

Doubt 10 Cent Exemption Basis

Inevitability of some form of ticket tax being included in the federal tax program was conceded by most leaders in the industry. The only uncertainty appeared to concern what minimum admission scale will be designated as taxable. Some authorities have hopes that only tickets in excess of 75 cents will be taxed, while others are of the opinion that exemptions up to and including 50 cents are the maximum to be expected. There is widespread belief, however, that the 10-cent minimum as originally proposed by Andrew Mellon, secretary of the treasury, will not be approved by the ways and means committee. It was pointed out that it would not pay the Government the costs of collecting a tax of that kind, and that, in fact, no appreciable taxation return could be realized by the Government except on admissions well in excess of 50 cents. Obviously, it costs no more to collect $1 in taxation of this kind than it does to collect one penny. Consequently, the cost of collecting the preponderance of penny taxes which would be realized from many picture theatres would not compensate for the actual return to the government.

Industry to Fight Alone

Forty representatives of groups in the socalled legitimate theatre field met in New York during the week to map their fight against the threatened tax legislation. Leaders of a number of these groups have appealed to the picture industry to join with them in their anti-tax legislation campaign. So have leaders of professional baseball organizations.

Motion picture leaders, however, have declined to join with any of these groups, pointing out that their admission scales do not coincide in any way with those of legitimate theatres, and that to join with them would mean that the industry's influence would be utilized to obtain taxable scale reductions which would benefit the others without aiding motion picture theatre owners in any way. The industry's tax fight, it appears certain, will be waged alone.

Exhibitors are being warned not to participate in anti-tax demonstrations either through their theatres or in Washington unless such activities are sponsored or approved by some recognized organization within the industry.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association has forwarded a convention resolution to Ohio representatives at Washington protesting against imposition of any tax on the gross receipts of theatres.

ROOSEVELT OPPOSES TAX ON ADMISSIONS

Definite opposition to so-called "nuisance taxes" as an unfair burden upon the poor people was voiced publicly on Tuesday, when Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt specifically omitted motion picture admissions in announcing a program that would double the state taxes of New York.

Governor Roosevelt, in his annual budget message, said of "nuisance taxes":

"I have disregarded suggestions for these taxes. I believe they are poorly adapted to state use; that the cost of collection would be disproportionate to the revenue received; that we would have to levy a multitude of such taxes, each one small in its total, in order to make up the deficit.

"These so-called luxury taxes are taxes on the average individual. They are not based on ability to pay, and, therefore, bear relatively far more heavily upon the poor than upon the rich."

Motion Picture Interests Will Have Their "Day in Court" Jan. 21; Democrats Have Not Agreed on Taxation Program

Film Interest Hearing Jan. 21

By FRANCIS L. BURT

Washington—With hearings on tax legislation opened January 13 before the new House ways and means committee of which Representative Collier of Mississippi is chairman, the Democratic majority of the House is preparing for the writing of the new tax bill through which the Government is to meet the deficit in federal receipts.

The motion picture and other amusement industries will have their day in court January 21, when they will offer testimony on the proposal to reduce to 10 cents the present $3 exemption from the ticket tax.

As the hearings opened it was evident that the Democrats have agreed upon no program for taxation; in fact, it was announced several days ago that this was the case and that neither the ways and means committee nor the Democratic joint policy committee had considered the subject.

It's Up to the Democrats

All of the special taxes included in the Administration program—admissions, tobacco, automobiles, bank checks, etc.—will be bitterly opposed in the hearings, it was indicated. None of the witnesses scheduled to be heard is expected to admit that the particular interest he represents can be taxed without disorganization and distress.

On the other hand, if special taxes are imposed, there is no question but that they will react unfavorably upon the lines affected.

Thus the Democrats, who will be responsible to the people for any tax bill of their own which they might pass, have the choice of writing a new measure and accepting the criticism which might follow or putting through the Administration program and then laying upon the Republicans all responsibility for its effects. The former would be the bold course; the latter the best from a political standpoint.

Three admission tax measures have been introduced in the Illinois legislature. Two, providing for a 10 per cent levy on admissions, have been introduced in house and senate. A third, provided for a 5 per cent tax, has been referred to a house committee.

A federal bill, prohibiting sale of standing room in theatres, has been introduced in congress by Senator Carey of Wyoming.

RKO RADIO-PATHE HOME OFFICE AND SALES ROSTERS COMPLETED

Schnitzer Is President of Both Concerns and Depinet Vice-President in Charge of Distribution; Merging Finished

Reorganization of executive personnel of RKO Radio Pictures and of RKO Pathe this week reached the second stage of evolution, with the home office practically set, under Joseph I. Schnitzer, as president of Radio and RKO Pathe, and the sales line-up completed with the appointment of Ned E. Depinet as vice-president of both companies in charge of distribution. There now remains only a reorganization of studio forces, which will be accomplished soon, to establish a full executive setup for the picture subsidiaries of Radio-Keith-Orpheum.

Schnitzer, who until last week had been in charge of business affairs at the Coast studio, will make permanent headquarters in New York. Hiram Brown, in announcing the promotion of Depinet as sales chief, said that with the physical merging of exchanges and sales staffs completed in the field this week, no other changes are contemplated. The distribution cabinet comprises:

Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO Radio and RKO Pathe, in charge.

Charles Rosenzweig, vice-president and general sales manager (promoted from general sales manager for the East).

Cresson E. Smith, Western sales manager (formerly assistant to Depinet).

Jerome Safron, Eastern sales manager (formerly assistant to Rosenzweig).

Louis Kutinsky, general field representative and contact between home office and division and branch managers.

Southern Division Manager, W. E. Calloway (no change).

Pacific Coast Division Manager, Harry C. Cohen (no change).

Rocky Mt. Division and Far Midwest Division Manager, E. L. McAvoy (territory expanded).

For the present, there will be no Eastern and Central divisions; executive supervision of both will be handled by home office sales executives, including Depinet, Rosenzweig, Smith and Safron.

Michaelson to Pittsburgh

Harry Michaelson, who had been Eastern division manager, was this week moved to Pittsburgh as branch manager. Kutinsky will not have authority over division chiefs; he will act solely as special and field representative for General Sales Manager Rosenzweig.

Since the physical merging of RKO Radio and RKO Pathe properties in November, sales authority has been divided between Depinet, as general sales manager for the West, and Rosenzweig as Eastern general sales manager. Conferences held at the home office this week completed the reorganization and resulted in Depinet's promotion. The sales situation with regard to executive personnel now appears to be clarified. Establishment of the new cabinet, according to one RKO executive, "should immediately improve the general morale of a field staff which for several weeks has been laboring under uncertainty."

Studio Meeting Called

President Schnitzer already has arrived in Hollywood for a general meeting of all Coast personnel during which the studio executive status will be determined. President Hiram Brown of Radio-Keith-Orpheum will arrive in Hollywood on Monday to preside at the conference, which, according to an authority at the home office, will result in the official appointment of Lee Marcus as the home office representative at the studio. "He would act as a Mr. Brown on the lot," was the way one home office chief described Marcus' new post. When Marcus departed suddenly for Hollywood last week, after completing unification of exchanges and most of the home office departments, it was announced that he was going to Hollywood as liaison officer between New York and the Coast. His future post will be even more important, having to do with production costs and production and story matters.

A spokesman at the home office said, however, that David Selznick, present production chief, would not be interfered with in production. While he will discuss important studio affairs with Marcus, as Brown's representative, the executive believes that "Selznick will be given a free hand to see what he can do at the studio."

Depinet and Rosenzweig will leave for Hollywood on Sunday to sit in at the production conference.

William Le Baron at present is assisting Selznick in production, handling a group of Radio Pictures.

Rogers May Be Independent

Charles R. Rogers, who recently resigned as an executive of Selznick's staff, may produce independently for the corporation. Out Hollywood way, Rogers' new plans, which call for $100,000 negatives, are looked upon as an endeavor toward a new economic standard, promising to bring back the old days when $150,000 was top average cost except for important specials. Large studios, it is said, are now investing approximately $250,000 in negatives because they still are writing off the expense of sound recording apparatus. The reported Rogers deal, it is understood, will be discussed when Brown, Schnitzer, Marcus and Selznick get together on the Coast.

In the meantime, the theatre division executive status is unchanged. E. V. Richards, of Publix-Saenger, New Orleans, is supposed to be negotiating with RKO chiefs for an executive and advisory post in theatre operation.

Following the resignations of C. D. White, general studio manager, and Max Ree, art director of the RKO studios, David O. Selznick, executive vice-president in charge of the combined RKO-Radio and RKO-Pathe production forces, announced the temporary appointments of Val Paul to succeed White and Carroll Clark to succeed Ree. Paul was production manager and Clark was art director of the RKO-Pathe studio prior to the recent merger.

SCHNITZER IS CHIEF

In announcing the continuance of Joseph I. Schnitzer as chief executive of RKO Radio and of RKO Pathe, a statement from the home office this week said:

"J. I. Schnitzer, president of RKO Radio Pictures since its organization three years ago, will hereafter direct management of the company's affairs from the New York offices, it was announced Saturday.

"Mr. Schnitzer returned last week from Hollywood, where he had maintained headquarters since February of last year, at which time it was felt that production problems required a concentration of executive manpower at the studios."

In the formal statement, Hiram S. Brown, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, parent company of RKO-Radio pictures, said:

"Major production difficulties having been solved, Mr. J. I. Schnitzer, president of RKO Radio Pictures, has been recalled from the Hollywood studios and will hereafter direct affairs of the company from the home office in New York City.

"Mr. Schnitzer's record in itself should have been sufficient to set at rest persistent rumors that he was to leave the employ of the company. He was called to New York recently to discuss vital executive problems with myself and other officials of RKO, and at no time has his resignation been under consideration.

"The change will in no way impair Mr. Schnitzer's executive power, in relation either to production or distribution. He remains president of RKO Radio Pictures with full authority to direct the management of the organization."

Reorganizing of Studio Forces Underway With Meeting in Hollywood; Marcus Slated to Represent the Home Office

OFFICIAL BRITAIN MUST BECOME FILM CONSCIOUS, SAYS MOORING

Authorities' Embargo on Use of Authentic Natural Background For Fictional Films Is Blamed For Lagging in Competition

By WM. H. MOORING, London

What is the matter with British pictures? One might answer this heavily repeated query with an equally trite "Not so much as there used to be."

But that would be to ignore the unpleasant implications of the real question, which has usually been taken to mean, "What is the difference between the best American and the best British pictures, and why is there any difference at all?"

It is easy to talk of the fluidity of the motion picture of Hollywood; one could even carry the admission to an impertinent recognition that the ultimate in fluid invariably is "slop." It is equally simple to accept the plea that America has a show-sense superior to that of the Englishman, and that his pictures must therefore hit with greater frequency, the world public yearning to be entertained.

Monopoly on Entertaining Power

There is no country in the world which has so complete a monopoly of the subtle power to entertain, that it can afford to be without the literary and dramatic influences of any other.

It sometimes has been said that America owed her world force in motion pictures to the fact that she is international in character and in outlook. If that is true it presupposes that a still more vital truth is that every country and every nation has in its power to probe American psychology and—if it will—to make a direct appeal to the reason and the emotions of the vast cosmopolitan public of U. S. A.

Occasionally there comes a glimmer of recognition from the British motion picture side, that maybe what is the matter with British films is not so much that they are bad entertainment in its baldest sense, but that they are, as far as American and certain other foreign publics are concerned, set in an unfamiliar tempo; cast against unreal backgrounds; told, virtually speaking, in a pictorial language that is as incomprehensible to any but British audiences as gangster-Americanese would be to a convent of French nuns!

Where the Fault Has Rested

The fault has rested in the past with the British producer, and partly with others who were not so much exposed to the resultant ridicule.

The post-war period caught Britain brooding or boasting: in each mood unhealthily introspective; unnecessarily sensitive to her part in the newly ended struggle, and over-anxious to pay homage to the added glories of British traditions.

That frame of mind did not pay: the rest of the world still had to go on, but it took Britain a long time to cure herself of the habit, even if she can be said to have shaken herself free entirely of the complications.

Except where there is a definite American influence at work within the studio unit, producers engaged upon British motion pictures are strongly conscious of their responsibilities to British custom and "culture." They are less inclined than they should be, to tackle great sweeping national subjects because of their reverential awe for British traditions.

Government's Thumbs Down

Now and again when a producer more daring than his fellows has toyed with the idea of showing motion picture audiences of the world just what it looks like when London sees a royal wedding, or when a British chancellor of the exchequer stands in the House of Commons to announce that British incomes must be taxed up to 5/- in the £ to keep the star-spangled banner flying over the White House, he is told by the Government department whose permission he seeks that no such thing can be filmed as part of the telling of a fictional story. If he had been a newsreel man maybe, but not in a story film.

Basil Dean, whose attempts to please the American film goer have just taken the form of an arrangement with RKO under which he not only will work with 50-50 Anglo-American finance, but will also be assured the assistance of American stars and technicians, says the trouble is that British officialdom is not "picture conscious." That hits it.

Need Larger Canvases

Britain is rich in historical lore, but history is not necessarily entertainment. "Disraeli" presents a perfect example of history converted—perverted, if you will—into terms of entertainment. Dare any British producer have taken the liberties rightly exercised by the Warners in order to make a dull autobiography into a living picture? He might have been tempted, but he never would have won the blessing of British officialdom, and he would never have dared go on without it.

Yet how singularly little criticism emanated from British institutions when the picture came over from America. The supposition is that "these awful Americans can not be expected to show any respect, but no decent British company would take such liberties with historical fact." British audiences less concerned with conserving historical accuracy saw entertainment and were for it.

British producers have the richest of pigments, but they need larger canvases: when it becomes easy for them to take in freely, without let or hindrance, the wonderful sweeping panorama of life as they see it here, it will no longer be necessary for them to produce all their pictures on four walled sets, with thematic borrowings for waning Hollywood vogues. They then will not only make real motion pictures, but will provide American theatres with fare of a distinctive character, which by its very freshness and newness will start with worthy pretensions to entertain.

Aleograph Appeals From Erpi Victory

Arguments in a case in which the Aleograph Company of Delaware seeks damages which would run well over $50,000,000 from Electrical Research Products, Inc., for alleged infringement of patent rights were heard by the United States circuit court of appeals at New Orleans last week. The court took the case under advisement.

The case was appealed from the federal court in San Antonio, Texas, where the judge dismissed the suit of the Aleograph company but did not pass on claims of the defendant to the effect that patents claimed by the plaintiffs are voided by prior patents. Erpi has taken over the talking motion picture recording and reproducing system developed in the laboratories of Western Electric and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, it was pointed out in the suit. The defendant company in a cross-appeal, asked the higher court to rule that the patents claimed by the Aleograph concern were invalid.

Grainger, Back From Sales Trip, Definitely Optimistic

James R. Grainger, Fox vice-president in charge of distribution, returned to New York this week definitely optimistic over business indications, following a prolonged sales trip which included visits to all Fox major distribution centers.

"Business has shown definite increases in the past few weeks," Grainger said. "I am very optimistic over the future."

Grainger's trip included visits to Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Dallas and New Orleans.

3 Greenfield Coast Theatres Are Sold to Nasser Brothers

The Louis R. Greenfield theatres, San Francisco, were sold this week to Nasser Brothers for a reported purchase price of $750,000. The transaction involved the sale of the New Mission, New Fillmore and New American, and becomes effective February 1.

An additional $25,000 will be spent in remodelling and refurnishing the houses, it is reported. The Nassers now operate four San Francisco suburban houses and are affiliated with the T. & D. Junior circuit.

Milestone to Stay at United

Following months of conflicting reports about his future plans, Lewis Milestone, director and producer, has cast his lot with Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, and will make a number of pictures for that company's forthcoming program. This was announced this week by Schenck.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

NEW LEAD. Not stardom yet, perhaps, but a promotion. She's Nedra Norris, a new Universal beauty, and she made her debut as a feminine lead in "In the Bag," Slim Summerville production.

CONTRAST. Dark eyebrows and lashes—and the hair that started the epidemic of platinumania. Jean Harlow, of course. And a new feminine lead has she, in M-G-M's "The Beast of the City."

WELCOMING 1932. (Below) Film folk saluting the new year. In the foreground are George Frank, Mary McCall, Allen Davis, Peggy Shannon, Arthur Jacobson, Gloria Grey, James Cagney and Mrs. Cagney.

UNDERSTUDIES TO FATIMA. And we don't mean a cigarette. One would not suspect a murder story to have such goings-on. Or would one? At any rate, it's a lovely lively scene from Universal's "Murders in the Rue Morgue."

INCOGNITO. (Left) Hounded by newspaper reporters, Greta Garbo entered New York thus the other day, registering at a hotel as "Greta Berger." Accoutrements included woolen stockings and tortoise shell "specs."

HOME. (Below) No place like it, especially when it's a swell one like Alexander Kirkland's. And this view of the sittin' room finds the Fox player snugly in it, by the old fashioned fireplace.

IN A STUDIO CORNER. A bit wistful, is Adrienne Dore, for one whose talents promise so much, her latest role being a prominent part in Richard Barthelmess' new First National picture, "Alias the Doctor," which occasioned this study.

WHOOPEE IN THE ALPS. A more robust kind than the American variety. This snapshot from St. Moritz, Switzerland finds two super-celebrities of the films at wintertime play—and of course you recognize them: Douglas Fairbanks and Charles Chaplin.

SILHOUETTE. (Right) The shadow of one whose shadow could never be quite unimportant, eclipsed here, however, by Joan Marsh herself. The M-G-M featured player is now on a personal appearance tour.

GROUND FLYING. (Below) Aviation at its best for most of us, here demonstrated by Marie Dressler and Clarence Brown, who directed her in "Emma," latest M-G-M Dressler success.

BIG MAN FROM THE SOUTH. Coming from Alabama with promises to make good as one more juvenile with the latest thing in "It," whatever it is. He's Weldon Heyburn, who will be seen shortly in Fox productions.

PHOTOPHONE MOVING TO VICTOR'S PLANT

Consolidation Chiefly a Concentration of Engineering and Technical Work; Company Keeps Corporate Identity

Consolidation of RCA Photophone, Inc., with RCA Victor Company, officially announced this week by President David Sarnoff, of Radio Corporation, is chiefly a concentration of engineering and technical effort.

Within 90 days, the Photophone home office will be moved from New York to the Victor plant at Camden, New Jersey, to be followed immediately by removal of the engineering staff from East 24th Street, also to Camden, where it will be merged with Victor's technical division.

Radio officials had decided some time ago to distribute non-theatrical sound machines through the nationwide Victor sales division, which franchises dealers to handle RCA talking machines and radios. With the completion of laboratory work on a 16mm sound-on-film reproducer, to sell for less than $500, executives feel there is little need to operate from two separate distribution points.

Photophone machines for theatre use have been manufactured for more than a year at Camden by Victor, and that division will also make the new 16mm reproducers which are about to be marketed. Photophone will not lose its corporate identity, nor will its present executive setup be disturbed, at least for a while. The company's merchandising problem remains the same, which necessitates the continuance of a maintenance and servicing department to care for the 3,500 Photophone devices now installed in theatres throughout the world. A limited sales organization also will be continued in operation.

The unification, Mr. Sarnoff said, joins two closely associated lines of radio and electrical development. It will mean a closer association of sound motion picture recording and reproducing with the radio laboratory and should give impetus to the introduction of sound reproducing equipment for use in homes, schools and industrial organizations, as well as in theatres.

Both companies involved in the unification are wholly owned subsidiaries of Radio Corporation of America.

Claim Pictures of Value in Teaching

Talking motion pictures will never be wholly satisfactory as an aid in education until their treatment is decided in cooperation with the teachers themselves. This underlies the whole question of improvement in the film as a teaching aid, as contended in the report of a committee which conducted experiments in 15 Middlesex schools in England, during 1931.

More than 3,500 children were subjected to the tests, ranging in age from seven to 16 years. The films used in the experiments covered a wide range of subjects. Despite the fact that the pictures used were not definitely made for educational purposes, the teachers uniformly agreed that they aroused and maintained interest, developing originality and a greater measure of self-activity. It was indicated that the film aid was particularly valuable in the case of dull or backward children.

An Extended Rest Granted Sheehan

Telegraphic and long-distance telephone discussions late last week between New York and Los Angeles resulted on Saturday in granting a requested three-months' leave of absence to Winfield R. Sheehan, vice president in charge of production for Fox, whose complete recovery from a generally run-down condition is reported to have made advisable an additional leave.

In an official statement from the Fox home office on Monday, copies of letters and telegrams exchanged between President Edward R. Tinker and Edwin J. Loeb, Sheehan's attorney, and also a wire from Sheehan to Tinker were included to "make the situation entirely clear and do away with speculation in connection with" Sheehan's absence from the studio. The communications discussed the condition of Sheehan and the extended leave.

The statement pointed out that Sheehan had expected to return to the studio on January 4 after a two-weeks absence, but on January 2 his doctor telephoned President Tinker from California giving it as his opinion that Sheehan's condition was such that he should not attempt to return to his duties at that time.

In the meantime, Sheehan's absence from Movietone City will not interfere with Fox production activities, according to Tinker.

Sol Wurtzel arrived in New York on Wednesday for conferences with Edward R. Tinker, Fox president. It is understood that Wurtzel's visit is to discuss plans for studio operations during Sheehan's three months' leave of absence.

Fox Chiefs Silent on Report Fabian Will Handle Theatres

Fox executives refused to comment on reports in circulation in New York that Simon H. Fabian, former theatre circuit head, would be made vice-president and general manager of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., in accordance with the wishes of a bond holders' committee which seeks independent management for the properties, which are now being sublet.

Various Fox officials contacted said they know "nothing about such an appointment."

Hughes-Franklin Circuit Breakup Seen as Started

Settlement of the Hughes-Franklin theatre circuit muddle, following the recent retirement of Harold B. Franklin, seems well under way. Westland Theatres, Inc., has been organized by Charles Koerner, Joe Goldberg and Dave Bershon to take over about a dozen houses in Los Angeles and southern California. They are reported to have paid the Hughes interests $25,000 for an equity of $50,000 Hughes had in these houses, to have assumed obligations amounting to $70,000 more, and also agreed to equip and wire the new Leimert Park house in Los Angeles, which will cost about $40,000 more.

In addition to the houses which they take over, they will receive five per cent of the gross on the other remaining houses, including the Mann circuit of 10 in northern California, and the Oxnard, Watts and Pomona houses. Bershon will be president, with Koerner, who has been operating the circuit since Franklin quit, as vice president and general manager. Goldberg states he will not be active, but holds only a financial interest. Goldberg is working on production plans, he says.

R. & R. Theatres, headed by H. B. Robb, F. H. Rowley and W. G. Underwood, of Dallas, is resuming ownership and operation of the 45 theatres of the Robb & Rowley circuit in Texas and Oklahoma. The deal has been worked out in New York with Howard Hughes, it is understood.

Hughes is reported to be out a million on the entire venture.

New York Center Offices To Have Maxim Silencer, Filter

All offices in the Rockefeller midtown New York center will be so designed that a sound-proofing and air-filtering device recently perfected by Hiram Percy Maxim, inventor of the Maxim gun silencer, can be installed in them. The announcement comes from the Metropolitan Square Corporation, Rockefeller's holding company.

The device, known as the Maxim-Campbell Silencer and Air Filter, is manufactured by the Campbell Metal Window Corporation, division of American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corporation. Operated on principles somewhat similar to the gun apparatus, it prevents noise entering through ventilating spaces. At the same time, the air is filtered to remove 97 per cent of the dirt.

Loew To Tour South America

An airplane tour of MGM South American exchanges will be made by Arthur Loew during February. The itinerary includes stops in Brazil, the Argentine, Venezuela, Chile and Peru. At Lima, Loew will meet William Melinker, South American general manager for MGM. Loew will pilot the plane himself, being accompanied only by a mechanic.

EXPLODING A MYTH OF HOLLYWOOD

Socalled Life of Ease at the Studio Is One of Ten to Fifteen Hours of Work in All Branches

By LEO MEEHAN

Oh for the life of a studio employee! Oh? Ten to fifteen hours a day is a schedule common to all branches of the profession, says Leo Meehan, in refutation of the joyous pictures of ease and play as drawn by those irresponsibles who neither hue to the line nor worry as to whom the chips may fall upon in their zest to sell an article at all costs. And Mr. Meehan speaks from the experience of having written originals and scenarios, produced and directed pictures, and as a trained newspaper observer as well.

People engaged in motion picture production work as hard as those in any industry in America. In about seven out of ten cases they work longer hours than do those employed in any other line. More actual creative effort is required than in any other profession or business. More careful, scientific regulation of habits of eating, sleeping, exercise and recreation is required than in almost any field imaginable.

These are facts. They apply wholly or in major part to executives, actors, writers, directors, cameramen, set designers, costume experts, film cutters, laboratory workers, property men, carpenters, electricians, assistant directors, sound recorders, script clerks, secretaries, hair dressers, make-up artists, publicity men, company managers, location hunters, grips, scenario editors, bookkeepers and gatemen. Possibly I have omitted a few.

I speak as a trained newspaper observer who has watched the operations incident to the production of motion pictures for more than ten years right here in Southern California. I speak as one who has written originals and scenarios, produced and directed pictures, and who has equal opportunities today with anyone to observe the routine of every studio in Hollywood.

Mind you, I am not saying that certain individuals have not been overpaid. I am not arguing against the inefficiency of other individuals. I am not denying there has been, and will be wasted money. I am not denying that this business of making pictures has not its quota of crooks, mountebanks, fakers, human barnacles, sharpers, false alarms, confidence men and plain mugs. It has. It always will have, just the same as has the circus business, the show business, the carnival business or any other form of entertainment enterprise ever conceived. Being on a much greater scale, it is more difficult to control the percentage in this line. Speed of production, scale of expenditures, earning capacities of its principals, high tension creative effort, living in a country and climate primarily designed for loafing and luxury—all these and more tend to attract those who would live parasitically upon the efforts of others. Hollywood has been painted to the world as the last Golconda, and the gold rush has been on for years. It attracts the highest creative genius, the most level mediocrities and the lowest cheaters. Hollywood cannot help that.

Ten to fifteen hours a day are common with all branches of the profession. Take the actor, or actress, for example. At least an hour, and more often two to three hours, are required to make up and costume for work. Then there are eight to ten hours on the set, working under terrific heat and light on almost hermetically sealed sound stages. After this, at least another hour to remove make-up, costume, bathe and change to street clothes. Likely as not, the actor—particularly if he or she is an important character in the production—then goes to the studio projection room to see the "rushes" of the previous day's work. When not working on the set there are such things as publicity interviews, sittings for still photographs, fittings for costumes for the next production, benefit performances, previews, premieres and what-not.

For the director, the days are even busier. Not only has he the production in hand, but he must be planning ahead. He must assist with the cutting and assembling of the last picture preparatory to release. He must run out evenings to houses within a radius of 100 miles of Los Angeles while the partially cut picture is tried on preview audiences. He must sit in at story conferences, at budget conferences; he must go and inspect locations selected by the studio location department for outdoor scenes. He must advise with his assistants as to shooting schedules. He must interview many players to select those desirable for his cast. And each night after he gets home he must studiously go over the work for the next day. This in addition to rehearsals which precede actual shooting. Usually, his idea of a day's rest is to lie around in bathrobe and pajamas or a bathing suit on the beach, getting back his breath!

The associate producer, and the major production executive, has not only one but several productions "in the works" at the same time. From early morning to late at night he has story conferences, interviews, script to read, casts to approve, assembled portions of pictures to look at, audience and studio previews to attend, consultations with those in charge of costs and budgets. He has, if he is an executive in charge, voluminous correspondence by mail, wire and phone with New York. He has the hiring and firing to do, and the approval or disapproval of a hundred and one items.

Electricians, property men, grips, carpenters—they are all on the sets anywhere from 6 to 9 o'clock in the morning, if the set is to be "shot" that day, preparing for the assemblage of the company. Possibly they work far into the evening or night, if the company gets behind schedule. And schedules nowadays are not written with any possibility of getting ahead! Finishing at night, they may have to remain to "rig" another set preparatory to shooting next morning. Fortunately for these men, mostly unionized, they get overtime pay; but they earn it. The artists, however, seldom collect for overtime.

No outfits connected with production work harder or steadier than those in the camera and sound departments. Nor do any work at higher tension. Imagine the consternation if a cameraman makes a mistake, or a sound recorder. Next day, when the film is developed, it is blank, or faulty, and much or all of it must be reshot. This might readily involve an extra expenditure of five to ten thousand dollars. Mistakes are not tolerated from sound men and cinematographers. They must be right; and they must be on the job from early morning until the last dog is hung at night.

Writers, too, put in very full days. When a studio gets "a hunch" on a story, the executives usually want it written up immediately. Those who have sat down to compose a letter to Mother or Aunt Minnie know that writing under pressure and in haste doesn't come easy. Much less creative writing. I have known scenarists never to have a day off for months at a time.

Visitors to Hollywood who are invited to the homes or to parties of motion picture people often criticize them for "talking shop." That they talk mostly shop is doubtlessly true. But I believe the reason is they are never finished with their work. The banker, or bank clerk, who locks up his job at four or five in the afternoon, knows he can resume the routine next morning. So, possibly, does the merchant, the manufacturer, or even the professional man, excepting, of course, the physician, who is on call at all times. Here, where the creative competition is at high pressure, where tomorrow's job must be literally pulled out of the air if it is to be successful, the most natural thing in the world is for it to be on one's mind tonight.

Another reason: men like Ben Schulberg, Irving Thalberg, Louis B. Mayer, Jack Warner, Joseph I. Schnitzer, David Selznick, Winfield Sheehan, Charles Rogers, Harry Cohn, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Samuel Goldwyn—to mention only a few examples—are indefatigable workers. They are by choice, and because if they were not they soon would get hopelessly behind. Working long hours themselves, they must have their assistants and subordinates on call when wanted. Consequently, the same habits of long hours and high pressure are transmitted to the others in each organization.

Fan magazine and chatter writers may broadcast impressions of swell yachts, luxurious beach palaces, liveried motor cars and private airplanes. They exist, but only for a few. And in most cases even the few who have them have preciously few opportunities of enjoying them.

NEW ALLIED EXECUTIVES ANNOUNCED AT TESTIMONIAL DINNER TO AARON SAPERSTEIN, ILLINOIS LEADER

Five hundred attended the event at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, on January 5, which was in tribute to Mr. Saperstein for the victory achieved in the dispute with the operators' union over one-man operation of the projection room. The occasion also became the setting for announcement of appointment of W. A. Steffes as president of the national Allied organization, with Abram F. Myers chairman of the board and general counsel. H. M. Richey was tendered the new post of business manager. The board of directors met in Chicago the day of the Saperstein dinner.

Independents Get Equal Ranking in New MPTOA Plan

executive committee, which would be composed of four members representing the East, South, North and West. One member representing the affiliated circuits would be chosen on this committee.

Independents and affiliated members would have equal representation. A paid executive secretary would be retained. A finance committee would be created, upon which circuit representation would naturally be in the majority inasmuch as they contribute to the association the bulk of financial support. Circuits already have indicated a willingness to agree to the change which would give independents the upper hand in managing the MPTOA, because, said Lightman, "national distributors and circuits now realize that they cannot successfully operate without the aid of the independent."

In discussing current industry affairs, Lightman predicted that motion picture companies would engage in a more active campaign of divesting themselves of theatre holdings than ever before. "It is a happy movement and it is healthier for the industry," he said. Continuing, Lightman said that "local management of theatres is the solution of many industry problems."

Iowa and Nebraska Allied To Hear Brookhart on Bill

Senator Smith W. Brookhart, who according to Washington circles is preparing to reintroduce his bill to prohibit block booking, is expected to outline the provisions of the measure at the first joint convention of the Iowa and Nebraska Allied units at Omaha January 18, 19 and 20.

Others to address the sessions are Governor Bryan of Nebraska, Abram F. Myers, W. A. Steffes, H. M. Richey and Glenn A. Cross, another Michigan exhibitor leader.

Improved Paramount Business Is Reported

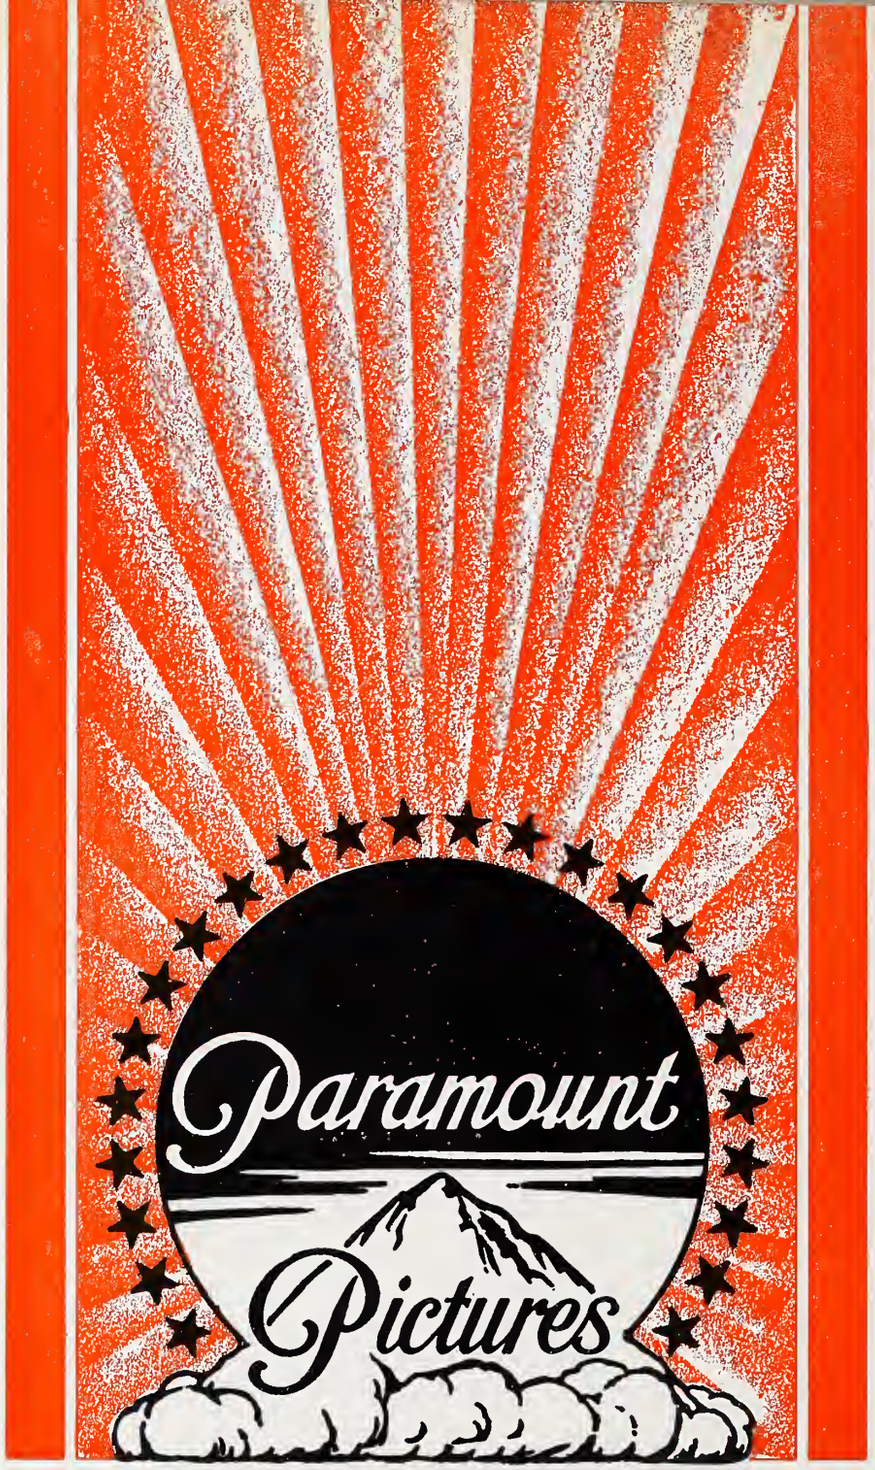
Business done by Paramount in the last two weeks is reported to have been running closer to that of a year ago than at any time since last May, grosses for November and December having been 15 per cent less than last year. Annual saving of $2,000,000 is estimated from economies recently placed in effect by the company.

21 Films Set for Production On Combined Radio-Pathe Lot

Twenty-one pictures are being filmed or in preparation at the Radio studios on the Coast, where are combined the Radio and RKO Pathe production forces as a result of the merging of the two. The number of productions may possibly be increased within a short time.

Capital MPTOA Meet Expected to Draw Great Crowd

National headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America anticipates a record attendance at the annual convention, scheduled for the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, March 14, 15, 16, in view of the Washington Bi-Centennial being celebrated at that time, and the admission tax proposed by Secretary Mellon.



A meeting of the convention arrangements committee was held in Washington this week. Present were: A. Julian Bryawlski, chairman; Frank C. Walker, vice president; M. E. Comerford and Ed Kuykendall, directors; M. J. O'Toole, secretary. Representatives of the local exhibitors also attended. A report from M. A. Lightman, president, was read.

The convention proceedings, including the convention banquet on March 15, highlight of the convention, will be fitted into the Bi-Centennial celebration, under the guidance of Congressman Sol Bloom, director of the celebration commission.

PRODUCERS AGREE TO BAR UNFAIR BIDDING IN STAR CONTRACT RAIDS

Establish Principle That Players Shall Not Be Interfered With Prior to Thirty Days Before Expiration of Written Pacts

Elimination of unfair, secret or fraudulent methods between companies in the matter of competitive bidding for the contract services of artists is the purpose of an agreement reached by the leading producers on the Coast. Protection is assured both the employer and the artist under the terms of the pact, and cases of dispute will be submitted promptly to arbitration.

Under the terms of the agreement, the principle is established that the duties and performances of employees engaged in production under written contract shall not be interfered with prior to 30 days before the expiration of such employment. Then, during the 30-day period prior to expiration of the contract, and for a period of six months following expiration, when any other producer negotiates with any such contract artists, the first employing producer must be notified as to the terms and best offer made or proposed to be made. Thereupon, the first employing producer, who may have invested considerable sums in the development and exploitation of the artist, would be given the opportunity to meet any bona fide offer to continue the services of the artist, providing, of course, the artist consented.

Aim to Prevent "Star Raids"

One of the underlying purposes of the pact is, of course, the prevention of "star raids" such as Hollywood has witnessed periodically in the past, when negotiations have been opened between other producers and artists long before the expiration of the artists' existing contracts with their employers. In some instances these negotiations have been opened by the artists, or their agents; in others, by rival producers. Under the new agreement, other producers would be prohibited from entering such negotiations under any circumstances except during the 30 days prior to expiration of the present contract; or, if during the six months immediately following its expiration, then with the knowledge of the first employer.

The measure is one of the first steps toward economy, efficiency and standardization of practices resulting from the recent Hollywood conference of executives. It is designed to recognize the property rights and investment risks of players, directors, writers and other artists by producers, and adequately to protect such rights and investments from unfair competition either by other producers or by artists themselves. A producer may put an artist of comparatively uncertain or unknown value under contract, proceed to develop his or her talents, and also expend substantial sums in exploiting him to the trade and public. If the artist is successful he is therefore naturally desirable to other producers. Yet, it is only fair that the producer who originally took the risks and made the investments should be protected when his experiment proves successful.

Under the old methods, the artist, his agent or his friends might conceive the notion that another producer would double or treble the salary paid by the first producer. Or, another producer, eager to build up his roster of talent, would be willing and ready to outbid all others to get the artist in question. The results sometimes have been a veritable orgy of bidding, secret conniving, playing of one offer against another, until the ultimate outcome has been payment of salaries which later have proved to be all out of proportion to the worth of the talent.

Possibly the most conspicuous examples of such disputes among artists and major companies recently were those between Paramount and Warner-First National over the shift of William Powell, Ruth Chatterton and Kay Francis from Paramount to First National, and the dispute between Columbia, Barbara Stanwyck and Warner over an alleged incompleted contract with Columbia by Miss Stanwyck, who had signed with First National. While these affairs were finally adjusted with more or less amity between all concerned, there were weeks when the air was blue with charges, counter-charges and just plain heat.

Having determined to settle down to business and face facts, producers have now taken this new step to provide peaceable and reasonable competition for the services of those artists, minor or major, who are in demand.

Fox West Coast Is Not For Sale, Tinker Reply to Rumor

Fox West Coast is not for sale. That is the answer of Edward R. Tinker, president, to two reports, one that the circuit is to be sold, the other that a change of operating management is contemplated.

From Hollywool came the report that Alexander Pantages says he is dickering to take over management of certain of the Fox West Coast houses.

Warner District Heads Hold A Sales Meeting in New York

General distribution problems were discussed at a roundtable meeting of district managers from six districts, at the Warner home office, January 7, 8, 9. The meeting was opened and presided over by E. L. Alperson, general sales manager.

Talks were made by H. M. Warner, Andy Smith, Eastern sales manager; Gradwell Sears, Western sales manager; S. Charles Einfeld, advertising and publicity director. In attendance were: N. H. Brower, West Coast; Fred Jacks, South; Carl Lesserman, Midwest; Ray Haines, Mideast; Robert Smeltzer, East; H. O. Paynter, Canada.

Goldstone Denies Reports of Production With C. R. Rogers

Phil Goldstone this week issued a denial to Motion Picture Herald of reports that he was negotiating a deal for independent production with Charles R. Rogers.

"The story has no foundation," said Goldstone. "I am not producing pictures by myself or with any one else. I am financing independent production. If Rogers makes arrangements with Radio for production and comes to me for financing I will arrange it. That's the extent of my association with any producer. Rogers has not even been in communication with me."

Plea To Cut Express Rate Spreads To Other Towns

Exhibitors in many sections are seeking reductions on express rates on film shipments, following victories achieved by theatre men in the Atlanta, Charlotte, Cincinnati, Louisville, New Orleans, St. Louis and Washington territories. J. W. Butner, Educational's manager at Atlanta, was largely instrumental in winning these decreases.

Allied leaders at Des Moines, Omaha, Denver and in Chicago are leading similar movements.

Romano to Coast

Alex Romano, sculptor, is leaving for Hollywood to join Metropolitan Studios as an art director for a period of three years.

CLEAN SHOW WINS, EXHIBITORS ADVISED

Sell Picture on Merits and Without Exaggeration or Suggestive Appeal, Indiana Leaders Advise Colleagues

The clean show, sold on its merits and without exaggeration, is the show that wins in the long run, exhibitors are advised in an appeal from the headquarters of Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, in Indianapolis. Exhibitors are urged to "avoid the suggestive appeal even if it should appear in the press books."

If the public is to rely upon the theatre's advertising, the management must not call a production "the greatest ever made when it is really just an ordinary picture," says the bulletin, called "Special Business Stimulator."

Summing up the cardinal principles of showmanship, as of particular importance at this time, the Indiana exhibitor leaders present 10 outstanding suggestions on operation and 10 on physical aspects of theatre management, as follows:

Theatre Operation

1. Watch your expenses—but don't cut money on the really important items of your theatre operation.

2. Don't be content merely to cut up a press book from the exchange to get your ad materials. Think about it; use part of their material and some copy that you write yourself and which you know will have a good reaction with your patrons.

3. Every picture is not the "Greatest" or the "Outstanding Hit of the Year." Vary your copy a little and tell your public that your ads are honest, that they can rely upon them. Avoid the suggestive appeal even if it should appear in the press books—for a clean show wins in the long run.

4. Keep accurate books so that you can tell where you are headed, so that you can tell where your money is being spent, so that you know and do not guess as to your daily overhead and other expenses. Know which producer's pictures have made you money and which have lost money in your theatre.

5. Buy product carefully, and pay a fair price, but no more on the basis of its demonstrated worth in your theatre.

6. See that all special clauses are written in your contracts, as no verbal understandings apply any more.

7. Don't overbuy—that will ruin you more quickly than any other method known in this industry. Buy the best of each company's product or buy a selective contract, reserving to yourself the right to cancel part of the pictures at your option without the payment of and rental for such rejected pictures.

8. Try to avoid the double feature evil. It seems fine for a while until your competitor begins bucking you with it and then you find that you are back to the same receipts as before except that you have educated the public in your situation to expecting too much for their money. Real showmen can find enough novel stunts to pull off all the time that they do not need double features.

9. Go after the kid business again. Try some stunts—this Mickey Mouse Club idea that is used extensively is a good one and there are dozens of other good ideas. Make the kids enjoy themselves—and don't lose sight of the fact that they like good clean western and action pictures (and this does not mean gangster stories or terribly spooky murder dramas by any means). Remember, if they go home and report a good show at your theatre, the parents are apt to come that night.

10. Be somebody in your town in its clubs, lodges and church work. Cooperate with your local groups. Things like this are a great help when legislative bodies are about to kick you out of business by excessive taxes.

Your Theatre

1. Is the front attractive? When did you paint it last?

2. Are posters and advertising neat?

3. Are your cashiers and doormen alert and pleasant?

4. How about the inside of your theatre? Is it neat and clean and safe? Is the ventilation good and does it all seem clean and worthwhile? Are the lights proper and the seats in good repair?

5. How about your ushers and staff? Are they pleasant with your patrons, without being so terribly formal and stiff that they make people feel uncomfortable? Do they know people by name and greet them?

6. How about when people are leaving after the show? Do you have some one to help them with their overcoats and wraps, some one to ask them if they enjoyed the show?

7. How about your projection? Get the old machines put in shape and kept in shape.

8. How about your sound? Is it good, bad or indifferent? There are plenty of spots in Indiana where bad sound has driven patrons away and is keeping them away.

9. How about your booth? A clean booth, kept clean may be the first step toward better projection and sound in your theatre.

10. Where do you spend your evenings? If you are out of sight of your patrons, that is the biggest mistake you can make.

Canadian Independents Plan Formation of an Allied Unit

The development of a national independent exhibitor group in Canada, to be known as the Allied Exhibitors of Canada, was proposed at a meeting last week in Toronto of 60 independent showmen representing 75 theatres.

Abram F. Myers, Allied board chairman, pledged the cooperation of Allied States, which was requested by the Canadian group. Sidney E. Samuelson, Allied vice-president, invited the group to attend the Allied convention in Detroit next month.

Robbins to Coast to Install New National Screen Plant

President Herman Robbins of National Screen Service, producers and distributors of trailers, is en route to Hollywood from New York to organize a miniature production department in order to be closer to the source of supply and to render more efficient and quicker service for early playdates. The new department will supplement production activities of New York headquarters.

Autobiography of Senator Davis to Be Made Into Film

After nine years, and following innumerable requests from large and small producers, Senator James J. Davis of Pennsylvania has finally consented to the adaptation for the talking screen of his decidedly successful autobiography, "The Iron Puddler—My Life in the Rolling Mills and What Came of It."

It was written in 1922, while Mr. Davis, now Senator, was Secretary of Labor in the cabinet of the late President Harding, which post he has held in the cabinets of three successive presidents. The book, containing an introduction by the late Joseph G. Cannon, beloved "old man" of the House of Representatives, is now in its tenth edition, with 150,000 copies already sold and 100,000 copies in printing to meet the present demand.

As yet no definite tieup with any particular company has been effected, all details of negotiation and production having been placed by the Senator in the hands of M. F. Leopold, supervising engineer of the Motion Picture Production Section of the Bureau of Mines at Washington. Senator Davis consented to appear personally in the film if it is deemed desirable.

According to Mr. Leopold, investigation preliminary to definite production negotiations, has indicated a decided sentiment in favor of such a production, with estimates of the number of people familiar with Senator Davis and his work running as high as 20,000,000, all a potential audience for the picture. The fraternal organization work which Mr. Davis has carried on for many years is looked upon, in itself, as insuring a tremendous audience for the picture.

Senator Davis was the founder of Mooseheart, industrial-educational center in Illinois, near Chicago, where children of members of the Moose fraternal order, ranging in age from one to 18, are prepared for life according to the educational system developed by Mr. Davis himself. Mr. Cannon, in his introduction, calls this system "probably the best ever devised to meet the needs of all humanity." The radio station located in Mooseheart has been heard regularly by many thousands.

The Senator has indicated that the story as written originally was dedicated to the American youth, and that the principal reason he has consented to the production of a screen adaptation is so that it may serve as an inspiration to the youth of the country, from a man who, as little immigrant Jimmy Davis, stepped from a ship into the burning depths of a rolling mill, from which he emerged 30 years later as Secretary of Labor in the cabinet of the president of the United States.

Subpoenas for Canada Trial

Subpoenas have been issued at Toronto for the opening of prosecution, before the winter assizes January 25, of firms and individuals as parties to the alleged Canadian film conspiracy combine. The Ontario government Thursday is supplying further particulars. Defense counsel will have ten days for examination.

Manager Directs Salinas Chamber

One of the highest honors a community can bestow upon one of its citizens has come to Ray Duddy, manager of the Fox California theatre at Salinas, Cal. He has just been elected president of the Salinas Chamber of Commerce in this, one of the busiest and best known cities of central California.

Duddy's record is all the more remarkable when it is known that he came here only three years ago, an absolute stranger. In fact, it is not so many years ago he was a floorman in one of the San Francisco Publix houses. Rising steadily and rapidly to assistant managerships, then managerial duties in two or three country town houses, he finally was sent to Salinas.

Through his keen interest in every community enterprise, and his constant willingness to give his theatre patrons complete satisfaction, he quickly became a popular figure. Now Salinas would find it difficult to get along without him. This is an example of how a theatre manager may relate himself to a community.

Ennis Has New Press Book Style For Columbia's "Forbidden"

Several innovations in press book design are contained in Columbia's sheet on "Forbidden," which will be forwarded to Columbia theatre accounts. The new book, executed under direction of Bert Ennis, chief of advertising-publicity at Columbia's home office, contains a striking and artistically presented cover display in which Barbara Stanwyck is featured, printed on a sepia coated stock.

Separate sections devoted to straight publicity material, scene cuts, advertisements, exploitation tie-ups, accessories, lobby cards and posters, each of which may be spotted instantly by means of a thumb-cut design.

Christie Signs Harry Barris

Al Christie, Educational comedy producer, has signed Harry Barris for a group of comedies. "Lady, Please," new comedy, has been completed. Albany's first runs are giving advertising space to Educational comedies. Claude Fleming, handling the Romantic Journey series, has returned from the West Indies, where he made a new subject.

Frost Succeeds Bender

Robert "Jack" Frost, for several seasons with Fox West Coast in Los Angeles, has been named Northwest division manager, with headquarters in Seattle. He succeeds Robert W. Bender, whose resignation is effective January 15. Bender becomes publisher of the Alaska Daily Empire at Juneau.

More Duties for Wilkie

Al Wilkie, Paramount publicity head at the Astoria studio, is also editor of "Paramount Sales News," house organ supplanting "The Show World."

Greenberger's Mother Dead

The mother of Sanford Greenberger, former Warner story editor and at present handling publicity for the Little Carnegie theatre, died last week in New York.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

The ax keeps falling at Radio, with no one knowing when or where it will fall next. Lou Ransom, assistant to C. D. White, was last to go. White and Max Ree, art director, went last week. So far as physical operations are concerned, the RKO-Pathe crew seems to have the best of it so far in the consolidation of the two studios. Meanwhile, three pictures are being rushed into production, with King Vidor's "Bird of Paradise" production on the starting line.

In spite of all the reorganization turmoil at Radio, a large time was had by all at the Studio Golf tournament Sunday, when about 75 employees competed at one of the local courses. There was much good natured kidding about who was next in line to go.

The proposal of John Arnold, president of the American Society of Cinematographers, that everyone in production getting more than $100 weekly donate his or her services to the employer for one picture this year, as a means of helping to cut expenses, seems to have died aborning. Artists and technicians said they were taking enough. Producers didn't like the idea of accepting a dole. However, the incident does illustrate the present spirit of eagerness on the part of all in production to do their bit.

Alexander Pantages admits he is negotiating with Fox West Coast on a possible deal whereby he would resume control of certain of his former houses. Out of his many legal difficulties, Pantages now seems anxious to get back into the show business.

Heard here and there:

Lionel Barrymore will do "The Claw" for MGM, with Charles Brabin directing.

Doug Fairbanks, Jr., will celebrate leap year by starting his next for First National, "Love as a Racket," on February 29. Doug Senior is preparing to hop off for Russia via China and Manchuria. He expects to take Vic Fleming as director, and possibly Frank Hawks, noted American flyer. Departure is tentatively set for February 1.

George O'Brien is now fire chief at Malibu, the motion picture beach colony. It's an important job, too, as there have been several serious fires there.

Tom Mix is back on the Universal lot, looking very fit. He expects to get into production within two or three weeks.

Betty Compson and Mitzi Green are the latest to sign for vaudeville tours, the former via Fanchon and Marco and the latter via RKO. Miss Compson has signed for 52 weeks, and will head an elaborate act.

Columbia is taking advantage of the shutdown to give the plant a complete overhauling. Some additional construction will be done, too.

Nance O'Neil headed the large cast of players appearing in Los Angeles' sunrise court to answer charges of appearing in a lewd production. It was a stage version of the old Greek comedy, "Lysistrata," currently playing at the Carthay Circle, former world premiere picture house. Meanwhile, attorneys for the producers obtained an injunction against police interference, and the box office is again clicking merrily.

Joan Bennett has returned to Fox after five months laid up with a broken hip, sustained while working in "She Wanted a Millionaire." Production was postponed until her recovery, and the picture will now be finished.

MGM executives announce they positively will make a screen version of Eugene O'Neill's dusk-to-dawn drama, "Strange Interlude." Norma Shearer will be starred, with Robert Z. Leonard directing.

Makeup tricks will be stretched to the limit in Radio's "March of a Nation." Richard Dix will make an age jump from 26 to 81, Irene Dunne from 20 to 61, Edna May Oliver from 30 to 86. Tests are being made now.

Creditors of Multicolor want to take over the accounts receivable in order to get some of their money. However, Howard Hughes lists himself as the principal creditor, and would gobble up most of the collections unless he can be induced to give preference to the outside creditors. Meanwhile, Frank Garbutt is making strenuous efforts to rehabilitate the business.

There is some talk of a group of independent producers taking over the old Pathe plant in Culver City, but it does not seem likely at this time.

$7 Per Share 1931 Net Seen For Eastman Kodak by Paper

Net profits of Eastman Kodak Company for the year just ended will amount to close to $7 per common share, preliminary estimates indicate, according to The Wall Street Journal. The company, however, has not yet received final figures from a number of foreign subsidiaries, including Australian and South American branches.

Net profit in 1930 was $20,353,788, equivalent to $8.84 per share on the 2,261,030 common shares outstanding. Interests familiar with the company's foreign affairs deny reports that Kodak's income has been affected by the drop in foreign exchanges, according to the Journal.

West-East Phone Talk Heard At Columbia Picture Preview

When Columbia's "Forbidden," starring Barbara Stanwyck, was shown to press representatives and exhibitors in Boston on Tuesday, a unique feature was presented with the cooperation of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Miss Stanwyck, from her home in Hollywood, addressed the group in Boston for five minutes. Then Joe Brandt, Columbia president, spoke from the home office in New York. To conclude the unusual "stunt," Brandt and Miss Stanwyck held a conversation, heard by the assembled audience in the Boston hotel.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN

by

RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE New Year has made a graceful entrance. Her financial status may be nothing to brag about, but she brings promise of a fine character performance. It looks at least as if we ought to have a good show.

And this is not entirely figurative, for January has announced a motion picture program of determined quality. December was a good month. It brought us any number of pictures worthy of special mention for intelligent audiences and for school children. But those selections have been brilliantly eclipsed by several current offerings which have given us a wide choice for the "School and Screen" service.

"Hell Divers"

Preeminent among these, and outstanding in the history of motion picture making, is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's tremendous air spectacle, "Hell Divers." The name is the only possible flaw in a production so magnificent as to leave one a little breathless at its ending. The title, harmless enough in itself, is not big enough for the stupendous screen achievement it represents. There is something more of heaven than of hell in this story of adventure in the clouds; in the comeraderie and loyalty of men working together; in the sweep and grandeur of the theme.

Made with the cooperation of the United States Navy and with a cast which includes Wallace Beery, Clark Gable, Conrad Nagel, Dorothy Jordan and Marjorie Rambeau, "Hell Divers" brings to the screen the efficient preparedness of a great nation in times of peace. It teaches an outstanding lesson in government, science, discipline and order, trained efficiency, ethics, and a quality of bravery that is heart-warming. Hundreds of airplanes set out in picturesque formation to take their part in government maneuvers—the actual count is 260 planes of various types, and the dirigibles, Los Angeles and Akron, and a sister blimp.

This is the background and the very warp and woof of an exciting and dramatic picture. There is a thread of story in the love and bitter misunderstanding of the aviator, Clark Gable, with his sweetheart, but very little of plot. I should say that its strong point is the minimized sentimental theme which has given way to the greatest story that the screen could encompass.

Lieutenant Commander Frank M. Weed, a young retired naval officer who was incapacitated during the war and has contributed many original stories to the screen during the past few years (the latest being "Hell Divers"), supervised installation of sound equipment on the Saratoga, accompanied Director George Hill and a studio unit from San Diego, California, to Panama City, and acted as technical adviser there.

Many scenes for "Hell Divers" were filmed on location in the Panama Canal zone where the heat and dazzling sunshine of tropic midday seemed to register themselves on the screen. The technicians tell us that the performing planes represent one of the latest improvements in naval practice warfare.

"Puss in Boots"

Far removed from the reality of aerial warfare and the majesty of fleets and navies, is the simple and charming little operetta for very young children, "Puss in Boots," which is a production of Picture Classics. There is need for a picture of this type on the programs of Junior Shows and the Juvenile Matinees which have increased in such number during the past year.

"Puss in Boots" is a dramatization of the familiar story, only in this instance it has been set to music especially written for the production by Nathaniel Shilkret. He has composed a delightfully tuneful score with catchy songs that are likely to be remembered.

This picture, with a children's cast, is a delightful bit of childhood imagery expressed on the screen in a new manner. Very small children will love it, and parents, teachers, club women and theatre men will find it an excellent program builder.

In a really delicious comedy-drama, in which Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell are cast again as romantic and appealing lovers, Fox Films presents an entirely satisfying heart interest story which is lifted to a greater dignity by the addition of a splendid symphonic musical score written for the piece by George Gershwin. The picture in itself is not a musical play but is richly improved by the introduction of musical numbers. Gershwin's "New York Rhapsody," which is a musical interpretation of the giant city of towers and turrets and shadowed streets, is an original composition which is probably one of the most interesting, if not the most important, of musical scores written for motion pictures. Its haunting melody, crashing discords, its city reverberations, are the under-current theme.

The life on the steamer in the steerage quarters offers an opportunity for some attractive bits of Russian singing and dancing. Life on the upper decks, from whence the hero comes, presents a gilded society. This picture has pathos and a strange appeal. With its excellent musical score it climbs easily into the list of high grade productions.

In "Sooky," Paramount has given us "Skippy's" sequel. In fact, this is also a Skippy picture, for Sooky becomes secondary to the convincing and dynamic Jackie Cooper. This is another story of Shanty Town, and of Skippy's big-hearted interest in his pal from the town's poor section. Sooky's mother can hardly make ends meet and certainly cannot afford the money for him to become a registered and uniformed member of the envied club of Boone Boys.

The incomparable acting of this group of child players, and the gifted artistry of Jackie Cooper, make this picture a childhood classic for adults rather than an entertainment picture for juveniles. Its climactic heart-wrenching sadness becomes almost too tearful for little children. We could wish that Paramount would cast these children in a play of happier accomplishment and gaiety. "Sooky" is a great picture. It has had its holiday premiere and will now find its way into the second-run houses where the greatest number of children will see it. It is a pleasure to recommend it to you.

A department that has for its definite aims:

1. To encourage children to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and money for the poorer kind.
2. To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education.
3. By winning support for high type pictures to offer an incentive to producers to make more of the same kind.

Hell Divers

M-G-M

Leading Players: Wallace Beery, Clark Gable, Conrad Nagel, Dorothy Jordan, Marjorie Rambeau.

This is an outstanding production, an epic of the air which will rank as one of the great pictures of the current year. Made with the cooperation of the United States Navy, and with an all-star cast, it brings to the screen the dramatic story of a great nation preparing for war in times of peace. Brilliant and daring stunt flying, remarkable aerial photography and a fine human interest story contribute to make "Hell Divers" the most brilliant of the current screen offerings. It is an extremely important picture for school children to see, and will of course be of particular interest to boys.

1. This picture was made with the full cooperation of the United States Naval Department. Why do you think the Government went to such lengths to cooperate in the making of a picture of this kind?
2. What are the maneuvers of a fleet?
3. How many airplane carriers are in the United States Navy?
4. Describe the Saratoga.
5. What peculiarity did you particularly notice about her superstructure?
6. What type of airplane was used largely in this picture?
7. What zeppelins were featured?
8. Describe the sham battle and the sinking of the ships.
9. Which seemed to you the more effective, the great guns of the warships or the bombs of the planes?
10. How were the bombs attached to the plane?
11. With what explosive were they filled?
12. Describe the swooping of the planes toward the circle target on the ground. (It is this stunt that the aviators call "hell diving.")
13. Describe the Panama Canal as it appears in the picture.
14. What did you particularly note about the photography in the zone?
15. Describe the landing of the lost plane.
16. What rescue preparations were made by the Saratoga?
17. Name ten interesting technical devices that you noted on the Saratoga.
18. Describe the shooting of the flares into the night fog.
19. Describe the return of the lost plane.
20. This picture has moments of great photographic beauty. What did you consider the most impressive sight in the picture?

Write a composition of 250 words "Our Government's Air Forces."

ADDRESSES FIVE ARTS CLUB

At a large meeting of the Five Arts Club at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Monday, January 11, Rita C. McGoldrick, editor of Motion Picture Herald's "School and Screen" service, talked on "The Youngest Art." Presented to the 300 attending by the president, Madame Kurt Gloeckner, Mrs. McGoldrick talked of the art of the motion picture, which Harvard University dignified by nominating it formally the Eighth Art. Through this medium, Mrs. McGoldrick said, all of the other arts found new expression and eventually would find their fullest development; that through the films grand opera and great music would find their way into the little towns and small communities.

Puss in Boots

Picture Classics, Inc.

Leading players: Junior Addario, "Wee" Willy Robyn, Oscar Ragland, Robert Skilling, Jr.

This charming version of the fairy story is presented in operetta form with an original and tuneful musical score written by Nathaniel Shilkret. It is one of the best of pictures for young children that has come to the screen, and offers excellent material for Junior Shows and all juvenile programs. While the picture in itself is not an educational feature it provides interesting subject matter for discussion with children and is a test in the training of their observation.

1. Tell the story of "Puss in Boots."
2. Who was his master?
3. Why was the Miller's boy sad?
4. In what kind of home did the Miller's boy live?
5. Why did he want to send Puss away from him?
6. What did Puss decide to do?
7. What present did he plan to take to the King?
8. How did he catch the funny rabbits?
9. Tell how he brought the rabbits to the King.
10. What did he do when he arrived at the Court of the King?
11. What were the children at the King's Court doing?
12. How did they receive "Puss in Boots"?
13. What story did he tell the King?
14. What answer did the King make to him?
15. What happened when the Miller's boy came before the King?
16. Tell the story of the King's banquet.
17. What did he give the children to eat? Did they like it?
18. What funny song did the children sing?
19. Can you remember one of the songs that the Miller's boy sang?
20. Describe the giant in his castle and what happened there.

Write a little story in your own words about "The Giant's Castle."

Delicious

Fox

Leading players: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell.

This picture is something more than the average Janet Gaynor-Charles Farrell Cinderella type of love story, for added to their romantic appeal there is some excellent music which was written specially for the picture by George Gershwin. "The New York Rhapsody" is the musical version of the pulse and beat of a great city. Its theme is a haunting undercurrent to the story. The incidental musical numbers and the folk dances, contributed by the Russian immigrants, and the amusing numbers presented in the Russian cafe, are of distinct interest. It is well for young people to be aware of music such as this in the picture that they see, and to be encouraged to understand and to appreciate symphonic scores. This is an ideal family audience picture.

1. Where did the picture derive its name?
2. Describe the steerage quarters of the great boat shown in the picture.
3. What three things did you notice about the Russian costumes?
4. What did you notice about the character of these people in their relationship to each other?
5. Describe Heather's dream.
6. Describe the feeling that came to you as the great boat pulls slowly up through the harbor of New York.
7. Did the camera succeed in giving you something of the impressiveness that this scene must have given to the immigrants?
8. Why was Heather ordered deported?
9. What is the government ruling in a case of this kind? (There are several important government rulings on immigration that are well worth knowing about.)
10. How did Heather finally get into the country?
11. What government action was taken on this method of entry?
12. Describe the Russian cafe.
13. Tell the story of the Russian pantomime performance.
14. What is a symphony?
15. Who is George Gershwin?
16. What else has he written and why is his music noteworthy?
17. Tell the story theme of "The New York Rhapsody."
18. Did the photography of the city, with its strange heights and angles, seem to illustrate this music?
19. What was the dramatic climax of this picture?
20. Did you like it as well or better than other plays in which Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell were starred?

Write a composition of 300 words on the "Symphony of a City." (High school assignment.)

Write a composition of 250 words on "Landing in America." (Eighth grade and junior high school assignment.)

SPEAKS BEFORE ECLECTIC GROUP

Rita C. McGoldrick, editor of the departments "School and Screen" and "The Junior Show," of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, was the guest of honor and principal speaker at the Eclectic Club luncheon at the Ritz-Carlton hotel in New York, January 6. Mrs. John W. Bacchus, president of the club, presided, and 250 club women attended. Mrs. Edward L. Delaney as toastmaster introduced Mrs. McGoldrick as the speaker of the day and told the members of the work that she has done for better pictures. Mrs. McGoldrick talked on the box office barometer and told the members something of the problem which the producers face in the presentation of high class pictures which too frequently fail to win support.

Sooky

Paramount

Leading players: Jackie Cooper, Bobbie Coogan, Jackie Searl.

"Sooky" is a companion story to "Skippy." In fact, it is simply a continuation of "Skippy" and ranks with it in equal importance. It is the story of a small boy's love for his pal, and of the tragedies of youth that are so often nearer to the surface than we realize. This picture is outstanding because of the superb acting of the children in the cast, notably Jackie Cooper, who is a ranking artist. Its climax of sorrow is almost too poignant for young children, who sob outright at the end. But it is a classic of childhood for adult audiences. "Sooky" is not in itself an educational feature, although there are a number of things in it that children should be required to notice in an intelligent and understanding way. It is excellent family audience entertainment.

1. Where did Sooky live?
2. Why was it given this name?
3. In what kind of home did Skippy live?
4. Describe Sooky's mother and Skippy's mother.
5. What great worry did Sooky's mother have?
6. Who were the Boone Boys?
7. How much did it cost to become a Boone Boy?
8. What did Skippy do with the money his father gave him for this purpose?
9. What story did he tell the grocer?
10. Who was Sidney?
11. Why did Skippy and Sooky hate him?
12. Why did Skippy march in Sidney's parade?
13. Why did the two boys run away?
14. Describe the swamp in which they hid.
15. What were the sounds you heard from the swamp that made this part of the picture seem very real?
16. What happened to Sooky's mother?
17. What did Skippy do about it?
18. What did Skippy's parents say?
19. Describe Skippy's bedroom.
20. What did you think was the funniest part of this picture; and what part the saddest?

Write a composition of 250 words on "What Happened to Sooky."

COOPERATING WITH SCHOOL AND SCREEN

Increasing evidence of the rapidity with which civic organizations are adopting SCHOOL AND SCREEN as a practicable aid in presenting the outstanding motion pictures to the young people as an educational factor of significance, is reflected in the following list of cooperating organizations. This listing of civic groups using Rita C. McGoldrick's material, as presented in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, is in addition to that published in the issue of September 26, 1931:

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts for the calendar week ending January 9, resulted in a further increase over the total established last week, when box office grosses registered a sudden spurt after the rather unsatisfactory returns recorded just prior to the Christmas holidays. The total was $2,724,906 from 185 theatres in 30 cities, which, compared with $2,702,683, also from 185 houses in 30 cities, for the previous calendar week ended January 2, indicated an increase of $22,223. Eight new high individual theatre grosses were established this week and four new low figures, which compares with eight new "highs" and two new "lows" recorded during the preceding seven-day period.

"'Arrowsmith' 1931 Film Triumph. Colman, Helen Hayes, Richard Bennett Score in 4-Star Film. . . Each scene as gripping and stimulating as the one before. . . Each and every sequence in the picture is eventful, fraught with interest, remarkably well portrayed . . . a full and powerful tale, forceful in the very simplicity of its telling. . . You'll see it and be so greatly impressed by it that you'll tell your friends. . . They'll find something even bigger, better and greater than they expected. A triumph for December, 1931."

—N. Y. Daily News

"'Arrowsmith' As Film Is Towering Drama. In every way an admirable effort adding measurably to the prestige of the cinema, this production towers a giant among dwarfs. To the current screen it stands somewhat in the same relation as a Eugene O'Neill drama to the season's theatre. The acting is magnificent. 'Arrowsmith' is a superior picture, far removed from the usual run of Hollywood product."

—N. Y. American

"By far the most exciting and interesting motion picture of the winter season . . . an absorbing drama that not only bursts with life but a searching portrayal of character as well . . . John Ford has done a beautiful job of direction and casting . . . Ronald Colman, better than he has ever been before, is splendid as Arrowsmith, and Helen Hayes gives a superb performance as his wife. The entire cast is well nigh perfect."

N. Y. World-Telegram

"A compact and forceful dramatization of the Sinclair Lewis novel. As played by Ronald Colman, Dr. Arrowsmith is human and sympathetic and tragic by turns; it is a polished performance. Vividly impressive. . . Rich in content and impressive in stature. . . Its many characters stand out in a clear definition. . . 'Arrowsmith' is unquestionably an achievement in the cinema."

—N. Y. Evening Post

"'Arrowsmith' is given dignified, sincere and understanding treatment. . . Samuel Goldwyn has spared little to make 'Arrowsmith' worthy of every praise. . . Smoothly told, well-directed film that should add further laurels to the directorial brow of John Ford. . . A milestone in the cinema's progress. . . It's a beautiful story, well told. You'll find Mr. Colman reaching new heights. . . You'll find 'Arrowsmith' one of the finest films ever to come to the screen. Don't miss 'Arrowsmith'."

—Morning Telegraph

"'Arrowsmith,' an imposing production, effective characterization. . . Is beautifully photographed. Colman's performance interesting—splendid support by Helen Hayes, Richard Bennett and others. . . Bennett gives his best screen contribution. . . Clever directional job."

—N. Y. Evening Graphic

"Unusually interesting. . . Mr. Colman's performance as Arrowsmith is the finest he has given . . . completely convincing. Helen Hayes is charming. The magic of her personality makes the conventional little character keenly interesting. . . Excellently handled. A dignified, unusual film, a credit to its star and to the movies."

ISE

Trade Papers Acclaim it the biggest money picture of the year

"Backed up by a cast of marvelous ability, Ronald Colman comes through with a grand performance. It should be one of the money-making pictures of the present season. It is sincere, absorbing entertainment in every sense of the word. . . United Artists can well be proud of this offering, and Sam Goldwyn deserves a vote of thanks for getting it onto the screen as such fine entertainment. We enjoyed every moment of it. So should you."

—Motion Picture Herald

"Samuel Goldwyn has plenty of reason to feel elated over this picture. . . It is a gripping, vitally dramatic story rich in acting performances and distinguished in all of its departments. Colman gives a finely paced and wholly meritorious performance, one that ranks easily with the best he has ever done. Miss Hayes demonstrates the value of her years of experience on the stage and her full right to the reputation of one of America's finest dramatic artists. . . 'Arrowsmith's' is not ordinary entertainment. It is out-and-out drama. . . 'Arrowsmith' by every right, deserves worlds of success."

—Motion Picture Daily

"'Arrowsmith' is a great picture. . . The dialog is human and astonishingly convincing. The direction of John Ford is outstanding. Ronald Colman, Helen Hayes and Richard Bennett form the highest hat cast of the season. . . Their work is inspiring, brilliant and breathlessly real. . . We predict that 'Arrowsmith' will make its mark as one of the really great pictures of the year."

—Film Daily

"One of the most distinguished efforts to come from the Hollywood studios. Told with a fine sense of pictorial values, acted with a compelling sincerity and developed in a manner that sustains interest through each absorbing episode. The picture is as powerful as the brilliant novel from which it was expertly adapted and directed. Ronald Colman and Helen Hayes offer superb performances in the leading roles. Producer Samuel Goldwyn surrounded his stars with a splendid supporting cast. You'll find 'Arrowsmith' an unusual and highly impressive production."

N. Y. Evening Journal

"Intelligent and forceful film . . . praiseworthy translation. John Ford was entrusted with the direction, and he has done his task with a good understanding of the author's writing. It is an impressively staged production... Both Mr. Colman and Miss Hayes are thorough and believable."

—N. Y. Times

"The production is handsomely and tastefully mounted. . . Dramatic and generally superior photoplay. Mr. Colman's characterization is both engaging and effective . . . dramatic and exciting. . . The film is courageously faithful to the original . . . honest and absorbing."

—N. Y. Herald Tribune

"A superior film. . . Freshness of film outline. Mr. Colman gives a very sincere performance. Helen Hayes is excellent as Leora. Richard Bennett is simply magnificent. Decidedly interesting."

N. Y. Sun

". . . another great accomplishment . . . produced by Samuel Goldwyn and probably his greatest achievement. It grips you with love, interest, comedy and pathos."

SEES OVERSELLING OF TELEVISION AT AN END

Get-Rich-Companies Eliminated by Low Pressure Period, Says Shortwave Corporation Official; Predicts Faster Progress

"Looking forward to television development in 1932, it would appear that the art will progress faster than last year due to the elimination of much super-power salesmanship in putting over this new art," says Hollis Baird, of Shortwave and Television Corporation, Boston.

Baird pointed out that "hastily organized companies, with many suspected of being stock-flotation schemes rather than serious organizations for real research work, were a detriment in 1931 but the present business low pressure period is at least eliminating some of these." He added:

"From stock promotional or other get-rich-quick television companies comes the stream of high-pressure overselling of television which has made the paths of the serious workers more difficult. Fortunately, by their very methods these concerns have educated the public as to what to look for in television due to many disappointments. The result is that a much more intelligent public is ready to pass on the work which will be done during 1932, a critical public but all the better once it is really sold on the idea that you are doing a good job.

Sees Better Light Sources

"To attempt to outline the procedure in research for the next twelve months is impossible since as the result of the first two months' work something may be uncovered which will entirely change the trend of research during the rest of the year. Better scanning systems, and more compact and better light sources are a certain result of the investigations to come. Cathode ray work will be continued in our laboratories.

"In the short wave field the present problem of fading and swinging signals is being investigated and we expect to have some very definite solutions which while not entirely eliminating the effects, will at least remove most of the trouble.

"Fortunately we have the facilities of the Shortwave Broadcasting Corporation, with their four valuable international broadcasting wave lengths, available to us for experimental work so that with firsthand knowledge of high power short wave transmission as well as reception we are in a unique position to develop the best in short wave receivers.

Predicts Better Receivers

"Our transmitting work is not only on short waves but on the television band as well as the new television voice wave lengths. These frequencies near the broadcast band give additional research information. Finally, going in the opposite direction we have a transmitter in operation in the ultra short wave spectrum which has already given us a fine start in the solution of the problems of ultra short wave transmission and reception.

"Thus with four transmitters and 10 wave lengths we are in a most unusual position to make a definite contribution to the short wave and television art during 1932. A year from now will therefore see better receivers for short waves and television and improved transmitting technique."

"No Truth" in Columbia Reports

Reports that a deal would be closed whereby Harry Cohn would purchase the holdings of his partners, Joe Brandt and Joe Cohn, in Columbia have "absolutely no truth," according to President Brandt, who said on Wednesday:

"The company remains as is, and so do the partners. Harry Cohn is in New York on an annual visit to secure new story material and for home office conferences with regards the new production schedule."

Brandt said that sales of Columbia Pictures are running $1,500,000 ahead, with 1,200 new accounts, over last year.

Heavy Bookings Reported by Tiffany on "X Marks the Spot"

Paramount Plans 27 Features Completed in Next 3 Months

Paramount plans a production schedule for the next three months which includes 19 features in preparation at present, four being edited and four now in work, making a total of 27. Six will be placed in work during this month.

Set for early release are "The Man I Killed," "Tomorrow and Tomorrow," "Shanghai Express" and "No One Man." Now in production are: "The Black Robe," "The Miracle Man," "Dancers in the Dark," "One Hour With You," Chevalier's latest.

Goldwyn Buys Play for 1932

The play, "Cynara," by H. M. Harwood and R. F. Gore-Brown, now playing in New York, has been purchased by Samuel Goldwyn as a vehicle for Ronald Colman. The film will be the first production on Goldwyn's 1932-33 schedule.

Expansion, Zoning Fight Basic Plans Of Allied States

Allied States Association, with Al Steffes, militant leader, as president and Abram F. Myers as chairman of the board and general counsel, will undertake during the year an active campaign directed toward the increase of association membership, giving Allied a real voice in new territories. The present membership is representative of 26 states.

It is also indicated that Allied will not relax for a moment in its sharp campaign designed to bring about a satisfactory solution of the vexing zoning and protection problem. On the contrary, the first major problem to be undertaken by the national exhibitor organization will be an "organized onslaught on the unfair protections being forced on independents in many spots." Meanwhile suits have been started in several states, according to H. M. Richey, business manager of the Michigan unit, who has not yet decided on the offer made him to become paid business manager of the national association. Sidney E. Samuelson, New Jersey exhibitor leader, has been elected vice president of Allied, and Herman Blum is the new treasurer.

The annual convention will be held in Detroit late in February or early in March, after which expansion plans will immediately be taken up. Taxation legislation, with continued efforts to secure proper amendments to the Copyright Bill, will be seriously considered. The board last week voted to have Allied do everything in its power to defeat the proposed amusement tax on independent theatres. Plans are being prepared for mailing to state leaders on a course of action. The board also decided that Myers, Steffes and Richey should attend the Iowa and Nebraska state convention on January 19 in Omaha.

Al Steffes will make his headquarters either in Chicago or New York, it is understood, but will remain in Minneapolis until the headquarters location is definitely decided. He states his program as new president will be a "progressive one," though he has not as yet formulated a definite statement of policy.

The problems facing the organization this year are called the most serious which have yet confronted it in its three years of existence. Members present last week in Chicago expressed a renewed optimism concerning the future of independent exhibitors, on the ground that the experience of the past two years has demonstrated the wisdom of independent, as against circuit operation.

H. M. Richey will not decide on acceptance of a national Allied post as general manager, until the annual Allied convention in Detroit in March, he told the board of directors of his Michigan unit. It is understood that he asked the directors for a five months' leave of absence to give Allied his assistance in increasing the national strength of Allied.

Herman A. Blum, newly elected treasurer of Allied, is understood planning to remain in Maryland.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"THIS RECKLESS AGE" may be recalled as the talker version of the original "The Goose Hangs High," which was made some years ago as a pretty darned good picture. Now, in its present form, we consider it even better and all in all it represents genuine entertainment from beginning to end. Those who look at pictures with super-critical eyes can find something here or there that may not exactly please them, but for the kind of picture that appeals to the masses, "This Reckless Age" will be accepted with real enthusiasm.

From the title it might be mistaken for "another one of those" pictures about the younger generation and thereby suffer at the box office as a consequence. It is far above that ranking of production and regardless of how strong or weak you may personally find the story, the cast just about makes it perfect for entertainment purposes. Therefore, a sensible campaign should back up your selling of this picture and by all means sell away from the idea that it's a preachment about the morals or action of the young folks or growing generation.

So, with intelligent merchandising, we assume that you can make that title pretty strong for your box office. The better you do that the more admissions you're going o sell, and the more people see it at its early showing, the more talk there will be about the grand show you have at your theatre.

In "audience value," for almost every conceivable type of house and community, this one will register as near a hundred per cent as you could hope for. And it is fine entertainment, marvelously acted and perfectly directed.

Names? In order of their importance in the film, Richard Bennett, Frances Starr, Frances Dee, "Buddy" Rogers, Charlie Ruggles, and Peggy Shannon. You can change that order to suit your patrons' tastes and play up the ones who get you the most dough. But we've given the names in the importance and honors of the film.

Regardless of what your particular situation may be, we heartily recommend this picture and predict far above normal business for the theatreman who sells it strong. It deserves that much support at any rate.

No good for the kids and possibly best spotted midweek in the smaller towns, but there's really nothing objectionable for Sundays if you feel inclined to play it on that day.

"STEPPING SISTERS" was built for loud and long laughs and succeeds in delivering them in abundance. At some spots in this picture your audience will let out some of the longest and loudest laughing that you've heard for a long time.

The story, as you may have learned by this time, is about three ex-burlesque chorus girls who have progressed quite a bit since they hung up their tights and retired (two of them) to society and a respectable life. At certain times the dialogue is rather rough, but only the touchy places will be offended.

The title certainly can be worked up to mean plenty at the box office providing you give them what this picture offers: a splendid campaign designed to provoke laughs even before they see the picture. The Roxy theatre here in New York used just that kind of appeal and must have created plenty of interest in the picture itself. The mere thought of three chorus girls graduated from the burlesque ranks offers enough side-splitting slants to start your newspaper campaign humming.

Once you get them into the house you will be able to judge how well they are enjoying themselves by the laughing and guffaws that should sweep the theatre. So don't worry about its "audience" strength. It has plenty and then some, the "then some" being some corking good musical numbers delivered during the charity benefit show.

We suggest that you make this picture the subject of a new slant in selling your shows. Inject mats, copy or both to create the thought that here is a hilarious picture packed with plenty of fun. Make the ads as funny as the picture. It's quite possible and will attract no end of comment from the newspaper readers. Every town has its ambitious women who are trying to climb the social ladder via benefits for the homeless cats or what have you. And every one in your town knows it, too. They'll get the drift of the plot right away with good selling stuff.

N. G. for kids or Sundays, but for midweek laugh purposes you ought to mop up with this screamingly funny picture. You have names, title and story to back you up.

"MICHAEL AND MARY." A British production. Having seen the play, I can safely say that it's just as interesting and as well done as the stage show. BUT . . . that's the rub, but . . . it's so thoroughly British in acting and dialogue that it will find the going rough in all but the larger cities. This is unfortunate, but nevertheless I believe it will be found to be the truth. And BUT number two: Herbert Marshall and Edna Best may mean the world to Piccadilly Circus, but they won't mean peanuts to Main Street. Which is likewise unfortunate, but again most likely to be found true.

The title and type of story suggest many fine sales angles, especially via a good newspaper advertising campaign. It IS one of the sweetest stories ever told and as a play was considered something of a success. To those who will play "Michael and Mary" I would suggest that you sell it for just what it is. Avoid deception or in any way trying to leave the impression that it is an American-made picture. Rather sell it as a picturization of the successful American stage production made by the two leading stars of Great Britain. Surround your campaign with the "sweet" slants and the love theme of the story.

In "audience value" it will measure up to many of the better Hollywood releases. We found it interesting and real entertainment all the way through despite the fact that we had seen the stage play and knew the whole story.

It will not interest children, but there is nothing to prevent its use for Sunday showings. In the right spot, backed up by the right kind of a selling campaign, "Michael and Mary" will be found good entertainment. The other spots will have to be guided by their better judgment and best ways for getting the thought across to the community.

"GIRL OF THE RIO." Picturization of the stage play, "The Dove," and featuring Dolores Del Rio and Leo Carillo.

A huge overdose of dialect is going to be the toughest obstacle to overcome in a picture that might have turned out much better with a lot less of it. Accustomed as we are to all sorts of dialect, good or bad, we had difficulty at times to make out what they were really trying to say. Since audiences don't pay to figure out riddles, they may not like it served so thick.

The title is just so-so "box office." While it can be built up a bit, your chief battle is to make them understand that this is not just "another western." Its connection with the stage play is also negligible unless your town knows something about that play. Otherwise it's entirely up to you.

"Audience value" is according to your community's likes and dislikes for this sort of entertainment. While it is fairly well done, the extreme use of the dialect halts the tempo just enough to make it a bit draggy.

Just sell it as strong as you can with your eye focused on the angles which carry the most appeal for your class of patronage and keep it away from the kids or Sundays.

"TONIGHT OR NEVER" is another successful stage play that has found its way to the screen, making number five in this week's reviews. While it is well done as compared to the stage show, it may not find the going as nice and profitable as it should. There are several reasons for saying this: First, few spots outside of the big key cities ever heard of the show; secondly, it deals with matters not generally known or understood in the smaller communities throughout the country.

The title has many angles that could be built up to make it a pretty good draw at the b. o. But avoid the questionable slants; they are not needed for clean show-selling and might hurt in the long run. Gloria Swanson's surrounding cast, while not money-names, are so well cast that they can be played up for slightly different advertising purposes. The butler, Robert Greig, I believe his name is, handled his part to perfection and certainly deserves a boost, especially if you are going to play him in "Stepping Sisters" (Fox), where he plays a similar part. You can get the full cast and credits from the HERALD'S informative review on this picture.

In "audience value" the picture is quite satisfactory. In other words, it's up to you to get them into the house. Smaller towns may not find it exactly the type of picture they go for big, but they won't have any kicks to register after they've seen it. Surrounded with a carefully selected group of good shorts it ought to make a good evening's entertainment.

It means nothing for the kids and is best played away from Sundays. The amount of business you do on "Tonight or Never" will depend to a large extent on the way you sell it to your community. Backed up with a campaign that will appeal to your particular type of patronage, and sold along the safest lines, it may come through with at least average business. If it falls below that mark then you may have been lax in your handling of a picture with this type of delicate theme.

We know how to make Box-Office Pictures and they proved in the picture that they deserved it.

John has the fat role, but Lionel makes him work like the dickens to keep from being submerged. Karen Morley holds up her end of the trio in a pretty able fashion seeing that she is just a youngster playing against two seasoned old troupers. It wouldn't surprise me if Irving Thalberg decides to change the ending, which is a little bit of an anti-climax, but I wasn't bored a minute during the run of the film.

The laughs are plenty, the thrills are many and the love scenes are smartly sophisticated with that old touch that only John Barrymore knows how to put into them. Always afraid of my own reactions to pictures because of my familiarity with Hollywood, I took along a couple of fans just in town a few weeks from Wyoming. Did they go for "Arsene Lupin?" It was the treat of their lives, so that means others out in the great vast regions will like it, too. All in all it seems as if MGM has another bell ringer. Wise ones assert they can't turn out another but they do and fool everybody.

John Miljan and Tully Marshall gave the same finished performance they always do. Those two never do anything else but click and they don't always get the credit they should.

Prestige

(RKO Pathe)

Drama

It seems unfortunate that the old Pathe Rooster must, as one of his dying gasps, crow over such an undistinguished production as "Prestige." In spite of the presence of Ann Harding, Adolphe Menjou, Melvyn Douglas, Guy Bates Post and Ian MacLaren—troopers all—in the cast, in spite of competent direction by Tay Garnett, the whole thing is very ordinary and, at times, very depressing.

Story is to blame, of course. Several "cooks" stirred the broth. Harry Hervey wrote the original. Adaptation is credited to Tay Garnett and Rollo Lloyd, the screenplay to Francis Edwards Faragoh. This makes it difficult to discover who was mostly to blame. The adaptation may have been as well done as it was possible to do with the original material, or vice versa. Faragoh may have done the best he could with the screenplay, considering what he had to work with. Then one can wonder why Charlie Rogers or his associate, Harry Joe Brown, didn't tear up the script (and possibly the original story) and start all over from scratch! At least, they were the bosses.

Menjou and Melvyn Douglas are rivals for Ann Harding. Both are officers in the French army. Douglas is sent to Indo-China, where men stay men if they lay off booze and take plenty of aspirin. Otherwise, they become neurotic. Douglas does, with a musical Scotch bottle which never seems to become empty. His drinking becomes tiresome, even to drinkers. Ann follows him there, to find him a beast, almost. But they marry, Menjou shows up presently, to do the old "faithless friend" act. One of the black boys settles that with a wicked knife when Menjou and Harding decide to flee to dear Paris. There is some sort of regeneration, Douglas sobers up—but Ann stills looks pretty sore at the final fadeout.

Garnett has provided the production with some splendid pictorial effects, worthy of much better story material. There are spots, such as the guillotine episode and numerous shots of tortured Oriental prisoners, which seem unnecessarily realistic and brutal. There probably will be an unfortunate tendency to that sort of thing, what with the present success of shock pictures. All members of the cast, with the exception of the star, seem to have worked energetically to put it across for Garnett, particularly the Orientals.

Ann Harding's popularity may carry it. Certainly the story will not.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Directed by Tay Garnett. Story by Harry Hervey. Adaptation, Tay Garnett and Rollo Lloyd. Screen play, Francis Edwards Faragoh. Photographed by Lucien Andriot. Art director, Caroll Clark. Release date, January 22, 1932.

A Gentleman of Paris

(Gaumont)

Emotional Drama

This one scarcely lives up to recent Gaumont achievements in point of story or treatment, but what it lacks in conviction it makes up in suspense values. Also it is well set, with some fine authentic exteriors of the French capital in which the action is laid.

Judge Lefevre of the Supreme Court in Paris (Arthur Wontner) has cast off a mistress (Phyliss Konstanim) and taken on with a new one, Paulette Gerard (Vanda Greville), wife of a junior counsel, Gaston Gerard (Hugh Williams). The discarded girl gravitates to a low cafe in Montmartre, Paris, where she is pursued by her employer, a man with an eye for sex appeal. This man has a jealous wife, who finding him one day in the girl's bedroom, shoots him and then accuses the girl of the crime. She doesn't know there were witnesses.

Later the girl is charged with murder before her former lover, Judge Lefevre, and this climax makes one of the finest court scenes ever screened. Jury return with a verdict of guilty, and the Judge is about to sentence her, when he suddenly rises in court, confesses that he, and a lady friend witnessed the crime from a "studio" overlooking the cafe. He hadn't spoken before because of that lady's good name, but now—let them arrest the dead man's widow, and pardon his own departure from the judicial bench. He goes back to the country where as a young man he studied art. The girl goes back to the country too. The dramatic ingredients are easily recognizable, and court scenes are not new. But in this picture the best is made of a very fine situation, by the actor Wontner, seen already in the United States as Sherlock Holmes in "The Fatal Hour." Other players are not outstanding, though Vanda Greville (star in Renee Clair's "Le Million") could have done something if she'd been given a part. Sinclair Hill directed and knowing Paris as a native captured the atmosphere. Whether this is ever seen in the United States or not, it can give points to many similar court stories sent to Britain from Hollywood.

(Paramount)

Drama

Charles "Buddy" Rogers, in his last film effort for Paramount before going into radio work, appears in a drama of youth vs. age, of parents who did much for their children, began to think they had done too much and finally concluded that perhaps they should have done even more, since the children come through to aid their parents at the end.

A large audience at the New York Paramount gave every evidence of having enjoyed the film, of having been fairly well entertained. They laughed at Charlie Ruggles, who takes all the laughs in his own peculiar way; and they gave full attention to the narrative, which, though perhaps not new, nevertheless seemed human, which perhaps was partly by reason of the acknowledged good performances of the cast, both leading players and support.

Richard Bennett is his usual sincerely able self as the father, a mine appraiser whose largest thought is for his children, played by Rogers and Frances Dee. Frances Starr is the mother, Peggy Shanon the girl to whom Rogers is engaged and Charlie Ruggles is Miss Dee's godfather, bachelor, whose ideas turn young when Miss Dee looks at him. David Landau, Mary Carlisle, Maude Eburne also were well received.

The parents, able through stinting to send their children to college, are hurt and surprised when Miss Dee runs off to dinner with her pals instead of staying to Christmas dinner and Rogers brings home his fiancee, about whom the parents have had no warning. The two suddenly decide to marry and leave a New Year's Eve party for New Haven. Miss Dee overhears the threat by an unknown man to imprison Bennett as the result of a mine report which had led the man to buy the property involved for $10,000. Landau, Bennett's employer, had forged a false report, it is learned.

Miss Dee drives after the train and brings back the couple before they reach New Haven. A ruse causes Landau to buy back the mine for a large figure, clearing Bennett, while Miss Dee, marrying Ruggles, is relieved to discover that he will have no opportunity of believing she did it to get the money for her father. We are assured that she did not.

The Man I Killed

(Paramount)

War Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

"The Man I Killed," Ernst Lubitsch's latest for Paramount, is new and daring and the movies always fear anything like that. It's about the war and the war is another Hollywood phobia just now. But, previewed on the next to last day of the year, a year in which I've looked at perhaps a hundred pictures, it seemed to me to be the most magnificent of them all. A bold and subtle document approaching the aftermath of war from a novel angle and invested with homely beauty and sincerity, the ripened fruit of the genius of the screen's first director. A film that will give the censors a day of rest and the Paramount money-counters overtime work of which they've had no excess.

Lionel Barrymore picks the picture up and walks away with it.

Phillips Holmes isn't far behind him; and whereas in the former co-effort of Holmes and Nancy Carroll, Mrs. Bolton Mallory took the spot and kept it, in "The Man I Killed" she has a throaty voice and that's all. Seriously miscast. The Sidney girl could have done wonders with the part.

Carmen

(British International)

Screened Opera

British International Pictures has produced at its Elstree studios a motion picture conception of the famous opera "Carmen," which B.I.P. America, Inc., plans to distribute generally in this country.

Fortunately, there is a good bit of action instilled into the screen adaptation, and on the other hand, not too much vocal performance. The leading players, quite unknown to American film audiences, are nevertheless possessed of excellent voices, which they use to good advantage. Marguerite Namara offers Carmen, dancing, singing senorita of many loves; Tom Burke plays Jose, who loses his military rank for love of Carmen, is hunted as a murderer, again because of her, and finally stabs her to death when she throws him over for the love of the moment, the toreador, played by Lance Fairfax. The burden of the vocal effort, which intermittently, accompanied by chorus, takes the spotlight between the scenes of action, falls upon these three. That they give a good account of themselves in that regard was unquestioned.

Lester Mathews, Dennis Wyndham and D. Hay Petrie handle the chief supporting roles. Advantage is taken of the opportunity to picture some of the magnificent scenery of the Spanish mountain country, when Carmen and Jose flee after Jose kills his superior officer in a duel over the willful, treacherous Carmen. Interesting is the pictured bullfight in which the toreador triumphs in the grand manner, while Jose stabs Carmen outside the arena and is led away by the police to conclude the film.

A symphony orchestra, rendering some of the most famous of the selections from the opera, accompanies the filmed narrative, while those arias known the world over since the opera was written, are used for the vocal sequences by the leading players. Use is made of those scenes from the original which, highlighting the story as it was written, at the same time offer the best opportunity for the motion picture adaptation, where are required types of presentation peculiar to screened dramatic rendition.

Produced by British International Pictures. Distributed in United States by B.I.P. America. Directed by Cecil Lewis. Adapted from the original by Cecil Lewis. Scenario editor, Walter Mycroft. Cameramen, James Wilson and Philip Grandrod. Music by Georges Bizet. Film editor, Leslie Norman. Music arranged by Malcolm Sargent.

The Local Bad Man

(Allied Pictures)

Featured by two train robberies, much plain and fancy riding, shooting, a cattle stampede through the streets of a town, a barn dance and plenty of other excitement, Allied's newest Hoot Gibson picture is from a Peter B. Kyne story. M. H. Hoffman, Jr., produced it, with Otto Brower directing from a screen play by Phil White. Harry Neuman and Tom Galligan did some particularly good photographic work.

Hoot is really a fine fellow, a ranch owner, but he has quarreled with the railroad over a claim for cattle killed. The local bankers, having defaulted with some of the depositors' funds, are desperate for cash. They conceive the idea of sending cash to the El Paso bank by railroad, having the train held up en route, so that they may get their cash back and at the same time recover the cash shipped. Casting about for some one upon whom to cast suspicion of the train robbery, they recall Hoot's hostility toward the railroad.

Needless to say, the plot slips up, but not until there are many thrilling chases and fights, a pretty romance between Hoot and Sally Blane, as the station agent, starts, and Hoot is in danger of life imprisonment as a train robber.

Hoot is ably assisted by Miss Blane, Hooper Atchley, Edward Hearn, Edward Peil, "Skeeter Bill" Robbins, Jack Clifford and Milt Brown. Sidney Algier acted as production manager.

What with so many productions to see from the big major studios, I found it something like a vacation to see a simple, wholesome western story, done with a lot of nature's scenery instead of an art director's. I do not wonder there is a demand for westerns.

Produced by M. H. Hoffman, Jr. Distributed by Allied Pictures. Directed by Otto Brower. Screen play by Phil White. From a story by Peter B. Kyne. Cameramen, Harry Neuman, Tom Galligan.

Drama

Drama though this may be, there are perhaps more chuckles and almost unintended comedy in it, than there is drama. The reason: James Cagney, Warner's fair-haired boy of the moment, and well may he be termed that. The unusually large crowd at the New York Strand on the opening day obviously enjoyed themselves immensely. They chuckled, laughed outright and sat tight during the dramatic sequences, by turns throughout the picture.

Unquestionably there is no young man on the screen today who has the faculty of portraying sincerely, of living, the part of the typical New York young man of a certain part of the city. Whether or not Cagney was born and brought up in New York does not particularly matter. Suffice it to say that he has the typical young, hair-trigger tempered fighting lad of the big town's streets down to the last innuendo. There is something different in his rapid speech and more rapid actions, something which takes an audience by storm, perhaps because it is so refreshing. Perhaps thus can the enjoyment of the Strand audience in his performance be explained.

Here Cagney is a taxi driver, leading the forces of the independents against the strong-arm tactics of the chain taximen. Guy Kibbee, old cabman, father of Loretta Young, who handles the romantic interest with Cagney in effective style, it was thought, is sentenced to prison after killing a truckman who had deliberately wrecked his cab. He dies there and peace comes in the taxi war. Miss Young had refused to fight, and Cagney, angered, leaves her, but only temporarily. They fall in love. Cagney's love-making was a joy to the audience. She finally consents to marry him, though fearing his hasty temper will get him into serious trouble.

At a night club are Cagney, Miss Young, Ray Cooke as Cagney's brother; George E. Stone as Cagney's pal and Leila Bennett, amusing as the waitress chum of Miss Young. David Landau as the leader of the chain drivers, starts a fight and Cooke is knifed and killed. Trying to prevent her husband from becoming a murderer by seeking revenge on Landau Miss Young tries to aid the latter's escape. In a climax sequence, Cagney is about to kill Landau, hiding in a closet of his apartment, when the police enter. Seeking to escape, Landau falls from a window and is killed.

Cagney's wife is leaving him after their disagreement, when Cagney enters in his own particular style, which pleased the audience so much, and the reconciliation follows.

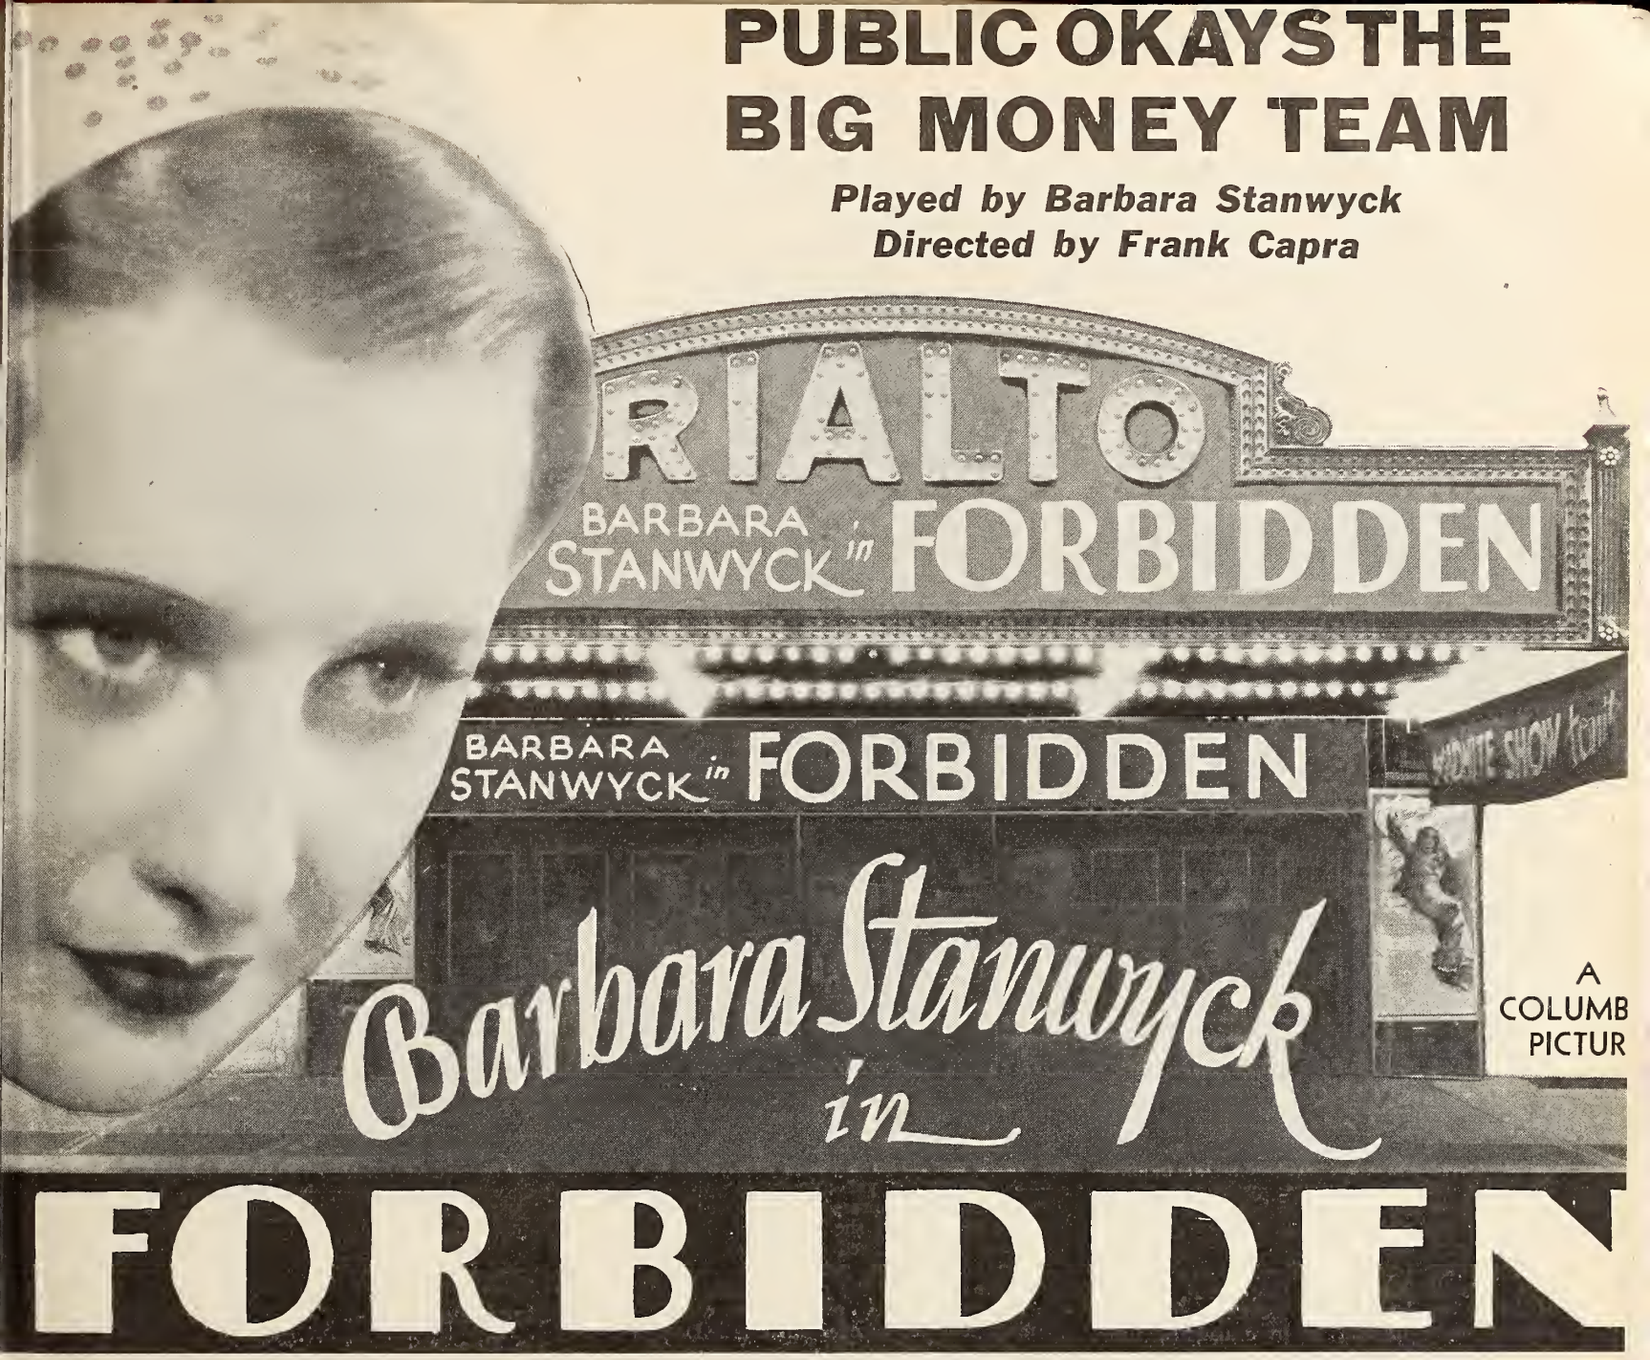
Drama

Drama, with a strong note of tragedy, and ending on a high pitch of hopelessness, is this Barbara Stanwyck vehicle, directed by Frank Capra, young and successful cinematic architect, who also wrote the story from which the film narrative has been adapted.

An audience at the Rialto in New York gave the highly dramatic story its undivided attention. Numerous expressions of a laudatory nature greeted the portrayals of Miss Stanwyck, Adolphe Menjou and Ralph Bellamy, while the supporting cast was thought capable.



Miss Stanwyck, small-town librarian, splurges on a Havana vacation, in the course of which she meets Menjou, lawyer. An honest and wholesome love springs to life, and is carried back home, where she takes a job as reference librarian on a newspaper, where Bellamy is a reporter. They are devoted to one another, until finally Menjou confesses that he is married, and has an invalid wife whom he cannot leave, since her injuries were sustained in an accident for which he was responsible. In a stormy scene, Miss Stanwyck dismisses him. A child is born, and later, the two are reconciled, resuming their defiance of convention. Bellamy, frankly out to "get" Menjou, who has risen in politics meanwhile, sees the child and its mother in the park waiting for Menjou. To save Menjou, Miss Stanwyck claims she is governess of the child, adopted by Menjou in his wife's absence. She is forced to live in the home of her lover, watching his wife in her expressions of affection for Menjou. Unable to stand the situation, she in a sense renounces her child to Menjou's wife and returns to her place with the paper, of which Bellamy is now managing editor.

The transition, since the story covers perhaps 20 years, from one period to another, was thought handled in most excellent fashion by the three principals. When the child is 18, Menjou is nominated for governor. He is determined to renounce his career and leave with Miss Stanwyck, the guiding force in his life. She, to prevent him, marries the ever-pressing Bellamy.

Menjou is elected, but Bellamy has unearthed the truth of the hidden romance and the birth of the child. He swears to "break" the story and break Menjou. In a highly dramatic scene

Ridin' the Justice

(Columbia)

Western

Another of the Columbia Buck Jones westerns, with Buck in this instance successfully taking care of the sheriff's wife at the end.

Buck plays a cowhand who pays a visit to town with his gun on his hip. This being against the law, the sheriff makes an attempt at arresting him, but Buck makes good his escape. He takes refuge in the sheriff's own home and there meets the officer's disheartened and discouraged wife, who is much taken by the thought that some one finds her sufficiently attractive to take an interest in her. The interest is mutual, and Jones leaves his gun with her for protection.

As he is leaving he hears a shot. The sheriff's deputy had attempted to molest her, and the girl had shot him. As the posse arrives, Jones is found with the gun in his hand, accused of murder and about to be hanged. The sheriff learns the truth of the killing from his wife, but decides it is as good a way as any to get Jones out of the way. At the right moment the judge intervenes, at the instigation of the sheriff's wife and the sheriff loses his position. Jones and the girl decide on their part to take care of each other.

Supporting Jones are Mary Doran as the wife, Russell Simpson as the sheriff, Walter Miller as the deputy. All, including the lesser players, were thought to have handled their roles in an able manner.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Ross Lederman. Story by Harold Shumate. Adaptation and dialogue by Harold Shumate. Editor, Maurice Wright. Cameraman, Benjamin Kline. Release date, January 4, 1932. Running time, 64 minutes.

Without Honors

(Artclass)

Western Melodrama

Harry Carey in one of the eight western melodramas he is making for Weiss Brothers and Artclass Pictures. The group who saw the screening agreed the picture is entertaining, though in the true melodramatic style of the shooting, riding, fighting western which the youngsters seem to enjoy so much and many of the older generation find good entertainment.

Carey's performance was acknowledged good as the not-so-straight westerner who takes the Ranger's badge from the body of his brother killed by a smuggler band, and himself ferrets out the gang and its leader, with whom he settles all accounts.

Support which was called capable is given Carey by Mae Busch, widow whose kidnapped daughter Carey discovers and restores and who concludes the film in Carey's complete charge; Mary Jane Irving as the daughter, Lafe McKee as the sheriff, whose banker brother, Jack Richardson, is uncovered as the leader of the gang; Gibson Gowland as the brutal thug who acts as Miss Irving's father, and several others, of less importance.

Carey goes on the trail of the gang after his brother's death, and when a letter found on the body implicates the boy with the smugglers. Carey believes the letter a "plant," and proves himself correct at the concluding sequence. In the course of the fast and plentiful action, Carey is framed as a bank robber and murderer by Richardson. Rather than tending to make the plot of the melodrama more involved it adds a bit of complication which makes for a more suspense-laden conclusion.

Produced by Supreme Features Inc. Distributed by Weiss Brothers Artclass Pictures. Directed by William Nigh. Story by Lee Sage. Dialogue and continuity by Lee Sage and Harry P. Christ. Cameraman, Edward Linden. Running time, 66 minutes.

Girl of the Rio

(RKO Radio)

Comedy-Drama

The David Belasco stage play, "The Dove," comes to the screen as "Girl of the Rio" with Dolores Del Rio and Leo Carillo sharing headline honors—and sharing it equally, in translation of the applause that followed certain dialogue and action scenes at the opening at the Mayfair on Broadway.

Don Jose Maria Lopez Y Postado, self-styled "bes' damn caballero in all Mexico," comes to the inn where Dolores is an entertainer. The Don's swaggering yet mincing-stepped boastfulness fails to impress "The Dove," whereupon he insists that she accompany him to his hacienda, his expressed philosophy being that "a good girl is no good unless she's bad." Mike, the owner of the place (Stanley Fields) envisions many, many pesos taking wings, and demands that she accede. Mike and Don Jose plot with O'Grady (Ralph Ince) to take off Johnny Powell (Norman Foster), Dolores' sweetheart, but Johnny, who operates the dice table at a gambling house, is first to the draw. Whereupon Johnny is hauled off to prison for murder. Dolores and Bill (Frank Campeau) arrange for his escape but Mike gets wind of it. Dolores agrees to accompany the Don, so as to save Johnny's life.

Johnny solves it all and comes back over the border to rescue Dolores. Whereupon the Don tosses some wine in his eyes, the soldiers recapture him, and the firing squad lines up. Then Dolores appeals to Don Jose's vanity. He calls off the plot and invites both of them to breakfast, gives them his car and tells them where to find a padre.

Herbert Brenon, director, has expanded the action beyond the limitations of the stage, but the dialogue and movement is still somewhat restricted as to territory covered. Music has a position of some importance, particularly in the singing of Miss Del Rio in the scene which introduces her.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by Herbert Brenon. From the David Belasco stage play. Written by Willard Mack. Adaptation by Louis Stevens. Continuity, Elizabeth Meehan. Photography, Leo Tover. Sound, John Tribby. Film editor, Artie Roberts. Release date, January 22, 1932. Running time, 68 minutes.

SHORTS

Detective Lloyd

Scotland Yard Serial

Mutual Pictures, Ltd., English company, produced this serial, directed by Henry MacRae, who was sent across for the purpose, since Universal plans release in this country. The first three episodes, seen here, indicate a plot which is very familiar to audiences of this type of serial, and the English accents, it is feared, will not be too readily understood by American picture goers. Jack Lloyd appears as the Scotland Yard chief of detectives, but, unfortunately, he is hardly the type generally expected in a detective role. The story concerns a search for an amulet of King Tut, with London crooks and Egyptian gangs operating in their own peculiarly sinister manner. Murders, kidnappings, drugging, trapdoors, poison needles and the rest all have their appointed place as in numerous predecessors of the same genus. Planned are 12 episodes, each 22 minutes in running time.

Pottsville Palooka

Great Comedy

Here's one of the best laugh jobs Mack Sennett has turned out in many moons. A few of the laugh sequences should have the folks in an uproar. Harry Gribbon is the small-town blacksmith who leaves his girl and goes to the big city to be a boxer. The travel was induced by a wicked siren, whose husband, a fighter in jail, gets time off to fight our hero. They take it easy until the girl comes in and Harry indicates to his opponent that she is his. The result is great burlesque with Harry knocked out and no mistake. Slapstick and funny scenes abound. Leslie Pearce directed, while the support includes Babe London, Nat Pendleton and Dorothy Granger.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Footlights

(Vitaphone)

Music, Dancing

A good deal of music and not a little rather pleasant dancing features this miniature revue. A Texas oil magnate lands in the big city seeking his daughter, in the show business. Mistaken for Mr. Green, he has to listen to the story of a great show which could be put on, with a little backing. The daughter enters, and the old man, when he understands that daughter is in love with the prospective producer, agrees to back the show. Pleasant entertainment. Running time, 19 minutes.

The Clown

(Universal)

They Will Laugh

Oswald the Rabbitt appears here as an animated clown in the circus. Though there is more melodrama than humor in the piece it will bring more than a few chuckles from the patrons. Oswald foils the villainous ringmaster who is making eyes at his sweetheart. Entertaining number.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Noah's Outing

Good

One of the Paul Terry-Toon animated subjects and a clever piece of work from both artist and synchronizer. There are numerous laughs in the number. When Noah embarks on his famed voyage, he takes more animals than exist anywhere except in an animated artist's imagination.—Running time, 6 minutes.

FIRST RUN HOUSES ARE EAGER FOR OUR TOM MIX PICTURES!

THEATRES which never ran a western in all their careers are looking forward to the return of Tom Mix. Nobody knows better than the smart showmen that the fans are hungry for something different... something out of the badly beaten track.

FRANKENSTEIN tipped them off. Just when everybody said "make 'em laugh" Frankenstein came along and shivered millions into the box-office. Then when everybody said "give 'em the shivers" Strictly Dishonorable came along and made 'em laugh and sigh.

TOM MIX IS THE NEXT CYCLE IN THE MOVIES!

CATCH the Universal salesman on the fly and tell him you want to climb aboard the Tom Mix band-wagon while there's still room for you. His first picture... a whale of a story... is "Destry Rides Again" from the great book by Max Brand!

DEAR HERALD:

Hollywood today is very much different from Hollywood of two years ago when we were here. Two years ago the boys (and some girls) were buying stocks by the bale. Today they are buying aspirin by the quart. Some people seem never to profit by that old saying that what goes up must come down. It's suckers who are trying to get something for nothing that make it possible for Wall Street to erect sixty story buildings and tell the rest of the world how much interest they must pay on their overdrafts.

For several generations we have been clamoring for cleanliness in pictures. Up to date our clamoring seems to have been a waste of raw material. Producers of entertainment stand in constant fear of censorship, and why shouldn't they? We noted the Music Box theatre billing for its holiday attraction. The billing indicated that it would be somewhat "Frenchy," as all under 18 were barred from attendance. In the most conspicuous place in the billing was the picture of a woman without a stitch of clothing on her and the public was advised in large glaring letters that the show would be "For Shocking Purposes Only," and that was the kind of entertainment offered the people of Hollywood on the day of the celebration of the birth of the Savior of mankind.

We never preached a sermon in our life and we are not preaching one now, but it has been a life-long habit with us to hit indecency a crack every time it showed its head, and when we cease doing that it will be when we cease doing anything. We are told that they have to give the public what it wants, but we note that the fellow making the statement estimates what the public wants by his own tastes in the matter.

Take the survey made by the HERALD in November and note the "15 Box Office Champions" as listed therein. It should provide the producers with some food for thought, since but one gangster and one sexy picture appeared in the list. When the public speaks at the box offices of the country it speaks in terms that anyone ought to understand.

It is a common thing for ad writers for pictures to refer to their picture as "A Broadway Success." You can take it from us, if you care to, that these "Broadway Successes" are what is giving thousands of independent exhibitors a lot of laughs, for Broadway doesn't mean a thing to them.

We were invited to lunch at the RKO studios by Mr. Perry Lieber, assistant director of publicity, and were driven over there by Mr. Gaines of the Hollywood Herald forces. We met some very delightful people, among them being Miss Arline Judge and Eddie Quillan who were starring in "Girl Crazy." It might be well for exhibitors to keep their eyes on these two youngsters, for our judgment is that they are a couple of juveniles who will rate rather above some who are now appearing in the electric lights.

We also had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Rex Bailey, casting director for RKO, charged with expenditure of from three to six millions of the company's money each year, and that's more money than we supposed there was in the whole world. Our limit at any one time has been $2.40.

We feel indebted to the officers of RKO for the courtesy shown us and were delighted with the excellent people we met. Somehow we always feel at home with the RKO folks, but maybe that's because of the way Sherm Fitch, the RKO branch manager at Omaha, treats us on the golf course. Sherm always lets us beat him, and that's pretty nice of him. Wonder if he could help himself.

Mr. Meehan, publisher of the Hollywood Herald, drove us out to the Universal studio to have lunch with Frank Whitbeck, exploitation manager for Universal. We found Mr. Whitbeck a very interesting gentleman to meet and from him we gained considerable knowledge of the inside workings of a studio. The Universal studio seemed to be the livest spot we had found; it gave one the impression of a beehive during the honey season.

We went to a football game with E. E. Sprague. You all no doubt remember E. E. He was formerly known as "Grasshopper Sprague" of Goodland, Kansas. E. E. recently sold his Sherman theatre at Goodland and came to Hollywood and rented an apartment where he now lives with his mother. Sprague never missed but one football game in his life, and that was when it rained and they didn't play. We didn't know what teams were playing but Sprague said that didn't make any difference, it was a football game and that's all that mattered.

It looks like this town of Hollywood is going to the dogs. Will Rogers is on his way home from Manchuria, Wallace Beery has bought himself a new airoplane, nobody seems to know where Polly and Marie are, Al Christie's airdale haint goin' to have no pups, and we paid ninety cents for an oyster stew. Somebody come out here quick or by George we're sunk.

If we can't collect the money due us from the foreign countries then hereafter we are going to chance our dough on jawbone poker.

Did you read MGM's ad, in the December 19 number of the HERALD, on Marie Dressler in "Emma"? That's the most sensible, compelling ad we have ever seen, and the man who wrote it is entitled to wield the gavel at the big desk in Congress. If Marie in "Emma" measures up to the high quality of that ad (and we know she will, God bless her) she will land with both feet at the top of the next "15 Box Office Champions" or our name is Bill Mud in a rainy season.

Miss Dressler is the star for me
She surely is a dream.
It really is a joy to see
Her face upon the screen.
She plays with such a queenly grace
Such innocence shines in her face
No other star can take her place
That I have ever seen.

MR. J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
SOMEWHERE EN ROUTE.

Dear "J. C.":

Having read in this week's Motion Picture Herald that you are headed for Arizona, New Mexico and Texas, I thought I would write you an open letter of introduction to a number of RCA Photophone boosters in the principal cities of those up and coming states. Having done considerable visiting around in that section of the country and knowing how invitingly the welcome mat is displayed on all doorsteps, I am sure you would get a great kick out of talking with those exhibitors I mention. In all probability you will hit Tucson, Arizona, first. If you do and when you do, drop in and have a chat with Joe Gross. He recently installed RCA Photophone apparatus in his new Plaza Theatre and I'm told it's the best sound in Tucson. Tell Roy Drachman I said so, anyhow. Up in Flagstaff you'll find the Orpheum and then, as you cross the line into New Mexico, stop in Gallup for a chat with Giles Masters at the Strand Theatre. When you reach Albuquerque, step into the Pastime and Liberty Theatres. And don't fail to go to the City Hall and call on Mayor Clyde Tingley. He's a friend of mine and a great booster. If and when you land in Dallas, be sure and see P. G. Cameron of the Melrose Theatre and Paul Scott of the Varsity. Both have had Photophone apparatus in their theatres for some time and we consider them among our staunchest supporters in the Lone Star state. These are only a few of the host of satisfied RCA Photophone exhibitors in Arizona, New Mexico and Texas and you ought to know them if you don't already. Drop me a line when you have time.

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

KEEP MARCHING FORWARD!

THE calamity howlers howl, the grave diggers dig, the tear-jerkers cry, the kickers kick, the grouches bellyache, but real showmen keep marching forward.

We have made it a particular point to feel out the many men with whom we come in contact and listen to what they have to say when present conditions within the industry are being discussed. We have noted carefully how optimistically or pessimistically they spoke when reminded of good or bad product. We have watched their faces to see the expressions when circuit versus independent theatre operation was the topic.

All these things have a direct significance to the men who are handling the movie houses all over the country and shows, within certain limits how the majority react to such matters.

Invariably the men who are honest-to-goodness showmen laugh off every disagreeable slant and counter back with their determination to carry on regardless of the so-called evils, real or mythical, within the realm of theatre operation.

Invariably the real showmen are too much concerned about stimulating business or keeping their houses out of the red to dwell long and moodily over this or that handicap, if handicap that this or that happens to be. Their first thought is how to merchandise the pictures; how to improve the operation of their theatres; how to do both efficiently and economically. That's why they are not only good showmen but good business men, too.

Take the other type. The habitual kickers. They are so busy gossiping about the product and it's shortcomings, bellyaching about interference from their superiors, squawking about the "evils" of the show business that they have little or no time left to make a success of their theatres. So, it is only natural that they find themselves under fire, threatened with dismissal, being pushed and pounded, or set back a step at a time.

If those in the kicking class would devote but a small portion of their kicking time to paying attention to their jobs they would find less and less to kick about. They would soon become so busy doping out new ideas to attract patronage that little by little they would stop kicking and return to their former status as good showmen. And the entire business would be better off.

Now it's not so bad that we find a large percent of such people in our midst but it is almost a calamity that they spend so much of their time going from one to the other and doing the crying act. They not only are hurting themselves but those who they annoy with their kicking.

Show business stands for progress. For accomplishments. For ability. For hard work. For responsibility. We've got all kinds and sizes of theatres to keep filled. To get into the red is suicide. Every ounce of effort must be directed towards making our theatres both profitable and entertaining. One goes hand in hand with the other. Relaxing for one day means a day wasted. There must be no let-up. Since the world began it has been a battle for existence and it's no different today than it was yesterday except that today we must fight harder. But the stakes make the fight more than worth while.

For the aggressive, progressive, creative showman there is never one uninteresting day. Each new day finds new ideas, new pictures, new selling slants, new stars, new stories, new tie-ups, new everything. He wants to see his efforts crowned with as much success as possible. He is not averse to that little pat on the back and those few words, oral or printed, saying that he is a manager of a successfully run theatre or a man who accomplishes big things.

At the end of that rainbow there must be financial independence, promotion, responsible positions and no end of things to be enjoyed. But the end of the rainbow can only be reached by hard, conscientious work; the ability to take the good with the bad and make the most of it. The desire to succeed where others may not have been able to accomplish so much.

Anyone who is so hardened that he cares not a good goshdarn whether school keeps or not is either kidding himself or kidding others. But if he's kidding himself it's a dirty trick he's playing and sooner or later he will be sorry that he lost that much needed enthusiasm to start the day with a smile and plenty of confidence.

There isn't a handicap in the whole industry that can keep a good man down or could possibly throttle the ambition and ability of a real showman. For despite the kickers, the bellyachers, the growlers and the pessimists it's as true as night follows day that where laggards linger by the wayside, real showmen keep marching on. "CHICK."

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

There's no satisfying some patrons in these days of dresserware, suit-cases, china, silver and moving pitchers. But after all you can't blame the ladies. They'll take all they can get, — and ask for more.

ATMOSPHERIC LOBBY HELPED AL FOURMET SELL "BORNEO" FILM

An atmospheric lobby front undoubtedly helped sell extra tickets for Al Fourmet, manager of the Ellanay Theatre, El Paso, Texas, when he played "East of Borneo." Natural shrubbery was cut from the banks of the local river for the decoration of lobby and box-office and cut-out animals were effectively placed in the brush. Stuffed animals, borrowed from a taxidermist, also lent to the general scheme.

Twenty-four sheet cut-outs of Pickford and Rose Hobart were placed on one end of the river bridge and one of Lupita Tovar was spotted at the Mexican side. The art department made up a volcano cut-out, which at night looked as though it was on fire, for a display for the center of the bridge.

Not all our members have the privilege of going out in their back yards to gather up jungle atmosphere, such as Fourmet is able to do, but we'll have to give him credit for not losing sight of the opportunity.

BOTWICK AND OTHER STAFF MEMBERS GOT OUT A FINE PROGRAM

Harry Botwick, of the Paramount Theatre, Rutland, Vt., calls attention to the very interesting inaugural program promoted by the combined staffs of the Paramount and new Grand Theatres on the occasion of the opening of the latter house and we'll have to admit that the boys did a splendid job.

Including the jacket the program consisted of 28 pages of ads and text, with photos of the leading executives, data on theatre, etc. We don't know who is the author of "The New Grand Talks," but to our way of thinking it's neat copy. The theatre itself is quoted as the conversationist and goes on to state that Paramount-Publix officials came over to make an inspection when everything was ready to function, and then continues to describe the up-to-date features. The original copy is on file at Club headquarters if any member cares to have it.

The staff of the new Grand consists of Thomas W. McKay, managing director; and J. Harry Wilson, manager.

TAKE NOTE OF THIS STUNT, YOU SHOWMEN NEAR BIG COLLEGES

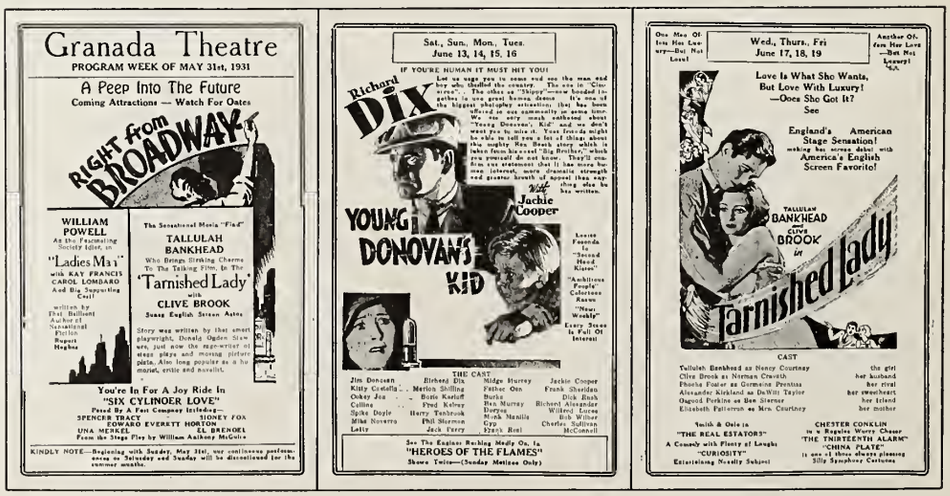
Next football season when some of our Club members are casting about for an appropriate novelty, perhaps the stunt used by the management of the RKO Keith Theatre, Boston, Mass., may help solve the problem. We are indebted to Cliff E. Christianson, organist, for making it possible for us to receive the information.

Through the good offices of the athletic director of Harvard University, a film made up of all "thrill-plays" enacted in games between Harvard and Yale since 1914 was secured. Many of the scenes were made in slow motion and the players were identified by titles and numbers.

Special advertising included an ad and review in the "Harvard Daily"; letters to all clubs and fraternities; distribution of a special flyer in all parts of the city; stories in newspapers carrying names of those prominent in plays in picture; mention of film in address made by Harvard publicity director at press conference; marquee billing under current billing, "Harvard-Yale Thrill Plays 1914 To Date"; a huge window display in theatre arcade of enlarged pictures of various Harvard Football teams; large felt 5 x 12 set piece in lobby, with goal posts and football and same copy as in flyer, and an announcement of film over radio the night before Harvard-Yale game.

We believe that the above will be particularly interesting to Club members situated in or near the large colleges and universities, if this stunt has not already been attempted. Once the proper authorities are sold on the idea, it becomes merely a matter of the cutting room, where a most interesting special film could be assembled. There should be many interesting box-office angles attached to the screening of such a picture, since it would have appeal to students, alumni and the general public. Thanks, Cliff, for your contribution. Let's hear from you again.

Youthful Manager



The occasion of the Fifth Anniversary of the Eastern and Clinton theatres, suburban links in the J. Real Neth chain in Columbus, Ohio, recently disclosed that Robert Glick, manager of the Eastern, has the distinction of being the youngest theatre manager in the city, if not the state. Glick has been in charge of the house since it opened and is 22 years old.

Now Here's a Program With A Somewhat Different Slant!

Here's a program that is neither a newsette or splash type, yet, is a combination of the two. You will note that they give their attractions the big spot of the pages, but instead of the usual method of leaving the balance of the page white they surround the splash cut of the picture with readers about the picture.

One thing is certain, no two theatres creating their own program copy will arrive at identically the same looking finished job unless they are deliberately trying to imitate one or the other. That is why we get such a wide variety of programs here at Club headquarters and also why it is interesting to note the various types. We particularly wanted this sort of program for reproduction and had to go back in our files quite a way to get it.

If you would like to see your own program in print, send us a good clean copy.

PRYTZ SAYS BARREL OF FUN IS BEST OF GIFT NIGHT STUNTS

For those who have found it expedient to boost trade certain nights of the week with Country Store, Gift Nite, etc., the methods employed by Roy Prytz, manager of the Duluth Theatre, Duluth, Minn., may be interesting to many of our members in the smaller towns. "Barrells of Fun" and "Pay Nights" are his favorites.

A Good Flash!

When putting on "Barrel of Fun" he arranged with merchants for a number of articles in the customary manner. Then he purchases about $10 of flash merchandise each week. About twenty ordinary barrels are scouted up, along with one large china barrel that measures about five feet across the top. All are painted white with circles of color to make a good flash and carry the theatre message. The barrels are then placed on prominent intersections, department stores and other desirable locations. On the top of a few barrels he places a wire screen and inside on the bottom a card with a message. A sign on the outside reads, "Danger—Don't Look In This Barrel!"

Get a Large Barrel!

The large china barrel was painted in a like manner with about twenty nails placed regularly around front half of upper edge. Strings were attached to each nail, one end hanging inside barrel and the other long enough to reach from the barrel to auditorium side of the orchestra rail. A small article was attached to each of the strings, correspondingly tagged, and the larger articles were placed on the stage to make a good display. The last five or six strings were used for "laughs," such as undergarments, four foot lengths of sausage, babies' milk bottles, rubber pants, etc.

When some loutish country boy would come down the aisle and select his string, Prytz would follow it to the top of the barrel, reach down and pull out a pair of bloomers, or some other article calculated to get a laugh from the audience.

Try a Pay Night!

Pay Night is tied-up with a local bank and along with a co-operative ad the institution furnishes small manilla envelopes in which the theatre inserts coins ranging in value from one cent to fifty cents, one 1 dollar and one 5 dollar bill. In other envelopes are inserted orders for free merchandise and single guest tickets. As each patron enters the theatre he or she selects an envelope.

After reading a whole lot about revivals of Country Store, etc., Prytz concluded to pass along the version that served him best. He observes that some of our members may chuckle over the antiquity of the two gags but, on the other hand, states that Barrel of Fun had it all over Country Store, and that Pay Night was a corker as a trade booster. At any rate, we're dead sure that his methods will be of interest to many Round Tablers and we thank him for making it possible for us to broadcast the ideas. Roy has always been a staunch member of this organization, never failing to regularly have the interest of others at heart. Here's hoping he will continue the good work.

Boys May Get Break

The newly elected Mayor of Toledo, Ohio, A. Q. Thacher, formerly did his bit as a stage hand. Toledo showmen look for some kind of a break.

Adds to Holdings

Great Lakes Theatres, operated by A. J. Cooper and Harry Schwartz, of Erie, Pa., have announced acquisition of the Hippodrome at Youngstown, Ohio. The present picture policy will be continued.

Old Order Changeth

Sidney Danneberg, intimately identified with the fortunes of the Paramount Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, for a number of years, is awaiting assignment to a new post. Charles P. Perry, of Rochester, N. Y., succeeds to Danneberg's old job.

MYERS SOLD ADDED ATTRACTION FOR 50 MILES AROUND TOWN

Since we last heard from George B. Myers, former manager of the Kentucky Theatre in Corbin, Ky., this Round Tabler has located in Henderson, Ky., where he is in charge of the Warner-Grand. He's been there for several months and now that he's got his second wind we're able to report on what he did when Singer's Midgets came to town.

Aware that people in the smaller rural communities were not so well acquainted with various roadshow attractions, he heavily billed a fifty mile territory with several thousand newspaper-size heralds. But the big kick in the campaign was a street parade, which, by the way, is a stock stunt of the Midgets. Merchants tied-up their ads with boxes relating to the parade and a Ford dealer furnished cars with banners for a portion of the procession. A car equipped with a public address system lead the parade, playing records and making announcements from time to time.

The boxes carried by the merchants in ads stated that the Midget would appear at stores at certain times but these shopping tours were made very brief in order not to satiate public desire to see the diminutive folk.

If you will glance at the small photo which accompanies this description of Myers' Midget parade, you'll note that it includes a couple of elephants. We gather that these animals are part of stock equipment. The photo was taken near the theatre and there can be no doubt that the stunt drew a large crowd.

Now that Myers is again an active contributor to this department we'll look forward with genuine pleasure to hearing a lot more about this enterprising showman's activities. What's planned for the New Year, George? Let your Club know.

ACKERLY COLLECTED OVER 2,000 TOYS TO GIVE TO POOR KIDS

More than 2,000 toys of all description were collected for the poor children of the city at a double Saturday matinee show recently held by Irving Ackerly, manager of the Dominion Theatre, Vancouver.

A local newspaper announced the event, stating that children might gain admission to "Penrod and Sam" by bringing one of last year's toys to the theatre. After making repairs to some of the toys they were distributed to the poor kiddies on Xmas Eve.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

Guy undertakes to describe his feelings about the talkies. All those in favor of more action and less dialogue on the screen should be sure to include that request in their next letter to Santa Claus.

SAN JORDAN'S FRONT ADAPTABLE FOR USE ON OTHER PICTURES

Somewhat belated through a mix-up in files but still interesting, is a description of a front made for "Hells Angels" while Sanford Jordan was connected with the Capitol Theatre in Salisbury, N. C. He is at present acting as assistant manager of the Paramount Theatre, Concord, N. C.

The entrance to the lobby was completely enclosed with beaver-board except for a cutout doorway. The tile was painted in large letters over top of entrance and both sides and front carried sketches of airships, airplanes and bursting shells. Stills from the picture also lent to the general scheme.

While rather late to publish accounts of fronts for this particular picture, Jordan states that this design caused plenty of comment and considerably helped business. He used a similarly constructed one for "Cimmaron" with the same results. He is passing it along for the reason that it could be applied to other pictures of the same types. In the meantime, we'll be on the lookout for some evidence of what he has been doing to sell shows in Concord.

WATERS SCORED WITH LOCAL HIGH SCHOOL'S TEAM WITH PEP PARTY

Since severing his connection with an assistant managership in a Memphis house, Lawrence Waters has located in Newport, Ark., where he is in charge of the Capitol, an M. A. Lightman theatre.

In connection with "Touchdown," Waters tied in with the Senior Class for a thirty minute party and "pep session" at the theatre following the winning of the team's last game of the season. During the game score card heralds were distributed and the Senior Class sold tickets to students on the benefit plan. A packed house and much newspaper publicity resulted from this move.

He also held a grocery matinee recently for the benefit of the Orphans' Home and managed to donate a trunk load of groceries to the institution. This matinee was a special one, following the regular matinee. The newspapers supported the event prior and for two days following.

We're mighty glad to hear from Waters again and to know that he has won a promotion to the post of manager. Now that he's in a more advantageous position to pass along show tips for his fellow showmen we hope that he'll continue to do his share.

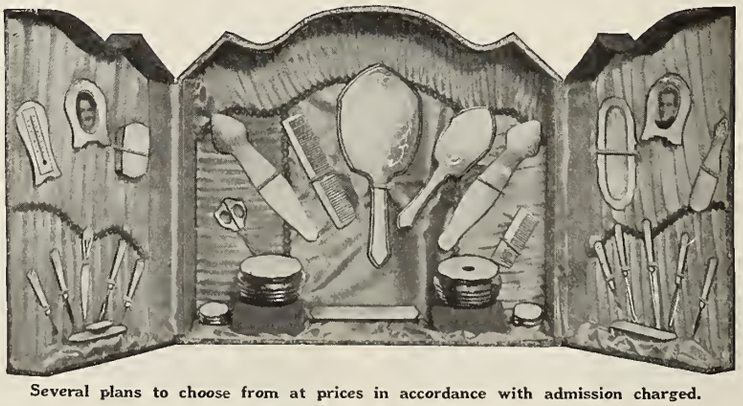
PHELAN PROMOTED A COOKING SCHOOL TO EXCELLENT RESULTS

One of those good will stunts you're constantly hearing about these days recently took place down in Long Branch, N. J., where Thomas A. Phelan stands at the helm of the Paramount Theatre.

He tied up with a local newspaper for the sponsoring of a Cooking School course to be held at the theatre. Lectures were made on four successive mornings at 10 A. M. from the theatre stage and awards made by the newspaper and merchants to those who were present at each meeting and who particularly qualified.

The newspaper profited from the deal by tying up with a number of merchants on advertising connected with various articles mentioned during the lectures and the theatre secured many additional patrons through women staying to see the first show. The theatre also profited through the vast amount of publicity given the affair by the newspaper. Many women from out of town attended the lectures.

We've often had occasion to tell Club members about Phelan's activities in Long Branch and he's always turning up with some interesting slant on show business. There are many angles to a stunt such as outlined above, such as the newspaper tie-up and the opportunities Phelan had to get in a few words for his theatre and coming attractions during a brief stage address.



Down to Bed-Rock

J. H. Moran, manager of the Royal Theatre, Laurel, Mont., has announced a new policy and states that this was done without consulting any of the movie magnates. He hopes they'll back him up.

"People must have entertainment," he announced, "therefore I am putting the admission price down to a real bargain level. This will make it possible for even a large family to witness quality entertainment."

WOOLWORTH GETS AWAY WITH IT BUT YOU CAN'T—SAYS WHITBECK

Herewith we present number two in the series on "Is Advertising and Exploitation Necessary." The original basis for this series was the question of whether any theatre with the pick of product could afford to lay down on their advertising and exploitation. Out of that question we find a hundred and one answers all valuable and interesting to every showman in the business. By following each article or groups of articles every week you will get the slant of some of the best men in the field of advertising. At the same time we have not overlooked those who are not so big, but whose opinions are nevertheless of great importance. Those who would like to express themselves on the subject are invited to do so, submitting their views to the Managers' Round Table Club. Frank Whitbeck wrote this week's article and we feel certain that his thousands of friends within the industry will be delighted to read anything that Frank has to say on this or any other subject. For years he headed the advertising department for Fox West Coast Theatres. Since leaving that circuit he has been a valuable member of the studio staff at Universal City, where he not only sponsored advertising and exploitation for their pictures, but gave the story department the benefit of his wide experience in what the public wants in the way of entertainment. As the M. C. at the deluxe theatres would say, "We give you Whitbeck." Read on. "Chick"

Butchers and Bakers!

Can a theatre be successfully operated without advertising?

It all depends upon what you call "a theatre."

Mr. Woolworth runs a great number of 5 and 10-cent stores . . . he never advertises. The butcher shop and bakery around the corner . . . they never advertise. Then . . . look at Marshall Field and Macy's . . . or Swift, the packer, and the National Biscuit Company. It's all relative.

Remember a few years back . . . on every fence post, in every grocery store window—in newspaper space . . . on the billboards—you saw "The Gold Dust Twins." What about "Sunny Jim" who used to advertise "Force"? Have you seen a package of "Gold Dust" lately—how long is it since you had "Force" for breakfast?

Sure you can run a theatre without advertising . . . but you won't get very far and your theatre won't amount to much.

Think this over . . . Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer make pretty good pictures. But are they satisfied to sit back on their haunches and say to the exhibitor . . . "there it is, now YOU sell it." They are not . . . and you know it. M-G-M stages a national advertising campaign in the key cities for their big pictures. On top of this . . . they spend an enormous amount of money each year in movie magazines, in radio broadcasts, in the maintenance of a studio publicity department which works on something beside press sheets.

Water for the Mill!

It's all water for the mill . . . showmanship effort to help your theatre and, in the helping, of bettering their percentage receipts or getting a better price for their pictures on straight sales contracts.

Universal made a picture called "Frankenstein." Its first, second, third engagements were sensationally successful. There was no mistake in anybody's mind. . . . Universal had one of the hits of the year if not THE hit. When box office receipts demonstrated what they had, were they smug and content and did they say . . . "we've given you a hit . . . now go out and sell it"? They did not . . . they gave every bit of energy and help they had to the exhibitor . . . they gambled their own money in increased advertising appropriations in spite of box office proof that "Frankenstein" was a box office wallop. Where Universal could have sat back and said "we make 'em . . . you sell 'em"; they put their shoulder to the wheel, their money on the line and—THEY ADVERTISED!

Henry Ford comes pretty close to writing his own ticket in the manufacture and sale of popular priced motor cars. Does Henry Ford advertise . . . or do you believe he doesn't have to? I have no way of knowing just how much Henry does spend each year on printers' ink, but it certainly must run into the millions. What about the advertising for "Lucky Strike" cigarettes? Did you read the other day where the president of the company said he "didn't know whether the advertising paid or not, but he was keeping it up—just the same." He knows . . . if he quit—you'd be smoking "Chesterfield's or Camels. What happened to "Gold Dust" and "Force" when they quit advertising?

Maybe you're going to say that advertising will eat you up . . . if you don't watch out. . . . That you may be building a Frankenstein (free plug) with an ever increasing budget. It won't if you keep your head. As your business increases, through advertising, increase your advertising budget in proportion to that increase.

They CAN Be Sold!

Do you think that some pictures "just can't be sold"? If you do . . . you are wrong again, and for proof . . . watch the receipts published in the various trade papers. What may be a flop for you will be a mop-up for another showman in another part of the country . . . a showman who found an angle—a way to sell that picture.

There are a thousand ways in which to advertise . . . most of them good. Your job is to discover which are good and which are not.

Mind you . . . I don't think door hangers and milk bottle tops are worth a tinker's damn. . . . I believe most of the exploitation and stunts that go into the exhibitor's press books are god-awful, but . . . my thinking that way doesn't prove me right. Maybe I don't know how to use them . . . maybe a small town manager in a cross-road hamlet could teach me how. . . . I'd be willing to learn and, having learned . . . change my opinion and admit my ignorance.

Take a Second Look!

Have you come to the point where you say . . . "advertising doesn't help my business." If you are . . . take a second look at your advertising. I've been in towns where the natives wouldn't believe the manager if he swore to the truth of his statement on a stack of Bibles. I've seen other theatres go along week after week and month after month and never change their form of advertising . . . never vary their appeal. They just keep adding mis-statement of fact after mis-statement of fact . . . filling their display space with bombast and hooey until it becomes an old, old story with every possible patron of that theatre.

Then there is the lobby display. You know that's advertising, too . . . just as much as a display of cotton goods in the department store window. How often does the lobby get a thought from the manager who says "advertising doesn't help my theatre?" Same old frames in the same old place . . . 8 x 10s, one-sheets and 22 x 28s . . . a standing order at the exchange . . . no variation, no originality . . . no thought.

Books could be written on how to advertise for a theatre." Many more could be written on "How NOT to advertise a Theatre." But that isn't the question . . . you asked me . . . "Can a Theatre Exist without Advertising?" My answer is . . . "NO . . . not if it's—a theatre."

In the course of Frank's article he mentions the fact that Woolworth never advertises, yet, is a successful chain of stores. It is interesting to note that the real estate department of that five and ten store chain makes it a point to select locations directly alongside of some big advertiser.

Frank Whitbeck

Other chains, like United Cigar Stores never decide on any location until they have carefully clocked the pedestrians who pass that location and find them sufficiently large to warrant a store being spotted there. And, furthermore, if the pedestrian traffic drops off considerably after the store has opened they shut it down.

Advertising has unquestionably been responsible for the success of the majority of neighborhood and suburban theatres. Such houses are not generally located on the busiest streets although they may be spotted on the business thoroughfares of their little communities. But advertising brings the patrons to the box office and advertising keeps them coming there.

PORTER PROMOTED A WINDOW TIE-UP GAG BY OFFERING AWARD

A somewhat different slant on the art of obtaining window space, which we haven't heard about in quite a while, is brought to the Club's attention by John Porter, manager of the Palace Theatre, Melbourne, Australia.

John Porter

When campaigning a musical production, which had reached its sixth week when he communicated with headquarters, two stunts stood out as main contributors to a tremendous amount of publicity received by the show. One was a window-dressing competitive stunt and the other a frock gag.

A Sunday newspaper broke with the announcement that the producer of the show would donate five pounds and five shillings to the storekeeper who made up the most attractive window display incorporating some feature from the musical production. A similar notice was published in 26 suburban papers and exactly 183 merchants entered the contest. All went to the expense of ordering cutouts and flittered sign cards, together with cartoons of principals in the show.

Frock Contest!

One of the leading papers, with a circulation of over 170,000 daily, sponsors a Frock Contest every year, whereby awards are made to women who submit the most attractive frocks that can be fashioned for a stated amount. This broke during the run of the musical show and Porter tied up with the editor to have a number of the girls display the frocks. It proved an excellent means of obtaining a lot of publicity at no cost to the theatre.

While the window dressing stunt was engineered in connection with a musical show in for an extended run, there doesn't seem to be any apparent reason why the same idea cannot be planned in advance for some special attraction, Anniversary, or to announce new season product. That there will be considerable work attached to such a campaign we don't doubt for one moment. Then, it's possible that some managers would not care to set the precedent of paying even a small amount for space that they are getting for nothing. But 183 windows, attractively advertising a picture for the small sum of $5, is interesting to say the least. It's an idea, boys, anyway.

Try It Yourself!

Also, Porter's other gag concerning the frocks may give some of our members a new angle to work on when looking about for means to publicize an added attraction, particularly if the troupe happens to have members who could be prevailed upon to cooperate in a tie-up.

Our thanks to Porter for sending along the above information and we'll hope to hear a lot more about what he's doing to put shows over in Melbourne. Musical show or picture, good ideas are always adaptable, and Australia certainly takes no back seat when it comes to modern showmanship.

POSTER ART FOR THE THEATRE!

Drawn By B. L. James

The illustration above can be used for either poster or newspaper ad purposes. You will find that it works out well both ways. Like most of the other Benton James contributions it is clean-cut and attractive. For poster purposes you can easily visualize its finished appearance with the aid of some good colors.

The illustration below is from Herb Simpson but the art work was done by none other than Arthur DuVall, art director for Loew's Theatres in Evansville, Ind. This beautiful piece of art work was done in colors and is certainly a thing of beauty. How it must have attracted attention in the lobby of the Victory Theatre can best be judged by those other artists who appreciate this type of work.

DON CHAMBERS SAYS JUVENILE STAR DID GOOD WORK IN N.W.

Some time ago we had occasion to publish accounts of campaigns carried out by several Club members in connection with the personal appearances of Jean Darling, diminutive star in "Our Gang" comedies.

The little girl and her mother made quite an extensive tour through the Northwest section of the country and according to reports from our members and from Don Chambers, key city advertising manager with the Publix circuit, cooperation received from the little girl and her mother boosted box office receipts in the smaller towns to a marked degree.

Jean's act consisted of trailers, songs, recitations, and a jazzy dance for the windup. There were many tie-ups made with local merchants, built principally around testimonials from the little girl concerning local products.

SIDLINGER FOLLOWS UP FAMILY TRADE BY INDIVIDUAL HERALDS

Appeal to family patronage through the medium of attractively gotten up program-heralds, letters to children and small folders addressed to mothers and fathers, has been extensively followed to excellent results by Albert Sidlinger, manager of the Holme Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

His program-heralds are of the flash variety, with large mats, large type and plenty of white space between. The front or back cover generally carries some institutional message. The one addressed to "Mother" could be appropriately used on Mother's Day. The second page carries the cut of a matronly looking lady and the third page is headed, "Every Day Is Mother's Day." The balance of the copy suggests that She come to the Holme and relax. Following is a reproduction of the letter mailed to children:

Dear Friends:

Here is the letter I promised you kiddies, and I want to thank every one of you for sending me your letter, and I had a great time reading them all even if it did take me almost a week.

I hope you enjoyed the free show we had last week, and I hope you will enjoy the one we will have this week on Thursday at 4 o'clock. Of course, you know that all you have to do is to bring this letter to the theatre with you and that will be your ticket.

Next week, Kiddies, we will have another free show, but this time you will have to bring something along with you that we can give to some of the poor kiddies for their Christmas. You can bring a can of food, one of your old toys, or a pair of your old shoes, in fact, anything that some poor kiddie would enjoy for their Christmas.

I might even suggest that you bring something along with you on Thursday as I know a lot of kiddies who would like something, and we would have plenty of time to fix the toys up before Christmas.

So don't forget the smile, Kiddies. We all like to have fun, and the place for it is at the Holme Theatre. By the way, do you come to the regular Saturday matinees?

Next Saturday we will tell you about a new Club we are going to form, and you will have a lot of fun too.

Hope you enjoy the little prize I am sending you, and I hope you have a lot of fun with it, and don't forget to tell mother and daddy where you are going on Thursday, December 3rd, at 4 o'clock. We don't want them to worry about you, do we? 'cause we'll be having a lot of fun.

See you Thursday, kiddies.

Your pal,
UNCLE AL.

Sidlinger certainly has been wading into the home with a lot of attractive advertising matter and we'll be looking for further examples of the kind of work he's turning out.

NEW MEMBER WRIGHT SENDS CLUB NUMBER OF SELLING STUNTS

One of the Round Table's recently elected members, Harold Wright, manager of the State Theatre, Hollister, Calif., advances the argument that there's nothing very new under the sun in stunts being tried out in show business these days; that the guy who thought out the originals had all the grief of experimentation, and that most any fellow with a fair amount of intelligence can take up the trail where the first one left off and cash in with a variation or elaboration of the original. We're inclined to agree with Hollister to a certain extent and to back him up we'll give you all a line on what's been keeping him busy the past season.

"Reward" Posters!

For instance when he was plugging "Pardon Us" he had printed a regular Sheriff's "Reward!" poster, with photos of the two stars underneath the head. Both were numbered a la criminal code. $5,000 in large type appeared under photos. Additional copy instructed the reader that these two "desperate criminals were roaming the countryside with avowed intention of inciting hilarious laughter upon unsuspecting citizens." They were warned that the two would be seen at the State Theatre and that $5,000 worth of laughs would be the reward for each person "catching them doing their tomfoolery."

Wright also had considerable success with the filling-out-of-balloon gag for the younger element. He used this on both "Skippy" and "Waterloo Bridge," offering guest tickets to the entrants and it brought excellent results. The newspaper ran the still cuts and empty balloons to be filled out with the most appropriate answers and gave generous reader support. Readers will recall that this was regular exchange material.

Helped the Needy!

He also recently promoted a "fruit jar matinee" that brought in some 350 jars of extra fine canned fruit for the needy in his community. This was pulled off in connection with the American Legion, for that organization's allocation of charity baskets. The jars of fruit were accepted in lieu of admission. Newspapers played up the event with a number of front page stories.

Other evidence of his activities is seen in several tickets prepared in regular give-away form. The articles included live turkeys, radios, $100 in gold, etc. These were handled in the usual style familiar to all Club members.

Two Types of Programs!

He has been using two special programs in addition to regular house issue. One is a finely gotten up monthly program, folded thrice for mailing. The left hand corner is decorated with a good sized cut headed, "Good News—about happenings at the State Theatre this month." In the middle of this box is the figure of a clown beating a big base drum, captioned "Follow me to the best entertainment ever presented anywhere." A postal permit is in the usual place. The mailers are made of excellent stock, suitable for hanging, and the copy is arranged so that it doesn't appear crowded. A smaller edition of the program has also been used as a programette.

Wright has certainly made a good start for a new member and we hope that he will continue to let us all know what he is doing to sell shows in Hollister. If any other members doubt his claims as to originality of ideas in show business these days, we'll welcome their replies. Maybe there is something new under the sun and, if so, let's have it.

LOCAL FILM DREW!

Not long ago we told Club members how Zack Freedman started the ball rolling at the Fox-Hempstead Theatre in Hempstead, L. I., N. Y., by promoting production of a local feature film based on the history of the town. The above photo shows line-up of citizens waiting to enter the theatre on that occasion. This stunt boosted a drooping trade and consistent plugging has kept the box office in a healthy condition.

WASHINGTON BI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION!

As far back as last September we started mentioning the nation-wide celebration commemorating the Father of our country. At that time, and several times since, we pointed out that the formation of local committees was under way and the theatre manager could take a leading part in the plans for his particular community.

We are now rapidly approaching the start of the Bi-Centennial celebration and if your theatre and yourself have not affiliated with the local forces in charge for this work then you have failed to grasp the possibilities of this celebration and what it can be made to mean to your theatre.

Those who still lack more intimate details of the entire celebration are urged to communicate with the Commission at their headquarters in Washington, D. C. They have quite a bit of literature, local plans, books, press clipping sheets, etc., all aimed at making the local work of the various committees more efficient with the minimum amount of effort. They will also furnish full information about the motion picture being made of the life of George Washington, how it can be secured and what advertising material will be available on it.

Theatres wishing to decorate their lobbies or fronts with appropriate portraits of Washington can secure prices and sizes from Club headquarters. Other accessories, such as buttons, banners, heralds and many other items to help make the celebration a great event during its lengthy progress for some nine months, are yours for the asking or information pertaining to same will be forthcoming upon receipt of requests from members and showmen.

If your local committee is fully formed, get in touch with them and see how you can help them along and help yourself at the same time. There is nothing selfish in this suggestion. Your simple participation in the activities of your local committee will be a marvelous good-will gesture on the part of the theatre. At the same time you can voice your sentiments regarding the various events to be staged and thereby avoid their clashing with your theatre's business. Those on the committee would not knowingly hurt you, but unless you are right on the spot you are going to find this celebration a whale of a lot of opposition to your theatre.

We cannot undertake to offer concrete suggestions for your guidance, you are on the spot and can best judge for yourself. We would only point out that the local committee's work ought to, if possible, be handled from your theatre and that you ought to be a mighty active member of that committee. As for how you can benefit by such activity, that's up to the smart showmen who know how to take advantage of situations as they arise and turn them, if not into profit, then away from direct losses to the house.

We urge every member and reader of the Club pages to give serious consideration to the George Washington Bi-Centennial Celebration and to become an important cog in your local committee's machinery.

TOM KANE RECEIVED PLENTY FREE SPACE FROM TOUGH EDITOR

Just prior to this writing we finished looking through a flock of tear sheets from a leading newspaper in Redwood City, Calif., and you can believe us when we tell you that Tom Kane, manager of the Sequoia Theatre there, certainly managed to get under a hardboiled editor's skin.

This newspaperman has the reputation of running a "no publicity" paper and maybe that does apply to straight out-and-out hokum. But when it came to publicizing a show for the Relief Fund to be held at the Sequoia he was there with both feet, front page and editorially. Day after day be plugged advice to all citizens to lend their support to the show, with the result that this theatre turned in the best showing of any house on the peninsula.

We venture to state that Kane's handling of the matter and his method of approach to this editor will get him more than the above in the long run. He made a friend out of this publisher by taking him down to a special screening of the program to be shown, and got him talking about some news-reel shots taken in and around Redwood City several years ago. In addition to plugging these he plugged the feature picture. Every time these were mentioned the theatre received free advertising in the most conspicuous spot in the paper. That's certainly worth something. More power to you, Tom, and continue to keep in touch with your old gang.

Notice to Members:

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.—THANK YOU.

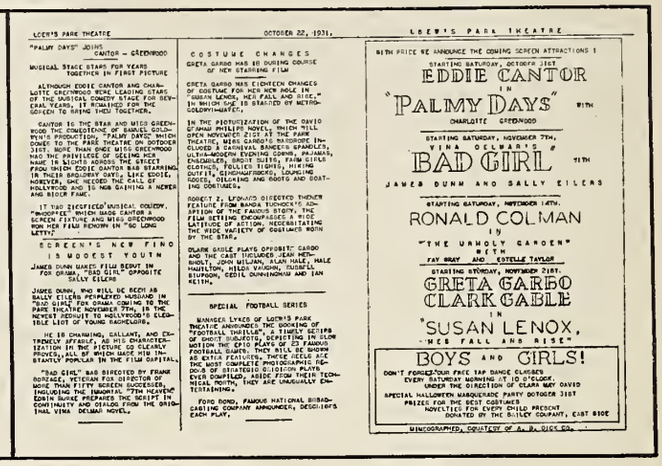
A GOOD SHOWMAN PLUS A MIMEOGRAPH!

Can Produce a Variety Of Attractive Programs, Heralds, Ad. Matter, Etc.

It is remarkable what one good showman plus one good mimeograph and a girl operator can produce in the way of attractive theatre programs, heralds and other advertising matter when a plan, such as adhered to by J. E. Lykes, manager of the Loew's Palace Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, is followed out. Not only have his experiments in this direction created an entirely different and novel effect but the printing cost to theatre has practically been eliminated by the plan in practice.

The only expense attached to the theatre for the turning out of the material is a small salary for the girl operator and cost of paper stock. The girl does her work in the theatre lobby on a machine promoted from the local mimeograph agency in lieu of the publicity received. The fact that the work is done in the lobby has also proved an interesting innovation to patrons.

On this page you will note a sample of the programs produced by this method. Note the character sketch of Cantor on the front cover. It is printed on deckle - edged stock of Nile green color and we believe you'll agree that the general effect is pleasing to the eye. The balance of the photograph shows the inside spread, devoted to notes for the fans and news of coming attractions. Again note the attractive typographical effect of a modernistic style type. A small credit line at the bottom of the third page states that the work was done by the mimeographing concern.



The other line cut shows a reproduction of one of 5,000 mimeographed handbills issued on "Susan Lenox," the bottom of which also carried an announcement of a midnight benefit show. These were distributed in city colleges and in parked cars. In connection with this particular picture the words "Ga-Ga" were plugged to quite an extent, the line "You'll Go Ga-Ga when you see Greta Garbo and Clark Gable in Susan Lenox" being much in evidence throughout the campaign. Local sandwich shops plugged "Ga-Ga" sandwiches and the soda fountains pushed "Ga-Ga" sundaes.

Other Examples

Other examples of mimeograph art are shown in the post-card sized card gotten out on "Bad Girl," on which occasion 6,000 were distributed at five football games, parked cars and on opening day of picture. This was in addition to distribution of 5,000 mimeographed letters and 10 very good window tie-ups in drug and book stores. Two silent teaser trailers were also used on this picture two and three weeks in advance, in addition to the regular trailer one week in advance. This picture had to be plugged hard in this community but the work put it over.

Front Cover.

Inside Spread.

Readers will also note another small photo showing the fore and aft views of a Baker Costume bally used on "Palmy Days," effective for five days at a cost of $1 per day. Twenty window tie-ups were secured for this picture in restaurants, bakeries, etc., using deluxe photos and cards. Mimeographed heralds were also given extensive distribution.

You have undoubtedly concluded by this time that Lykes has the mimeograph bug to a marked degree, but if you had the same opportunity as we to view a close-up of this material, we're sure that you would agree that he has hit upon something novel and economical in the way of theatre advertising.

Investigate

Just to prove it to yourselves, make a call upon your local mimeograph agency and find out just what these machines can accomplish in the matter of design. In the old days the mimeo was more or less limited to plain type matter but it is now possible to reproduce most any kind of caricature, likeness or design with striking effect. It is not even necessary to have a house artist sketch a design or face for these may be traced by a layman from material received from the exchange. You can send out your special a la mimeo or, as in Lykes' case, have your own theatre stationery dressed up with special and artistically designed head and margin.

We are indebted to Lykes for sending along samples of what he turned out on the mimeograph and also for his suggestions in connection with the mentioned pictures. Regarding the mimeographed matter, we feel sure that it will make a hit with any of our members who are tired of looking at the same old program, etc., and wish to strike a new and novel note in copy and advertising. If any further detail is desired Club headquarters will do its best to supply it, or, if the inquiry is addressed to Lykes at Cleveland, we feel sure that he will do his level best to send along the desired information.

JACOB GIVES BONUS TO STIMULATE IDEAS AMONG SERVICE STAFF

Much has been written about service organizations in various theatres, but little has been disclosed as to how ushers, doormen—in fact, the whole staff—are rewarded for their extra efforts in behalf of the theatre. It looks as though the answer to all this may be found in a policy recently adopted by A. M. Jacob, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Miss.

At a meeting held a few weeks ago it was decided that some form of bonus would be given each month to the person or persons advancing best suggestions at the staff meetings. Not that this particular staff is not heart and soul with theatre, but it is thought that a new impetus in the formulating of ideas and suggestions will result from the move, which, in turn, will increase patronage.

A most excellent move, we venture to state, and one that certainly will stimulate ideas and suggestions from all employees. Something tangible in the way of a reward is a stronger gesture than a pat on the back these days, and we always have believed that the theatre staff can be used, aside from regular duties, in a great many ways that will reflect profit to the theatre. But it's only fair that extra time and effort should be rewarded. Jacob has shown the way.

Roxy Patrons Vote!

In an effort to determine reaction of customers to its show program, the Roxy Theatre, New York City, has installed voting machines in the inner lobbies. From time to time the patrons will be asked what kinds of music they prefer, what type of stage attraction they like and whether or not the film offerings are satisfactory.

PERSONALITIES

R. J. CHILDERS, for the past two years manager of the Woodland Theatre, Woodland, Wash., for W. B. McDonald, of Eugene, has announced that he has secured complete control of the house.

HENNING PRESENTS EVIDENCE CO-OP IS POPULAR IN AFRICA

A communication from Bennie Henning, a Round Tabler located 'way over in Alice, C. P. South Africa, discloses that the Co-op ad has made its appearance in that section of the world.

Bennie Henning

A company recently opened the Metro Theatre in Port Elizabeth, Cape of Good Hope, and this was the occasion for promotion of a full-page co-op among business firms who had in some way contributed to the new house.

As to Bennie himself, he's keeping busily engaged with his job of operating shows in Alice, Seymour and Peddie, in addition to doing his level best to keep the Club informed on what's going on in show-business in his zone. There's one thing he doesn't have to worry about in his towns and that's opposition, for there isn't any. Hence, once a theatre becomes established patrons attend regularly and the use of advertising stunts are not at all necessary to help fill a house. As a matter of fact, Henning states that use of same on a few occasions acted contrary to expectations. In other sections of his country, however, where the competitive situation is keen, all kinds of stunts are much in vogue.

Henning is contemplating the installation of sound equipment for his theatres and we hope that he will find it practical to proceed with his plans. However, the business situation in general is much different where he is located and up to the present it has not justified the considerable expenditure. Maybe by the next time we've heard from him he will have taken the leap. In the meantime, we will look forward to receiving another interesting letter from this Round Tabler in far-off South Africa.

NEWSPAPER, MAYOR HELPED HOLTZ PUT OVER RELIEF SHOW

Taking into consideration the interest shown in civic affairs by Chas. Holtz, manager of the Del Paso Theatre, North Sacramento, Calif., it is not at all surprising to us that business men and newspapers of his community rallied to his support when it was announced that a benefit show would be staged for the Unemployment Relief Fund.

What could be sweeter balm to a theatre man than a banner head across the front page proclaiming in large bold type—"Go To The Del Paso Matinee Next Wednesday?" And then a two column lead story urging all citizens to contribute their bit to the general fund by attending the local benefit. Pictures of the Mayor, who endorsed the move, and of Charlie Holtz, were set alongside the story. In the amusement section of the paper other stories followed up the front page yarn.

The above is stressed because we have followed Holtz's activities in North Sacramento for quite a long time and have had many occasions to note his interest in community affairs and among business men. Whole-hearted support such as the above is an excellent example of what this sort of policy can produce in an emergency. Certainly, this is one of the best publicity breaks for a theatre we've seen in quite some time. More power to Charlie Holtz, and we'll be looking forward to hearing more about what he's doing out in his home town.

Landers in Dallas

Jim Landers, showman of San Antonio, Texas, who made the Aztec Theatre in that city one of the most talked-about houses in that section of the country, has exchanged jobs with William Lewis who has been at the helm of the Old Mill Theatre in Dallas, Texas. Reasons for the shift have not been advanced.

CAMPAIGN ON FOOTBALL PICTURE ONLY COST WALTMON $3.50

One of our new Club members, Burgess Waltmon, manager of the Warner-Grand Theatre, Fulton, Ky., recently captured the attention of his company's house organ "Carry On" with an account of a $3.50 campaign made on "Spirit of Notre Dame." A campaign for that amount is enough to make anybody sit up and take notice, so we'll play follow the leader and tell you how it was done.

Burgess Waltmon

The annual football game between Fulton and another town, when a boy in uniform paraded the side lines with a banner, was the opening wedge in the campaign. With the boy was a man with a megaphone ballyhooing the extraordinary merits of the production. Waltmon also made a talk before the School Assembly and urged everyone to attend a showing of the picture.

A boy in football togs carried a banner through the main streets with copy relating to the picture, and it was also arranged to have boys and girls, also togged out in football attire, ride through the town in a sporty auto, stopping at certain points to cheer. The theatre front was decorated with college streamers.

Exclusive of cards and heralds distributed in Fulton and nearby town the above set the house back only three bucks and a half, and it certainly looks like a lot of campaign for that much money. Waltmon is only 22 years old but has had considerable experience in show-business. We venture to state that he will keep on up the ladder. At any rate, we'll be looking forward to hearing from him again.

Depperman in Chicago

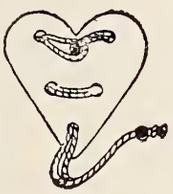
William Depperman, who has been in charge of publicity for the Broad Theatre, a Loew house in Columbus, Ohio, will act in a similar capacity for Warner houses in northern Indiana, working out of Chicago. A change of policy at Columbus gives Manager George Tucker of Loew's Ohio the additional supervision of the Broad.

LOBBY DANCING!

If your theatre boasts of a spacious lobby or foyer it may pay you to give some thought to the possibilities of running Lobby Dancing one night a week as a special attraction for the younger set of your town.

This has been proven a tremendous magnet for the box office and the building of good will for many a theatre and properly handled will do as much or more for you and your house.

Local orchestras can furnish the music; some prominent ladies organization can act as sponsors or chaperons, (this to cover any comeback at you) and the lobby can be dressed up by some nearby decorating company. None of these things should cost you anything at all. Promote them.



Refreshments can also be promoted if you can sell the idea.

BLOUIN DOING GOOD WORK IN CHARGE OF WARNER BROS. HOUSE

Before going to Washington, D. C., to engage in special work, Frank Boucher, a Warner territorial supervisor, had occasion to visit the Masonic Theatre in Clifton Forge, Va., and in line with his characteristic willingness to exploit budding genius, he contrived to see that the Club's attention was directed to a few samples of work turned out by Maurice Blouin, manager of the afore-mentioned house.

The accompanying reproduction of a display Blouin made for "Susan Lenox" and two others are said to have set the house back but $3.60. The latter consisted of an auto-rigged air-ship for "Dirigible" and a large replica of an opened book on "Bad Girl."

Maurice started his career in show-business in the art department in Washington and there's no doubt but that his former experience will help him over many a tough spot. Now that he's graduated to the post of manager, it is the Club's hope that he will do his share to contribute interesting slants on showmanship for these pages.

FEBRUARY—THE BIG MONEY MONTH!

Showmen who seek special occasions as a background for stimulating business, should enjoy the pleasant pastime of glancing through the possibilities of February.

They will find during next month the start of the nine month Washington Bi-Centennial Celebration, Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday, St. Valentine's Day, Col. Lindbergh's Birthday, Leap Year, and, an unusually large quota of historical dates which offer some good tie-up slants for smart showmen.

On the other hand they will also find that Ash Wednesday and the start of Lent gets under way as early as the 10th this year. Meaning that we will have an early Lent and consequently it will be over earlier than usual. Which is not such bad news. When Lent comes early in the year we get a chance to do some good business after Easter Sunday and before the first warm weather chases the cash customers out into the country.

Much activity can be concentrated during Lent to offset the usual falling off in business in those sections so affected. By planning those activities now you will avoid last minute rushes and the chances of being caught napping.

Cash is on the many money-making slants during February and make it the most profitable month of the season despite its shortage in days.

LEONARD FREID HAS WAY TO OBTAIN GOOD WILL FROM STUDENTS

One of the Club's recently elected members, Leonard Freid, manager of the Wisconsin Theatre, Eau Claire, Wis., has been trying out a scheme to gain the good will of high school students and it has worked out so nicely that we're passing it along for the benefit of those who may be similarly situated.

Out in his city there's a student publication by name of "The News," published weekly by the students. Freid contacted the superintendent of schools and sold him the idea of having a student review each week's attraction at his theatre, the review to be published in the paper. This goes to press on a Wednesday morning and about 1200 copies are circulated through the school by noon. The stunt has achieved the double purpose of giving the student experience in the reporting line and as a gainer of valuable publicity for the theatre.

While schools without newspapers will outnumber those with such organs, the value of such an arrangement will be clear to any Club member. If such an opportunity has been neglected we believe that it will pay to contact the head of any school that supports its own paper. The idea can be mainly sold as one that will advance a student along the path of journalism. Publicity among 1200 students who are able to pay adult admission, at the cost of one pass per week, would be considered cheap by many at a greater cost.

HAMPTON KNOWS HOW TO PROMOTE USEFUL GIVEAWAY ARTICLES

The promotional ability of Robert Hampton, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Gulfport, Miss., was again demonstrated recently when he arranged a deal with the local General Motors agency for the giveaway of a radio on Xmas night. From another firm he obtained a complete lady's ensemble and a man's suit, and from a music store he promoted still another radio.

As other gestures for the holiday season, he made arrangements for the wrapping of Xmas packages in suitable paper, with the additional free service of checking and mailing. Free coffee, supplied by a local company, was also served in the lobby, Of course, in order to participate, it was necessary for a person to be inside the theatre.

Hampton also has another "Gold Night" lined up and plans under way for the organization of a home talent show.

BURR PLAYED SANTA CLAUS AND COPS HAD TO HANDLE CHILDREN

When Frank R. Burr, of the Burr Theatre, Ludlow, Mass., planned his annual free show and donation of candy, etc., to approximately 1,400 children he did not anticipate the arrival of half again as many youngsters in front of his doors early on the morn of the event.

As soon as eight o'clock in the morning the kids started to line up in front of the door to secure admission to the theatre and shortly after ten o'clock the line-up resembled the gate of the Yankee stadium during a world series game. Traffic was blocked, police pushed around, windows were broken and general excitement reigned as those in the rear began a movement to reach Santa Claus in anticipation of a dearth of seats and candy. Brothers and sisters, separated in the general melee, searched vainly for their kin until a semblance of order was restored and about 500 surplus kids ranging from 2 to 14 years of age were politely but firmly informed that they were out of luck for the time being.

A news story and two three column cuts in a Springfield, Mass., newspaper testifies to the fact that a reporter was on the job the morning of the show and Burr's annual affair can certainly be described as a howling success, overflow or not.

DISPLAY FOR "BIG PARADE"

Photo above shows lobby display made for the sound revival of "Big Parade" by managers Ralph Allen and Les Patterson, of the Fox Mission Theatre in San Jose, Calif. Note the cut-out with anti-aircraft guns and the show case containing souvenirs supplied through a tie-up made with a local unit of the National Guard. Appropriate posters decorate the walls.

HOMER C. JONES is the head of the Jones Amusement Company, operating the Liberty and Rialto Theatres in Alva, Okla., and we take this occasion to acknowledge his application for membership in this organization. Prior to taking over control of these two theatres he managed them when both houses were part of the Momand Theatre Co. of Shawnee, Okla. He and Hollis Herod, about whose advertising work we'll tell you further in future issues, carry on show business in their town and we're mighty glad to list their names on the roster of this Club. We hope that both will become regular contributors to this department.

J. C. DUNN manages the Capitol Theatre in Tientsin, China, and thus the Round Table adds another representative in that far off land. Dunn's house was built only about a year ago and is operated under the jurisdiction of Continental Amusement Co., Ltd. We are glad to have him with us and know that his future communications regarding show-business in China will prove interesting to other members of this Club. If the Japs don't take over his house in the meantime, we hope to hear from him again in the near future.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. J. WOOD operates the Woods' Theatre in Cordele, Ga., and inasmuch as his membership application does not indicate any chain or circuit affiliations, it is assumed that he is the owner-manager of this house. Now that he has been accepted among this brotherhood of live-wire showmen, we'll expect to be kept regularly informed on what is going on in show-business down in Cordele.

ABIE BETER started as an usher six years ago to learn show-business and it is now our pleasure to record that he's holding down the job of assistant manager for Wm. G. Maute, manager of Maute's Theatre, Irwin, Pa. During his apprenticeship he gained wide experience in many phases of theatre operation. We'll depend upon him to keep the Club informed on what's going on down his way. Our regards to your boss, Abie, and tell him that we'd also like to hear from him.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES McDERMOTT is in charge of the American Theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., and he is also in line for introduction to his fellow showmen in this organization. He is located in a live show town and it will not be the fault of Club headquarters if some interesting slants on show-business are not broadcast concerning Mack's way of selling attractions. We will look forward to hearing from him again in the near future.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MARVIN J. STOCKWELL has the job of assisting I. Weinshienk with the management of the Palace Theatre in Peoria, Ill. He is 20 years old, has been with this theatre about three years and was promoted to his present position. Before going with the Palace he acted as assistant manager at the Apollo Theatre, also in Peoria. We are glad to list Stockwell as another new member of this organization and hope that he will contribute his share of show-tips for these pages.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RICHARD SALKIN is located out in Jackson Park, Chicago, where he stands at the helm of the Jackson Park Theatre, a link in the Midwest Theatre Circuit. The Club welcome is also extended to this new Round Tabler and we'll be anticipating word on what is going on in show-business in his section of the Windy City. There are a host of fellow Club members out in your town, Dick, so tell 'em hello whenever you happen to meet.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK HARRIS is the general manager of five community houses down in Atlanta, Ga., and he makes his headquarters at the Palace Theatre. Theatres under his supervision are part of the Lucas & Jenkins circuit and all average about 500 seating capacity. With this source of material to draw upon Harris should be in a position to send along many a valuable show tip to his fellow showmen and now that he's one of us we'll be looking for results.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. D. McLAUGHLIN manages the Royal Theatre in Marengo, Ill., a house with no chain or circuit affiliations. He is another recently elected member of the Round Table Club and we're glad to include his name among the several thousands showmen who have already joined this organization. Shoot along some of your ideas, Mack, and we'll pass them along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. J. BOFFERDING is house manager of the St. Clair Theatre, a Publix house at St. Paul, Minn., and at this writing he also becomes a member of this organization. The St. Clair is a tri-weekly change house, a policy which should provide Bofferding with plenty of excitement. We hope that he will tell us all about this in future communications.

FRANCIS N. ANDARY has been reading over Club pages and thinks he'd like to become an active member of this go-getting, live-wire organization. That's okay, Francis, now that we have your application at hand, and all you have to do to qualify is to keep headquarters informed about what you are doing to sell your shows. The fact that you have considerable opposition in your town ought to keep you on your toes and be productive of ideas that will keep seats filled in your house. Let us hear about what you are doing to get your share of the business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ABE WASSERMAN has the job of assisting R. L. Daniels with the management of the Olympia Theatre in Lynn, Mass. The Olympia has a new set-up as far as management is concerned, and Abe is one of the aggressive members of the present organization. He is 22 years old and is well on his way in show-business. We hope he will keep the Club duly informed on what's going on.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. E. HART is the general manager of Smith & Hart Theatres, with headquarters at Auburn, Ind. Along with his application for membership in this ever-growing army of showmen from all parts of the country, he sent a couple of suggestions which will be dwelt upon in the near future. Hart is in an excellent position to continue contribution of live show-selling ideas to his fellow showmen, and now that he is one of the gang we hope that he will avail himself of the opportunity. If there are others in his organization qualified to join the Club, we'd also like to hear from them.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

S. P. ROMAN hails from Benld, Ill., where he operates the Grand Theatre. He also appears to be an owner-manager, since data at hand does not show any hook-up with a chain or circuit. We are glad to include his name among this great army of showmen and hope that this new Round Tabler will take time to let his fellow showmen know what methods he's using to keep the wolf away these days. Shoot along some ideas, Roman, and we'll see that the other boys are tipped off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN L. CROVO manages the Palace Theatre, a large Sparks house in Jacksonville, Fla. At this writing he, too, becomes a full fledged member of this ever-growing army of Round Tablers, and now that he's one of us we'll be looking forward to receipt of some real live show tips to pass along to the rest of the gang. How's business down your way this season, John? Drop us a line and let the boys know what has been going on.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. W. McCARTHY is located down in Forsyth, Ga., where he operates the Forsyth Theatre. We also have his membership application at hand, and from all indications is another owner-manager to become affiliated with this organization of showmen. His house is a small one but is equipped with all the latest gadgets to give patrons the best in picture presentation. We'll be looking forward to hearing about what Mack is doing to keep all seats filled.

MUSIC AND TALENT

Warner Recasting Music Companies; Morris in Charge

Warner Brothers this week is reducing the personnel of Remick Music Corporation. Only five to ten of the present employees will be retained. The saving in overhead effected by this, together with the rent saved by moving the Remick offices into the Witmark headquarters next door is expected to amount to from $3,000 to $5,000 a week.

Edward (Buddy) Morris, in charge of Warner music firms, will take over the active operation of the Remick company as well as that of Witmark. Joe Keit, president of Remick, who still has three years to go on his contract, it is understood, will no longer be active in the firm.

It is reported also that the professional department of Harms, Inc., with Will Rockwell as its head, will take the offices vacated.

Davis, Coots and Engel Now Alone in Radio Music Corp.

The Radio Music Corporation now has but one member left of the three music publishers under its wing for the past two years. The one remaining company is Davis, Coots and Engel, Inc. Harry Engel, general manager, is now in charge of the firm, Benny Davis and J. Fred Coots having turned back their share of the business.

Feist and Fischer are now under control of their original owners.

Worth Theatre Stage Show Return Brings Musicians

The Worth theatre at Fort Worth, Texas, has taken on Fanchon & Marco Ideas units and will play them Sunday to Tuesday each week. The house also has signed contracts with union musicians and stagehands, and a 15-piece orchestra is in the pit, conducted by Hyman Maurice. Fort Worth has been without stage shows since RKO withdrew vaude from the Majestic last winter. The Worth is a Publix stand that has been dark for the past two years.

Murray, Mary Brian on Stage

Ken Murray, Radio featured comedian, is teaming with Mary Brian in a vaudeville tour which opens in St. Louis on January 29.

Acts Go Over in Midwest

Experiments with the return of vaudeville to a number of Chicago neighborhood houses have been so successful that many are making a regular feature of stage acts on certain days each week.

Miss Dressler On Air

Jeanette MacDonald, Marie Dressler and Everett Marshall, operatic baritone, headed a radio program from New York, St. Louis and Los Angeles on January 9 over an NBC-WEAF network.

CHICK CASTLE

Everyone in the music business has heard of "The Beau Brummell of Boul Mich." Well, here he is, in a very good likeness. Chick has been in the music business in the Windy City for the last 10 or so years and has been Western manager and representative for nearly all the big music firms. For the past year, he has been Western manager of Abe Oleman's fast-growing firm, the Oleman Music Corporation. This handsome young fellow is responsible for the firm's success in the Middlewest. Chick has two "vices" and they are "nifty" clothes and collecting of smoking pipes.

George E. Stone, character actor, is on tour in RKO theatres, appearing this week at the Fordham and Coliseum in upper New York.

Joe Brown on Stage At Frisco Alcazar

Joe E. Brown is at the Alcazar Theatre, San Francisco, in a stage version of "Square Crooks." Joe is one of America's leading comedians and is so good he gets a laugh out of his own jokes. He came into town carrying a flock of umbrellas and when asked why he came to the Sunshine City so well fortified, said that Los Angeles sold more umbrellas than any other city in the world.

"They believe down there that it is raining everywhere, except in Los Angeles," he said. "It's a matter of civic pride to sell every outbound traveler an umbrella. People were going around there in rowboats when I left, but you didn't read about it in the papers."

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending January 14

The Boris Petroff stage-production this week is entitled "Variations," and features Bing Crosby, who is on his 10th week here, and Ruth St. Denis and her ballet.

Show opens with a snappy modern dance by the St. Denis ballet as Frances Faye, whose silhouette is seen on scrim, plays "I've Got Rhythm." After the dance Miss Faye, seated at a grand piano, plays an especially "hot" rendition of "Minnie the Moocher." This particular number is cleverly staged, with a darkened stage and a tiny pin spot on Miss Faye's face, as she sings and plays. The Michon Brothers, comedy sailors click with their routine of hokum and tumbling. Their work, though not extremely difficult is most dangerous and extremely laughable. Miss St. Denis and her ballet in flowing robes offer a Grecian barefoot dance which is presented beautifully and artistically. Weber and Wilton, ventriloquists offer an act of comedy talk and singing that is of the first water and an act which has the audience wondering just who is doing the talking or singing and when. Their act was perfect for this house (or any house) and their reception was great.

Crosby, who was greeted with a fine hand at his entrance, offers as his part of the program, the singing of "Let's Talk it Over, Dear," first, alone in a pin spot and then "You Try Somebody Else" and "River Stay 'Way from My Door," with Frances Faye accompanying with hot rhythms on the piano. Special lyrics for the second chorus are sung both by Miss Faye and then by Bing. After good applause, Crosby announces that Miss St. Denis and her Ballet will offer her well-known Javanese "Nautch" dance. The entire number is beautiful and most gracefully performed but as a finale for a stage show it is most weak.

While this week's stage show is billed as Fanchon and Marco's "Jan-Pansie Idea" and has a Japanese setting, it is truly international in character, with Chinese, Japanese and whites performing in a different spirit than is being manifested in Manchuria.

The setting is brilliant and centers around a high, curved Japanese bridge in cerise, against jade green temples and shrines. The show opens with Jue Fong, Chinese tenor, singing selections from "Madame Butterfly" as the bridge and flower girls slowly come into view.

Jue Fong acts as master of ceremonies and introduces the Eno troupe of Japanese equilibrists, consisting of Papa and Mama Eno and three sprightly offspring. Their juggling of parasols and barrels, with the feet in almost perfect unison, wins a lot of well-merited applause. A young girl member of the family scales a tier of boxes and goes through with a gymnastic turn that proves breath taking.

The Sunkist Beauties appear throughout the show in the role of geisha girls and do three dances, each carefully worked out. They appear first as flower girls and later appear in coolie costume, doing a dance after piling painted boxes to form a pictorial pyramid. Their third dance is done with parasols, with which they produce novel effects, even simulating the ricksha, so common in the Orient.

Dorothy Crocker, control dancer, offers a novel number in which she goes through graceful steps and covers the entire stage on but one foot, a real test of nerve and muscle. She is an artist in a form of dancing seldom seen.

Frank Galy adds the desired touch of comedy with a ventriloquist act in which he employs a lively line of chatter and makes use of the usual dummy. He has a plant in the gallery and gets a lot of laughs with his witty sallies, some of which seem extemporaneous.

To show his versatility, Jue Fong sings "La Donna Mobile," from "Rigoletto," and then announces that he will offer a number in his native tongue. This proves to be "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," but the singer explained that no deception was intended, as he is an American-born Chinese.

The show ends with the line girls forming figures with colored parasols and the entire company on the stage. It is good entertainment, with well balanced acts.

The Christensen Brothers and two unbilled girls start the New Year vaude bill with a bang. Their ballroom and soft-shoe hoofing is well above the average, while the acrobatic and toe work is also well done. They did some clever whirlwind dances that sent them off with several bows.

Ray Hughes and his partner Pam were seen in the deucer and they offered some fairly good clowning with a hat that brought the laughs. The girl's song number drew a weak hand.

Bernard and Henri, two girl songbirds, with one at the piano, sang "Through With Love" and a new one entitled "When Better Men are Made." These "Kate Smiths" know how to put over their wares in a likeable manner.

In the closing frame, Joe Laurie, Jr., and his company of "nieces" and "nephews" were almost a show-stop. Laurie introduced Henrietta as one of his nieces; she is a classy tap and toe stepper. Next came Frankie, another relative, who crooned "Wabash Moon" in perfect order. Then Junior introduced Jay, Jimmy and Willie, all expert hoofers and tapsters.

All house records are being broken this week, due to a great feature picture and a great 5-act vaudeville program, with Johnny Perkins, rotund comedian, doing the m.c'ing. The 5-act bill will be the usual offering henceforth and it is apparent that five snappy, fast working acts is what the audience want. Due to the heavy demand for seats, the entire bill has been held over for an entire week, and is still packing them in.

Phyllis Rae and Her Ambassadors open the bill with some mediocre singing and some very fine dancing. Miss Rae does one number alone, that is out-standing, the rest of her work being done with eight hard-working hoofers. The balance of the show is in the capable hands of that irrepressible comedian, Johnny Perkins, who introduces each act in that inimitable way of his, which has been the delight of every audience in front of whom he has worked. In the deucer, the Neal Sisters go over big with their pleasing three-part harmony singing of blues ballads. Millard and Marlin, with Miss Marlin doing the dumb bit, get plenty of laughs with their cross-fire gags and comedy singing. The Rath Brothers offer a "Study in Endurance," which includes feats of strength and balancing. Their work is done in a most nonchalant and showmanly fashion. Their impromptu bit in which they use Johnny Perkins as "anchor" man is the most hilarious bit of foolishness, but one of the most amusing this reviewer has ever witnessed. Perkins' own act, in which he features Ruth Petty and two of the Neal Sisters as piano accompanists and Richard Montgomery closes this fine bill.

Miss Petty opens the act with a beautiful rendition of some real blues singing, which not only earns her a tremendous hand but stops the show and forces her to encore. Her numbers include "What Is It?" "No Account Anymore," and "Shine on Harvest Moon." Perkins, after getting the audience in a laughable mood by telling them gags and talking to them in that intimate manner of his, sings "Two-Ton Tessie," in a way to make everyone forget their troubles. The tremendous applause accorded him necessitated an encore and Johnny satisfied them by singing a "natural" for him called "On Riverside Drive." Believe it or not, the pathos of the second chorus, (spoken in conversation style) reached deep into many of the hearts listening to him and caused plenty of tears. Fortunately Perkins is a smart showman and had them in a happy mood again very shortly by "broadcasting" that happy and infectious smile of his and turning the full force of his humor on them with "rare" chatter. Richard Montgomery, a young colored boy, whom Perkins discovered stops the show with his singing of "Roses of Picardy," and "Irish Eyes." He encores with "Two Hearts," which he sings beautifully in German. The act closes with the singing of "Harvest Moon," first by the Neal Sisters, then by Ruth Petty and finally by Johnny and the entire company.

The chorus members are attired as stage door Johnnies in the opening episode of Fanchon and Marco's "Stage Door" Idea. They wear silk toppers and carry canes, while their interest is centered on Constance Evans, who is attired in white and dances in a very creditable manner.

Harney and Connors dance, sing and clown in a slap-stick style, but they click, nevertheless.

For the next episode the chorus is attired in red evening gowns with red head dresses to match. Vina Zolle sings "Red, Red Roses," while the chorus performs. They give way to Miss Evans, who again demonstrates her ability at kicking. Incidentally, Miss Evans of "Believe It or Not Fame" broke her record of 47 high kicks in 29 seconds while at the Wisconsin. Her new record is 48 kicks in 27 seconds.

Webster and Marino tumble about in lively fashion, the one member of the team offering a burlesque bit of toe dancing. They are followed by Bob Hall, who makes songs to order. He sings numerous ditties and wisecracks and then asks members of the audience for any word or word combinations which will lend themselves to a song. After he has collected approximately a dozen, he sings his selection incorporating the words asked for. He gets a big hand.

For the finale, Miss Zolle sings "Masquerade," while the chorus engages in a striking number in which all costumes change under ultra-violet lights. Before the lights are switched on, the chorus has a rather natural appearance except for facial masks. With the lights, however, they have the appearance of Zulus and they keep time with wooden clappers.

"Aloha," the Fanchon and Marco Idea current at the Denver, is one of those stage units that has little entertainment value, yet runs along so smoothly that the audience does not notice it. The Hawaiian and steamship stage setting offered excellent excuse for a flashy line, but the unit had to do its best without the usual dozen Sunkist beauties.

Two girls, Gaylene and Du Rayne, risk breaking their backs with fast acrobatics. The Briants, two men, put on their pantomime with one of them acting the dummy. Al Gordon put his dogs through a series of slow maneuvers and tricks. This act should be cut in half. Ryan and Noblette, with their chatter and songs, fill in for a few minutes. The act is closed with the headliners, the Four Kadex, who perform on trapezes, doing some strong arm and whirling acts.

ORGAN SOLOS

BANKS KENNEDY (Stamford Palace). The new "Master of Melody" at this house is working right up to his audiences and is succeeding in doing very well, for the short time he has been here. This week he presented a resume of hits of 1931, introducing them, orally thru mike, and extremely novelly as "Gems out of the Jewel Case of 1931." The organ console was artistically decorated in white and silver, with the word "Jewels" displayed prominently in sparkling silver letters. Banks started the program off by leading the audience in the singing of "You Call it Madness," "Out of Nowhere," "99 out of a 100," "Love Letters," and "Why Dance?" Kennedy showed himself to possess a rare sense of humor and his witticisms between songs got plenty laughs and applause. He sings one number himself in a pleasing voice and the audience do their share to assist him in the balance of the numbers.

BETTYE LEE TAYLOR (Schenectady Proctor's) presented an outstanding organ novelty for the holiday season which was exceptionally beautiful and artistic, and one of the best this popular organist has offered while at this house. The solo opens to a dark house with blue light on drummer in pit, who is playing chimes. The spot then shifts to the stage, lighting a trumpeter, who plays "Adeste Fidelis," unaccompanied. On the last note, a violinist spotted in an upper box plays a cadenza. The spot then discovers Miss Taylor at the organ console, robed in black cassock. The organ sounds as if it were voices in the distance, and the violinist accompanies Miss Taylor in a Christmas carol. A young girl then sings "Silent Night," with both the organ and some of the band accompanying her. This solo was so enthusiastically received that it was presented over the radio and also repeated on another of Bettye Lee's programs. The unique and artistic organ presentations Miss Taylor originates put her in a high class and are responsible for her great popularity.

BILL MEEDER (Richmond Hill RKO) recently presented a most clever organ novelty called "Radio Ravings," which was built around popular radio broadcasts and made use of a number of singable tunes. Special lyrics, to popular songs introduced and explained the workings of the solo. This opened with a special to "Faded Love," and went into a singing chorus of "Save the Last Dance for Me," a special to "Moon Comes over Mountain," comedy choruses of "Comin' Round the Mountain," a special to "Voice of the RKO," special on "Shine on Harvest Moon," regular chorus on "Ida, Sweet as Apple Cider," lisping chorus on "Good Night Sweetheart," special to "Guilty," and a final chorus on "Time to Fall in Love." Audience reaction most favorable, novelty very good, Organists's work clean cut, staccato and altogether excellent. The original counter-melodies this fellow incorporates in his playing make his work a pleasure to hear.

OVERTURES

RUBINOFF (New York Paramount) and the Paramount Orchestra offered a compilation of Spanish airs, this week, entitling it "Spanish Sketches," and featuring a smartly played violin rendition of "Ramona" by Rubinoff. The clever arrangements and the syncopated rhythms of this orchestra, under Rubinoff's amazing leadership and showmanship have gained him and his orchestra an enviable position in the music world.

CASTRO CARAZO (New Orleans Publix Saenger) takes the place of Lou Forbes at the conductor's stand during the second week of the latter's recuperation from broken ribs, and offers a three part overture, which opens with the trio finale from "Faust." The ballet music of the opera follows, Mr. Carazo taking a tempo here which is not exactly orthodox but which was liked by the audience. The second offering was Carazo's own composition, "Baby," a tango with the blue chord motif, and a catchy, rhythmic melody. The orchestra closed with "Dinah," featuring Louis Prima, who trumpets and sings in the Louis Armstrong manner stopping the show. Carazo's return to the Saenger pit after an absence of over a year brought him heavy applause. He's both a clever showman and musician.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee, Wisconsin) and the Wisconsin theatre orchestra offer "Comparisons." The first selection is "Thais," featuring Roy Brown, violinist, three violinists from the orchestra, the pianist and the organ presided over by Jack Martin, in a pleasing combination. As a comparison, the orchestra plays "Kickin' the Gong Around," with an enterprising male singer presenting the vocal accompaniment.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) leads his orchestra through an enjoyable rendition of "A Kreisler Symphony," played with genuine taste and feeling. The number includes selections from "Caprice Viennois," "Liebesfreud," "Liebeslied," "The Old Refrain" and other Fritz Kreisler favorites, with the characteristic Walt Roesner symphonic ending. Joaquin Garay, vocalist, offers a topical number, "Time On My Hands."

NICK MARINARO (Astoria Triboro) presented a pleasing overture entitled "Radio Echoes" which earned for him and his fine orchestra heavy applause from this music loving audience. Songs featured in it were: "Moonlight and Roses," Toselli's "Serenade," "Deep in My Heart," "Dancing Tambourine," and a special arrangement from "Faust," for the grand finale. The variations and different styles in which the numbers were played were very good, and the orchestra is ably directed by Marinaro. The connection between the title of the overture and the numbers offered is vague to this reviewer but one title probably is as good as another.

BENJAMIN KLASMER (Baltimore Hippodrome) directed his orchestra in Duke Ellington's "Mood Indigo," with novelty effects. After the first few bars, three trumpeters played one motif in a blue spot with muted instruments. Throughout the piece Klasmer was in a white spot. After the three trumpeters finished, the tempo was gradually jazzed with the finish being performed by the three trumpeters again with blares and in a white spot.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 107

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 113—(A) What extremely important factor enters into all electrical action problems, particularly as concerns the production of light by electrical action? (B) Does the floor of the crater of an electric arc present a surface of even luminosity? Give us your reasons for answering as you do. (C) At the spot, the image of the crater floor, or other light source, is wrong side up. Explain fully why this is so.

Bluebook School Question No. 107 was: "(A) Of what main elements does the RCA sound amplifying equipment consist? (B) May all systems of sound recording (35-mm.) be reproduced and projected on RCA equipment? (C) Tell us, so far as you are able, the chief points of difference as between WE and RCA equipment."

For some reason there were not so many answers to this series of questions as usual. They dropped well below 500, I don't know why. Also the correct answers were low. Here are those who answered acceptably (asterisks indicating especially complete replies):

G. E. Doe*, Herman B. Billings*, Lester Borst*, Van Buskirk and Kroll*, Roy J. Arnston*, Evans and Rau*, Lewis A. Goldman*, D. R. Robbins, William Boregt, Bill Doe*, Pat O'Brien*, James McGuire, Henry Edwards*, T. Wylie, W. D. Samuels, T. Van Vaulnekburg*, Will Peck, Andy Bailey, John Williams, Thomas Rodney, Harry Lidding, George A. Artley, Frank D. True (that "D" should be a "B," Frank), Larry James*, D. Hotaling, J. T. Loat, D. Cole, Frank Peters, Tom Turk, Dan Peters, George Thompson*, Andrew McPherson, Frank Oliver, Richard L. Lomax, John Flynn, Lon T. Grady, F. G. Caton, J. Young and S. R. Anderson.

I had little choice as between those carrying an asterisk, so I laid them all together and pulled one out of the pile. It was by Henry Edwards, who says:

"(A) The essential parts of the RCA system are (1) The variable area sound track, (2) the exciting lamp, (3) the exciting lamp optical train, (4) the slit, (5) the sound gate aperture and accompanying assembly, (6) the fader, (7) the photoelectric cell, (8) the necessary amplifiers, (9) the volume control, (10) the storage battery, (11) transformers, (12) the loud speakers and the necessary tubes, etc.

"(B) All systems of sound recorded on 35-mm. film may be reproduced and projected with RCA equipment without any changes or alterations in the equipment.

"(C) The principal points of difference between the two systems are the recording, which is variable density with WE, and variable area with RCA. The faders of the two systems differ in that with WE volume is controlled, within certain limits, by the fader, whereas with RCA, the fader is used only to change sound from one projector to the other. The loud speakers (sound projectors) are placed differently in the two systems, also they are of a different type.

"The photoelectric cells used in the two systems operate essentially the same, but are differently constructed. The driving motor and control of its speed are quite different. The slits are of somewhat different dimensions, and the sound gate assemblies are not the same. WE employs a pickup amplifier, whereas RCA does not.

The amplifying equipment of the two systems present wide differences. The exciting lamp mounting and compartments are not at all similar.

"I do not understand that you wish each item of difference described in detail, which would consume much space, but that we merely indicate what the principal points of difference are."

That is quite correct, Friend Edwards. I would take several pages to set the differences forth in all their details.

Motor Control Box Problem

From Barney Devietti, assistant projectionist at the Strand theatre in Helper, Utah, comes this remarkable letter—remarkable when it is considered that Helper is a small town away out in the mountains of Utah, just at the foot of Castle Gate. When small town projectionists are able to make intelligent discussions of such matters as this, things are certainly looking up. Mr. Devietti says:

"In the first section of the answer of the Bluebook School, Question No. 122, the December 5th issue, you asked, "What is the critical frequency of the motor control box tuned circuit?" The published answer was by Lester Von Bushkirk, who places the critical frequency at 720 cycles.

"In my opinion, the critical or resonant frequency is not 720 cycles, and I will set forth my reasons for that conclusion. I would appreciate any comment you might see fit to make. If I am wrong, I will be just that much ahead by knowing the correct answer. If I am right, every other Bluebook student will benefit in the way of added information.

"If the critical frequency of the motor control box be 720 cycles, what would happen if the motor should pick up speed slightly? As you know, if this should happen, the tuned circuit would immediately offer resistance to the current passing through it, because when the motor speeds up, the alternator attached to its shaft will, of course, generate a current of higher frequency. Assuming that the motor starts to speed up, by reason of this added resistance to the current, less current will flow through the tuned circuit. This will of course operate to reduce the bias on the grids of the two tubes which supply d.c. to the double choke, and because of this, more d.c. will flow in the choke. Therefore the counter e.m.f. in the first coil of the choke will be reduced, whereupon more current will flow in the armature coils, hence the motor will continue to speed up. That, it seems to me, would be the result if the critical frequency be exactly 720 cycles.

"As I have already said, it is my opinion that the tuned circuit is tuned to resonate at just below 720 cycles, in which case the motor will be slowed down if it tends to speed up. The following are my reasons for this statement:

"When the motor is running at its normal 1,200 r.p.m., the alternator will be generating current at a frequency just below 720 cycles. Now if the motor should start to speed up, the generator will soon generate current at 720 cycles, which current will flow through the tuned circuit and therefore the bias on the grids of the rectifier tubes will be increased while, d.c. flowing in the choke will be decreased. As a result of all this, the motor speed will be checked before it gets too much above normal speed. Maybe I am all wet, but, Rich, what do you think about it?"

I read your letter to several very eminent projection and sound men, none of whom were certain whether you were right or wrong. I then referred it to the Erpi engineering department, whose reply I will now lay before you:

"I find Mr. Barney Devietti's letter of December 11, rather interesting as it is indicative of the increasing interest of projectionists in one of our most complex pieces of equipment.

"However, Mr. Devietti's ingenious explanation of the manner in which the control cabinets work is based upon insufficient data. The 'bridge' in the 708-A Control cabinet is resonant to 720 cycles. A brief summary as to how the bridge circuit works will I think show Mr. Devietti that an explanation involving a resonant frequency other than 720 cycles is unnecessary. Please note that the resonant frequency of 720 cycles per second involves the electrical constants of the bridge circuit. It will not always be true that the generator frequency under operating conditions is exactly 720 cycles but may differ very slightly from that value depending on the load imposed upon the motor. The regulation of this generator frequency and, of course, the speed of the motor is only plus or minus .1% due to the very efficient controlling action of the cabinet.

"The following cursory explanation may put Mr. Devietti on the right track. For a detailed analysis of this piece of equipment, we suggest that reference be made to our Equipment Bulletin 706-A, 708-A Control Cabinets. The elements of the 708-A Control Cabinet are so adjusted that with an average load on the motor, the motor speed is 1,200 r.p.m., and the generator frequency is 720 cycles per second. Under this condition, the resonant bridge circuit element—the D-87169 retard coil and associated condenser—is equivalent to a pure resistance of 1,293 ohms. This value is the same as the other resistance element of the bridge. There is, therefore, no voltage across transformer T-2. The bias voltage of vacuum tube V-4, and other circuit elements, have been previously adjusted so that a voltage across T-2 is ordinarily needed only for control purposes. This point was apparently unknown to Mr. Devietti.

"In regard to the way the 'bridge' acts when the frequency is not 720 cycles, it may be sufficient to point out here that while the impedance of the D-87169 retard coil is increased both above and below 720 cycles, the 'phase' of the impedance is exactly opposite above and below 720 cycles. This causes a reversal of current in the transformer T-2 above and below the critical frequency. This determines the direction of the corrective action, that is, whether the motor speed will be increased or decreased."

The letter is signed by P. T. Sheridan, equipment manager.

LIGHTING THE THEATRE ENTRANCE

Thomas L. Berwin of Boston, Mass., writes asking for information as to the lighting of the entrance hall and foyer of a theatre, and also says:

"I own a string of five theatres located in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. I am about to add a sixth and want your advice. I have read your writings for many years and never yet have lost out through following your advice, which is more than I can say about the advice of others. I might add that I provide the projection room of each of my theatres with your Handbooks and require my projectionists to supply me with an answer to each of the 'Bluebook School' questions. I then compare their answers with the one published and have my secretary notify, in kindly fashion, any man who fails in any question, that his failure has been noted.

"And now for the question: My architect wants to light the entrance hallway and space back of the seats in the new house rather brightly. There will be heavy drapes from ceiling to floor at the rear of the seating space. He says if the hallway (16 feet wide by 30 feet long) be brightly lighted, I may use the wall spaces not otherwise occupied for artistic advertisements of coming shows, etc., and that patrons will prefer the space back of the seats well lighted rather than in semi-darkness. Please, Mr. Richardson, tell me what your own views are in this matter."

May I first thank Mr. Berwyn for the kindly esteem in which he holds my past work. It has been far from perfect, but at least I have tried hard to give real service, in so far as I was able. I think his analysis of the effect of his course with regard to the "Bluebook School" is correct.

As to Berwyn's question concerning lighting his new theatre, it is suggested that he refer this matter to Better Theatres, which has a department devoted to theatre planning. However, it seems to me that the architect is in error, and that it would be better to have the hallway lighted only just enough to enable patrons coming in to see with reasonable clearness, and that the space at the rear of the seating might well be quite dimly lighted—just a little brighter than the auditorium proper.

"Heard other portable sound equipments, up to more than double the price, and I must say, truthfully, that results with the HOLMES were so far superior that there is no comparison. Dialogue clear and distinct, no muffled tones and one very noticeable feature, there was no rushing or roaring of sound reproduction."

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Reinforcing an Exhibitor Protest

Reinforcing a statement of protest made by Langdon R. Barhyt of B. & K. Enterprises, New Franklin theatre at Springfield, Mass., regarding a theatre merchandising plan, L. B. Jones, vice president of Eastman Kodak Company, writes the HERALD as follows:

"In the December 5th, 1931, issue of the Motion Picture Herald appeared a communication from Langdon R. Barhyt, of the New Franklin theatre, Springfield, Mass., regarding the activities of a firm known as Manufacturers Products, Inc., of Detroit, Michigan. We wish to state that Eastman Kodak Company has absolutely no connection with said firm or with any other firm distributing merchandise free under any coupon scheme. During the past year or two we have received a great many complaints from various parts of the country regarding alleged representations by firms of this nature, of a connection with the Eastman Kodak Company. We strongly urge all persons who may be solicited by such firms that before signing any contract or paying any money in reliance upon the firm's connection with Eastman Kodak Company, they write to Eastman Kodak Company at Rochester, N. Y., for confirmation."

Mr. Barhyt, in his letter, had said in part:

"Several weeks ago a salesman representing himself as connected with the Gillette Safety Razor Company, the Barr Rubber Company of Sundusky, Ohio, the Eastman Kodak Company of Buffalo, New York, the Underwood Flashlight Company and several other concerns of lesser importance approached us with a proposition to distribute their merchandise gratis for the advertising they would receive from same. He told how Eastman gave away 100,000 cameras free last year for the revenue he would later derive from films the user might purchase and said that this year these concerns had all gotten together to give their merchandise away through the theatres.

"The plan as outlined by him cost the theatre absolutely nothing after 10 per cent of the free coupons (to be given away by the theatres) had been redeemed. The patrons of the theatres were to save these coupons and when they had received 50, mail same to any of these associated concerns and receive free either a shaving set, a camera, a flashlight or other merchandise at outlined. . . .

"Upon receipt of the first shipment of coupons and goods, we find that the deal as represented by the salesman and what we received are two totally different affairs. The free gratis merchandise just isn't and the coupons are no good to the customers unless they purchase additional merchandise from the different concerns.

"Several others, exhibitors also, signed contracts and law suits are now being arranged against the concern who does business under the name of the Manufacturers' Products, Inc., of Detroit, Mich."

THE ROXY MARQUEE DISPLAY

I REALIZE THAT THIS IS NOT THE most ethical thing for a new member of the Managers' Round Table to do, but I must disagree with an article which appeared in the January 2nd issue of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The article in question is the one concerning the marquee display of the Roxy theatre, New York.

True, the Roxy is a motion picture house. However, much money is devoted to their stage presentations which, by the way, are second to none. Considering the expense involved, I see no reason why the stage shows should not receive equal billing with the pictures. This, as you will notice in their advertising in various newspapers, is just what is being done.

There are, nevertheless, exceptions. When the Roxy runs a picture of great renown or importance, it receives far more advertising than the stage show shown in conjunction. If the case is reversed, however, I see no reason why it is poor showmanship to plug the stage show.

Remember, I am by no means attempting to say "Delicious" is a poor picture. Quite to the contrary, I think it is an unusually fine one. Nor am I trying to say Gaynor and Farrell are not great box-office names. Universally, they will do far more to help the b.o. than names like Etting, Mills Bros., or Bowman.

On Broadway, however, the situation is different. Names like Ruth Etting, 4 Mills Brothers and Patricia Bowman will outdraw Gaynor and Farrell on every turn. This, undoubtedly, was the management's viewpoint when they placed the names in as conspicuous and advantageous position, as they did.

Again I say, true, the Roxy is a motion picture house, but if plugging a stage show more than your picture will give you a bigger house, then plug your stage show. That's showmanship if it brings in the shekels. And that's what is happening at the Roxy.

I hope you see my point of view and if you do, I am sure you will change your ideas concerning the showmanship involved.

With best wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year and continued success of your HERALD.—JEROME M. LAYTON, Assistant Manager, Mosholu Theatre, 270 East 204th street, Bronx, N. Y. (Transferred from Tuxedo Theatre.)

92 Christmas Baskets

GOOD WILL FOR THE GLOBE THEAtre and the Scranton district. When the Christmas holiday season seemed bound to be saddened because of so much distress, it occurred to me that I might be able to give happiness to some poor families and at the same time bring good will to our Paramount Publix organization. Christmas baskets full of good things to eat for the whole family! How to promote them?

A week before Christmas I started the idea. Thursday and Friday nights I allowed free admission to children who brought articles of food valued over the price of admission (ten cents). The result was very satisfactory; in fact my office looked like a chain store. Then I promoted 100 empty baskets, 75 one-pound cans of coffee, 75 cakes, 100 loaves of bread and bushels of potatoes. The big problem—meat. I promoted 28 chickens from one butcher and 38 pieces of meat from another. Then finding I was still short some forty or fifty pieces of meat, I went to Mr. Tyler of the Scranton Republican and he told me to go ahead and buy whatever meat I needed to complete my remaining baskets and send the bill to him. It is to be noted that I do not advertise in the Scranton Republican and Mr. Tyler was cognizant of this fact.

I obtained the names of eighty of the neediest families in my district—from Catholic, Jewish and Protestant clergymen. Early in the morning the day before Christmas, with the fine cooperation of my employees, operators and ushers, they and I drove in a truck and motor car and distributed some eighty-odd baskets. The news of this work spread. The mayor commended me personally, and when telephone calls and letters came in from more needy families asking for relief, the chief of police investigated them for me and distributed twelve more baskets—92 in all. It was a happy and gratifying day for me.

With good wishes for a Happy and Prosperous New Year, I am—BRYAN LEE, Manager, Globe Theatre, Scranton, Pa.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

The testimonial dinner in honor of Aaron Saperstein is now folded in the pages of history, but the affair will long stand out in the memory of more than 500 persons attending as one of the most scintillating local functions in recent years. A grand entertainment—it will be even better remembered for the enthusiastic and wholehearted tributes that were showered upon the honored guest. Succeeding speakers vied with one another to register their testimonial to the local Allied leader. Nothing was unsaid or overlooked that might amplify the tribute accorded Mr. Saperstein.

Abram F. Myers, national Allied leader, added to the distinction of the affair by acting as toastmaster. The fact that directors of Allied had arranged to be in Chicago for convention the day following gave the gathering national representation and significance.

At the speaker's table were Allied directors from various parts of the country—as well as the new national Allied president, Al Steffes, who had accepted that post at the request of Mr. Myers only a few hours before the dinner. Present also were States Attorney John A. Swanson, and Assistant States Attorneys Charles Lounsbury and Charles Bellows.

And what entertainment! As States Attorney Swanson put it, "You men may be theatre owners, but apparently you don't see many shows; you seem to be getting such kick out of the entertainment here."

Just to mention a few of the folk who made it a merry evening, there were Ted Lewis, Walter O'Keefe, the Rich Brothers, Joe Griffin, Johnny and Edna Torrence, Helen Kane, Bernice and Emily, the 16 Lambert dancers and the 4 Abbotiers. Music that "wowed" 'em was provided by Jack Abramson's orchestra.

The committee did a splendid job (except for missing cigars at table 26), and the following take the bow: Henri Ellman, Maurice Salkin, O. Wells, Nate Wolf, Sidney Selig, Fred Guilford, Ben Lasker, Joe Pastor, Harry Beaumont and Louis Abramson. Ellman, Salkin, Beaumont and Moe Silver arranged the entertainment.

It remained for H. M. Richey to bring things down to earth by saying, "When Aaron gets home tonight and Mrs. Sapenstein says, 'What do you mean by beating it this morning without leaving me any money'—then Aaron will realize that he is only one of us mortals after all."

Al Steffes, paying his compliments to States Attorney Swanson and thanking him for his cooperation in the recent controversy, drew a hand when he declared, "If we had Judge Swanson in Minneapolis, where they are all Swedes and all Republicans," we'd elect him president."

Announcement that Steffes had accepted the post of President of Allied was one of the surprises of the evening. And Toastmaster Myers made it rather evident that he hoped to have H. M. Richey in the new hookup as business manager.

The parade of waiters serving ice cream in forms that spelled "Success, Aaron Saperstein," drew salvos of applause and made a swell scene.

Balcony standing space in the gold room was at a premium after the entertainment got under way, thus giving a break to late arrivals who could not be accommodated below.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

¶ It may be surprising to some that the organ solo is still an element of importance on many a motion picture program. Sound promised to bring about its elimination entirely, but it did not quite succeed. Even so, the opinion is sometimes offered that it succeeded too well. Monotony, experience tells us, is the death of interest, and a program entirely of dramatic movement, or one in which the sounds, musical or otherwise, are exclusively phonographic, has been classified as monotony. It is not for these paragraphs to include a discussion of this question, but it is pertinent to note certain relevant phenomena of the actual theatre. There is, for example, a burlesque theatre in New York that frequently uses community singing as an interlude in its regular stage performance. This theatre, moreover, is located in the Times Square district, the world's center, according to the town's semi-professional press agents, of Sophistication. Nevertheless, a young woman (fully clothed!) invites the audience to sing some popular songs, and with the words projected upon a screen, the patrons, mostly men, sing courageously. There are many motion picture theatres still possessed of their organs, now unused. There they remain, costly property gathering dust and valuelessness. At the same time, managers complain of difficulty in building programs capable of drawing patrons in a quantity indicative of the old enthusiasm for the motion picture theatre. . . In his article, Dan Daniels also offers evidence that theatre patrons do like to join each other in song. It may not be art, but it represents a source of revenue to the theatre. Another thought is provoked by reading Merchandising the Organ Solo Today: Is it possible that patrons' powers of appreciation are underestimated—that patrons are given entertainment too "thin," thereby aggravating the problem of how to hold them as consistent, habitual customers? Mr. Daniels, for example, played Bach and got many letters of appreciation. The point is, people cling to things they need, and there is a question whether or not one ever gets to need soda-pop as much as good red wine. . . Mr. Daniels is what, in this business, one may call an old-timer. He may have left his past behind him, but other old-timers will remember him as Harold Daniels, for years eminent among Chicago's highly exploited organists, in the days when the organ solo was a prominent feature on all deluxe programs. With the more euphonious name of Dan Daniels, he is carrying on in the Wisconsin city of Green Bay (home of those invulnerable footballers, the Packers), where he is console artist at the Fox theatre.

¶ In the series, Modern Seating and Chair Maintenance, another contributor is introduced with this issue. H. S. Leader will also contribute further to the symposium of thought on modern theatre seating problems, with other experts in the field following, to the end that this group of discussions may be regarded as a comprehensive course of instruction for owner, manager and architect in modern thought on theatre seating methods, including those factors in theatre designing that are contributory. The final article will in particular take up the architectural aspects of seating, with special cognizance of sight line considerations. . . The author of the current article concerning comfort factors, is a graduate of the College of Engineering in the University of Michigan, where he was an honor man. Mr. Leader is now in charge of the research division of the American Seating Company, residing in Grand Rapids, Mich.

¶ Just what may we expect to take place in sound technics with reference to the theatre, was the subject of our query to Gordon S. Mitchell, and What 1932 May Bring to Sound is his reply. Mr. Mitchell is now and has been for years an engineer in the sound department of Universal, at Universal City, Cal., but while a studio technician in professional affiliation, he has ever kept himself conversant with conditions in the theatre. He has contributed to BETTER THEATRES before on subjects that embraced both studio and theatre points of view, which in his experience, we have found, find a sort of unity.

¶ These notes are supposed to concern this issue exclusively (according to the heading), but because of the interest in the "Radio City" project, a few words may not be amiss now to the effect that the next issue of BETTER THEATRES will contain a comprehensive treatment of the motion picture theatre being built as a part of that $250,000,000 development in New York. The presentation will include sketches, plans and a critical discussion.

¶ An identification remains, superfluous as it seems to most readers—Leo T. Parker (Picketing: Contracts: Leases: Licenses) is a Cincinnati attorney and a regular contributor to BETTER THEATRES.

Deluxe Seating... Acoustically Correct

THE chair shown above typifies the class, comfort, and box-office appeal of the new Heywood-Wakefield Theatre Seating. From every angle the new H-W Chairs have that class, comfort, and style which lend prestige and build profits for any theatre, regardless of size.

Most of the new H-W Chairs have been designed for use in sound houses. Several of them were developed in cooperation with Publix engineers who have made exhaustive studies of acoustical requirements in theatre equipment. The chair shown above is particularly adapted to sound use. Its soft, luxurious, sound absorbing upholstery; its custom type of tailoring on the seat and back; and its refreshingly modern aisle standard make this seat one of the most beautiful and practical designs ever built.

Publix has installed more than a quarter million H-W Theatre Seats. Many other leading chains and independents have also specified H-W Seats because of their fine workmanship, smart design, unusual comfort, and long wear. If you are planning to seat a new house or reseat an old one, it will pay you to get all the facts on H-W Theatre Seating. A note to the nearest H-W Sales Office will bring complete information.

HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD

SHOW BUSINESS TRADITIONS

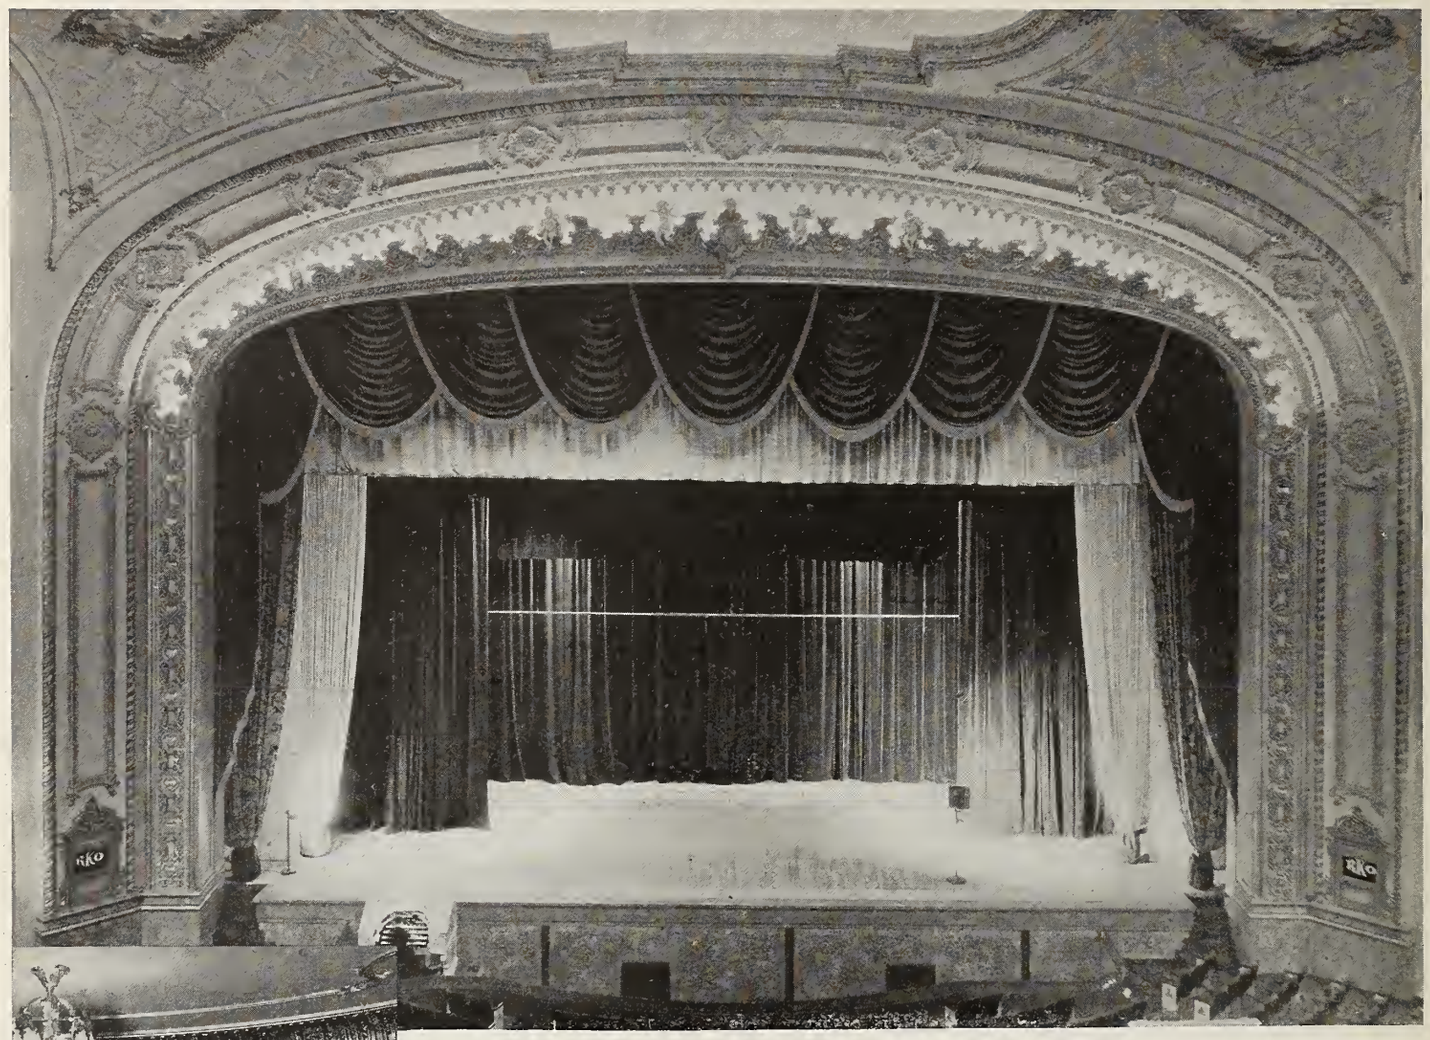
an editorial

IF, as is customary at the opening of a new year, you are planning—diffidently, but nevertheless definitely—the immediate future, you are doing a great deal of thinking about the past. We only lean toward the future, we possess the past—in our habits, in our methods, and, unfortunately enough, in our fears. Show business has plenty of differences from other fields of commercial activity, but it is run by the same species, and therefore is heir to the same slavery to traditions that motivates almost all our endeavors the workers within Show Business.

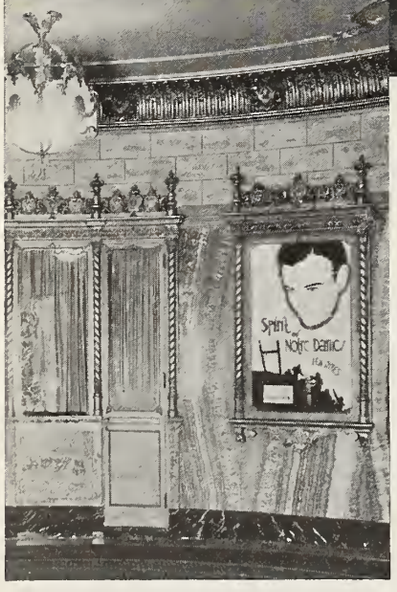
Thus it is that show business, though it exploit the sensational, is as conservative as Big Business. This may be at least partly true because in the aggregate it is—and of course we speak only of motion picture merchandising—itself Big Business. But it is also true very importantly because of the grip of traditions upon all the workers within Show Business.

In times of superlative prosperity, the mere suggestion of Change is somewhat horrifying. But in adversity we are usually willing to "take stock."

It should not be within the purview of this particular publication to consider the making of motion pictures. It is in their selling, including the building in which they are sold, that we here are concerned.



In this branch of the film industry, then, one notes three Grand Traditions, grand because they include or dominate all others. One commands us to let our theatres remain essentially stage-play structures, with flamboyant embellishment the central idea. Another insists that the motion picture is, after all, a carnival product and should be sold as a novelty or shock-producing artifice. The other is the Tradition of Broadway.



These may need some explaining (though they should be readily recognizable). The first, regarding the design of the theatre itself, would preclude any consideration of the possibility that what is essentially needed is a building that permits the patron to enter conveniently, sit comfortably (regardless of the weather) and live in Another World for awhile, as oblivious as possible that this other world is light and sound from a screen. This tradition would not have us think that having done this, the motion picture theatre had served its true purpose.

The tradition concerning the character of motion picture entertainment is best understood by a glance through producer and theatre advertising. Not all indulge the tradition elaborately, but in the more ostentatious forms, the custom is to make, by comparison, P. T. Barnum's well-worn phrase, "Greatest Show on Earth," a modest, truthful statement. There being quite a few hundred different pictures a year, this tradition requires a great number of them to be "the greatest," but the explanation is that this advertising attitude is quite safe because the public no longer has any faith in it anyway—for how could it?

The Tradition of Broadway is the old one of the "legitimate" theatre, dusted off and reinstated, following abdication of the "legit" and the coronation of the Photoplay, with the former's motto changed to "The Premiere's the Thing." The studios took the cue, but that is another story. Here we note only that prices duly responded. According to the Tradition, however, attendance has nothing to do with their rise, but is instead dependent on "quality" of product, since the higher prices now cause people to shop for their screen entertainment—all of which may or may not be confusing, but is nevertheless quite in accordance with the Tradition of Broadway.

These, then, are the traditions. And they are mentioned because they are important in the past that one thinks about at the beginning of 1932. It is the mission of this editorial to suggest that they should be thought about a great deal—if only to assure ourselves that they are well founded.

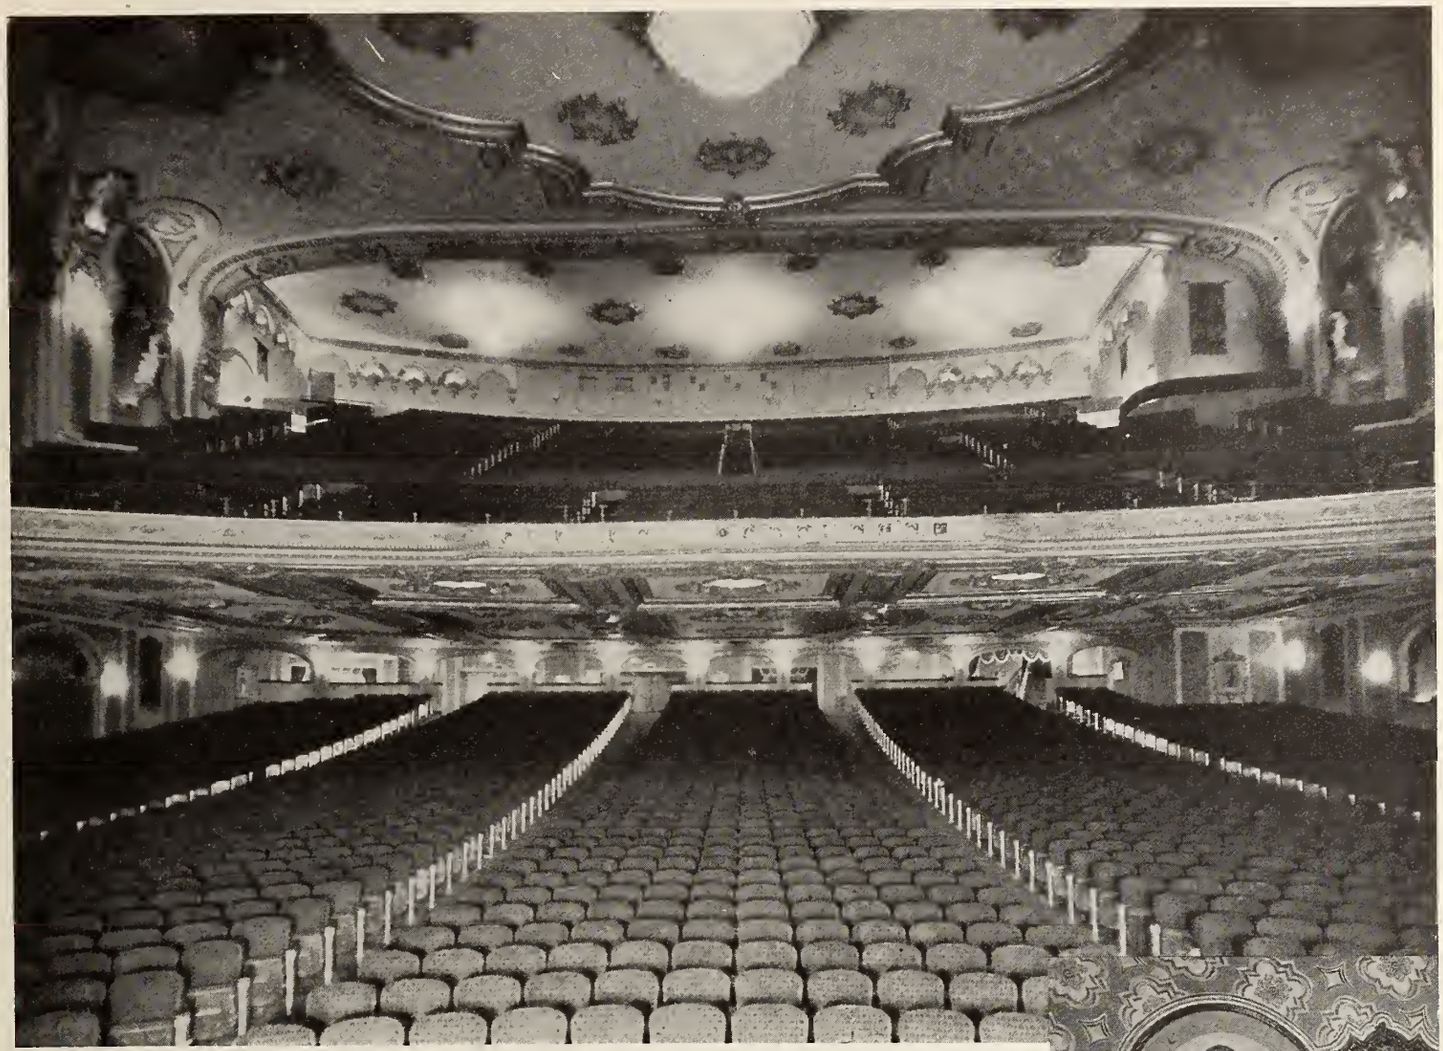
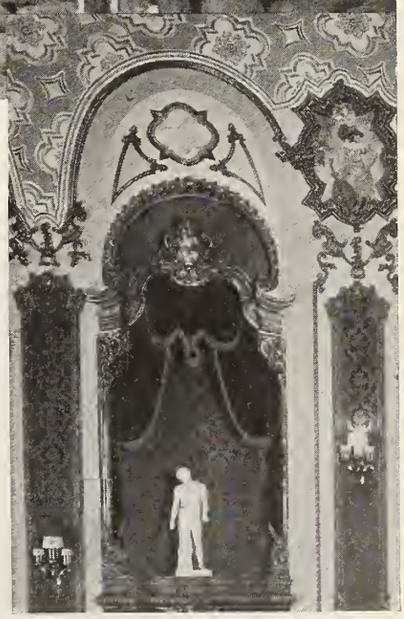
A 3,600-SEAT COMBINATION THEATRE OF PERIOD DESIGN



Describing the Palace in Albany, N. Y., final link in the latest building program of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum chain of vaudeville-motion picture houses. The design is by John Eberson, who employed Italian motifs



THE NEW RKO PALACE in Albany, N. Y., represents completion of this circuit's latest program of expansion. The project was effected by Joseph Plunkett, vice-president and general manager of the RKO theatres; and Lou Golding, district manager. The theatre was built and financed by Fabian Securities, Inc., for RKO. Jacob and Simon Fabian, the heads of this finance corporation, are well known in the theatrical field as builders of theatres in the East. M. Shapiro & Son were general contractors. Construction was under the supervision of RKO's Construction Department, with David Canavan and A. J. Kirwan in charge. John Eberson was the architect.

The location of the Albany Palace is at the corner of Clinton Avenue and North Pearl Street, facing Clinton Square. The theatre has a total capacity of 3,600 seats, of which 2,200 are on the main floor and 1,400 in a balcony.

The decorative and color schemes lead toward intimacy in spite of the fact that the expanse of the auditorium itself is 125 feet wide and 128 feet deep. Anticipating metropolitan attendance, and in response to the modern demand for ease and comfort, 6,000 square feet of lobbies, waiting rooms and lounges were provided. The stage is 92 feet wide and 28 feet deep, the proscenium arch is 69 feet wide and 42 feet high. Stage facilities include 15 completely furnished dressing rooms. There is also a full set of service rooms for stage and house staff, as well as an elaborate musicians' room, a library and an actor's green room.

The structure is fireproof, with pile foundations, reinforced concrete basement walls, steel skeleton frame and roofing, and exterior panel walls. Floor construction is of reinforced concrete, and all partition work is executed in hollow tile. No woodwork was used in any part of the building, with the exception of the full trap stage floor. All doors are either steel or bronze, all railings ornamental iron and all base trim is either marble or cement, and all of the extensive decorative work is executed in staff.

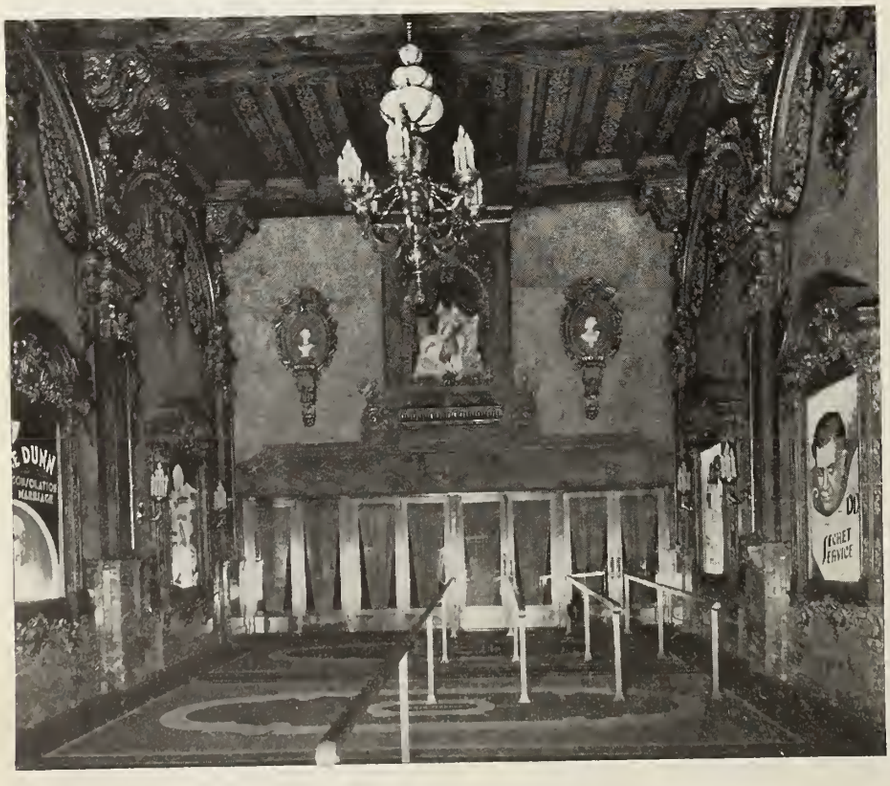
The general architectural scheme used at both exterior and interior of the building represents an interpretation of Italian architecture expressed in Austrian baroque fashion.

The entrance of the theatre is located on a corner, shielded by a gigantic ornamental marquee sheltering an island box office of attractive design and practical in its arrangement. Bronze doors lead to a spacious vestibule. The floor is covered in its entirety with removable rubber mats; the sidewalls for their full height are covered with imported marble. Illuminated display frames and an emergency inside box office give interesting purpose to this vestibule.

The principal architectural feature of the main ceiling inside the vestibule is an original mural by Karoly and Szanto, mural artists, depicting a modern carnival scene. The main lobby is two stories high, with a 6-foot wainscot in imported marble in three tones of sienna, matching into the Italian decorative scheme, composed of walnut pilasters and a heavy wood imitation beamed ceiling with rich polychrome stencil work.

The Italian arches on sidewalls are embellished with damask valances, and interesting recesses and niches thus formed in the wall, provide housing for statuary and murals.



Leaving the main lobby one enters the grand foyer, which is gigantic in its proportions and impressive in its style. All of the floor of this grand foyer is covered with a specially woven two-tone red carpet, and all of its sidewalls treated in walnut panel style with a vaulted ornamental ceiling carrying a most interesting series of special murals in lunettes. Marble stairs lead from the main floor of the grand foyer to the mezzanine which circles this beautiful room and permits a full view of the grand foyer. Intricate cornice lights as well as a bronze chandelier furnish festive illumination.

Baroque ornamental iron railings embellished, on mezzanine openings, and elegant walnut tones used in decorations, are emphasized in contrast with heavy royal red draperies in mezzanine archways. Decorative furniture and light standards in overscale are sparingly used throughout this foyer.

Corresponding space of this large grand entrance hall in the basement is utilized for a lounge reached from the foyer, showing a medieval Italian room. In contrast and as a matter of "chic," the women's parlor adjoining this lounge is executed in a delicate pattern of an ultra-modern style.

A general view along the mezzanine promenade.

The entrance lobby, looking toward the inner lobby.

The sidewalls of lower and upper promenade and foyer are covered in silk damask and special lighting fixtures overhang decorated ceiling panels to give richness to these auditorium approaches. The mezzanine lounge borrowed the baroque from the architect's conception and leans in its entirety on the French, with French walls, French panels, French fixtures and French bric-a-brac—a gorgeous scheme in blue and gold.

The auditorium is in old rose, ivory and brown, with a coffered ceiling having coved mural panels. The coffered side arches are embellished with drapery and columns. The general scheme is offset with carefully placed classic statuary and is lighted by a huge crystal chandelier. This scheme, in combination with rich fabric used in the seating, and rich coloring of the carpet, is designed to give warmth, intimacy and an immediate friendliness to the auditorium.

The Palace in Albany has a thermionic tube remote control switchboard by General Electric Company, one of the few installations thus far of this innovation in stage and auditorium lighting control. A Carrier centrifugal system provides air conditioning.

The main lounge, located in the basement.

The Peter Clark Studios furnished all of the stage rigging, counter-weights, organ and orchestra pit elevators. The American Seating Company furnished the opera chairs, an RKO new special end standard making its first appearance.

An outstanding feature of the RKO Palace in Albany is that in spite of its huge size for a combination house the theatre is intimate in the general impression it gives.

Three months were consumed in planning, and ten months were required for the construction of this project. The house has been in operation long enough to have indicated the feasibility of so large and elaborate a house as the Palace for a city the size of Albany (though it is to be remembered that this city is the State capital), and it is reported by the operating circuit that business shows the investment to be justified. This attitude has more than casual interest, since the willingness of experienced showmen to consider cities of even moderate size as possible fields for expansion, must be influenced by those houses which have already been introduced into such situations. Equipment of the Palace in Albany, it is to be noted, is sufficiently flexible to permit of emphasis either way—on the stage policy, or the presentation of motion pictures.

MERCHANDISING THE ORGAN SOLO TODAY

when the public needs to be "sold" as never before

By DAN DANIELS

THERE IS an old saying, "variety is the spice of life," and one might paraphrase that venerable adage by stating, "the organ solo constitutes the variety in the theatre program."

Simply stating that fact is not enough, of course. The organist must add the weight of proof to the statement by incorporating into his end of the show every bit of variety possible, through his own effort or by following the example of other organists in other localities who are presenting various forms of entertainment to their audiences. I do not wish to appear as an "authority" in this delicate matter of organ presentation. Rather, I should like this entire recital to be viewed simply as a suggestion, or a series of suggestions, to the organist who, for one reason or another, finds himself thwarted in his efforts to produce that variety so necessary in this serious business of entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Public.

In my opinion, the first thought one must bear in mind is that any solo must possess entertainment value from the public viewpoint, and taht it should not be lengthened to the point of boredom. Anything from five to eight minutes usually insures attention on the part of the audience. However, anything in the solo line running longer than eight minutes entails the risk of restlessness and inattention, unless it happens to be a solo of unusual calibre, or something decidedly new and novel.

There is nothing to be gained by dodging an issue. Most of us agree that while community solos are far from passé, they have been greatly overdone and possess more entertainment value when used once or twice during the week, rather than on every change of program. The great advantage in the community solo is that it reaches the organist in compact form, with cue sheet, ready for use. Yet, after all, it represents another man's idea and may tend to rob you of that individuality so necessary to winning and holding your audience. However, that angle is usually overcome by advertising the solo as the product of your own brain and energy.

In the outlying theatres, and in the smaller city houses, the trend is usually from three to five changes weekly. Now, it is hardly feasible to use a community solo on every change of program, owing to the fact that much of your patronage is a repeat patronage. Another point lies in the fact that it is very difficult to secure four or five singable hit songs for each solo, and, after all, a community solo in which the community does not join with a will is not likely to "stop the show."

What, then, you ask, constitutes an answer to this problem of solos? There are many possibilities which are often overlooked. Chief among these we find the well prepared and well rendered piano solo, the use of classic material for organ presentation, of local talent, of extremely new popular numbers played in special arrangement, radio hook-ups whereby your audience voices are actually broadcast in song, and the use of the scrim drop with its peculiar effect properties.

I have found it a pleasant experience to offer a piano solo, particularly if the stage happens to be equipped with a fine grand. The use of a short introductory speech stressing the point of novelty and variety will help, followed by announcing the title of your selection. Such numbers as "Liebestraum," or "Rhapsody in Blue" are usually very acceptable, and the encore number can easily be something of a light or popular nature. There is a great deal of novelty in hearing an organist acquit himself at the piano, simply because he is not associated with the piano in the public mind. Naturally, the ideal time for this stunt is on the change wherein you are likely to attract few of the community singing adherents among your patrons.

Permit me to describe a recent experience of mine in presenting so-called "classical material" at the organ. I secured first two beautiful candelabra, placing one on either side of the organ lift. I then lamped the fixtures with flame style bulbs, and found the whole effect quite pleasing in a steel blue spot. In presenting the solo, I opened with a strictly diapason and chime effect until the console reached the top of the lift. Then in a few words, I announced my intention of departing entirely from the usual theatre style by presenting "Ave Maria" by Bach-Gounod. To be sure, the entire procedure was risky as well as startling, but the results were more than compensating. Among letters received I still retain one from a gentleman patron who advised me that "in all his life he had never before encountered a theatre organist with courage enough to present Bach to a theatre audience." His letter alone was worth the effort put forth, regardless of the fact that there were several comments on the stunt.

He had the courage to play Bach in a theatre solo.

The wide awake organist will not overlook the possibilities which lie in the use of local talent, principally singers or clever kiddies, in his search for novel varieties. Disregarding the "drawing possibility" of some clever "local" who is well known in the community, the organist can add to his own laurels by presenting that man or woman or child in a showmanly fashion. Spend an hour or two extra in rehearsing with your subject, select from his or her library what is most likely to be acceptable material for presentation, use every possible lighting and stage effect, and at all costs, erase all trace of pure amateurism from the act. Entertainment of the above calibre is usually subject to scorching criticism due to petty jealousy and animosity surrounding the "popular local." Produce a first class novelty and you will have nothing to fear. The local angle makes the stunt salable.

In presenting new numbers, be sure they are extremely new, and use all the arrangement possible. It has been my experience that using new material in groups of three numbers that differ as to classification makes a presentation that is novel and interesting, in addition to offering the possibility of "teaching" new tunes to your audience for future use in community solos where you invite vocal assistance on the part of the patron.

In the matter of radio hook-ups, it is of course necessary that you have a local station in your city willing to "remote" from your theatre. The writer had the pleasant experience of introducing this stunt for the first time in his community. The version used was titled, "We're on the Air," and the house manager took care of the usual announcements from the microphone placed on the stage. The result was much whoopee and very loud singing, simply because every patron in the house was anxious to have his or her voice distinguishable to the "folks listening in." There was also much telling of friends in a joking manner that the party was now "broadcasting" over station So-and-so. Many comments were received, and many listeners called in ask-

MODERN SEATING AND CHAIR MAINTENANCE

III.—Factors Affecting Comfort

By H. S. LEADER

Contributing the third article to this symposium on modern seating problems, Mr. Leader analyzes for the theatre owner, manager and architect, the more fundamental considerations in achieving comfort, which is so often thought to concern merely upholstering rather than chair structure and floor preparation. The latter factor will be dealt with in the fourth article, which will be contributed by the same writer. A note on Mr. Leader will be found on Page 8.

THE DESIGN, the appointments and the service of the modern picture theatre contribute to that atmosphere of illusion that is so essentially theatrical. The great organs, the lighting effects, the costly rugs and the thoroughly drilled politeness of the ushers are elements in this effect. The opinion of astute showmen is apparently that such expenditures are worthwhile or are at least a necessary defensive policy.

Although there are a number of notable exceptions among American theatres, it is generally true that the same keen appreciation does not exist for those elements which affect the comfort of the seated patron. This may be due in part to the fact that we can quickly appraise and appreciate illusory effects, but we cannot so quickly anlyze and evaluate the differences between comfortable and uncomfortable seating. We are vaguely aware that some theatres are more comfortably seated than others and it is highly probable that to some degree public patronage is influenced by this consideration. Individuals of unusual size can usually anaylze the source of their discomfort with some accuracy, but for the most of us, seating defects contribute to our discomfort without focusing our attention on the exact cause.

Two factors of first importance to comfort are the row-to-row spacings and the chair widths. Because these factors have a direct bearing on the safety of theatres, certain minimum values have been specified by ordinances of some municipalities. The following schedule covers a number of the larger cities:

	Minimum Spacing Back to Back	Chair Size
New York	30 inch	20 inch
Chicago	34 inch
Philadelphia	30 inch
Detroit	30 inch
Boston	30 inch
State of Ohio	30 inch	20 inch
Cincinnati	32 inch
St. Louis	30 inch
Minneapolis	32 inch	18 inch

The row-to-row spacing is generally measured from the back of one chair to that of the next. The net row-to-row spacing is directly affected by a number of factors, the most important of which are:

(1) The thickness of the back when occupied.
(2) The pitch or slope of the back.
(3) The difference in level between the adjacent rows of chairs.

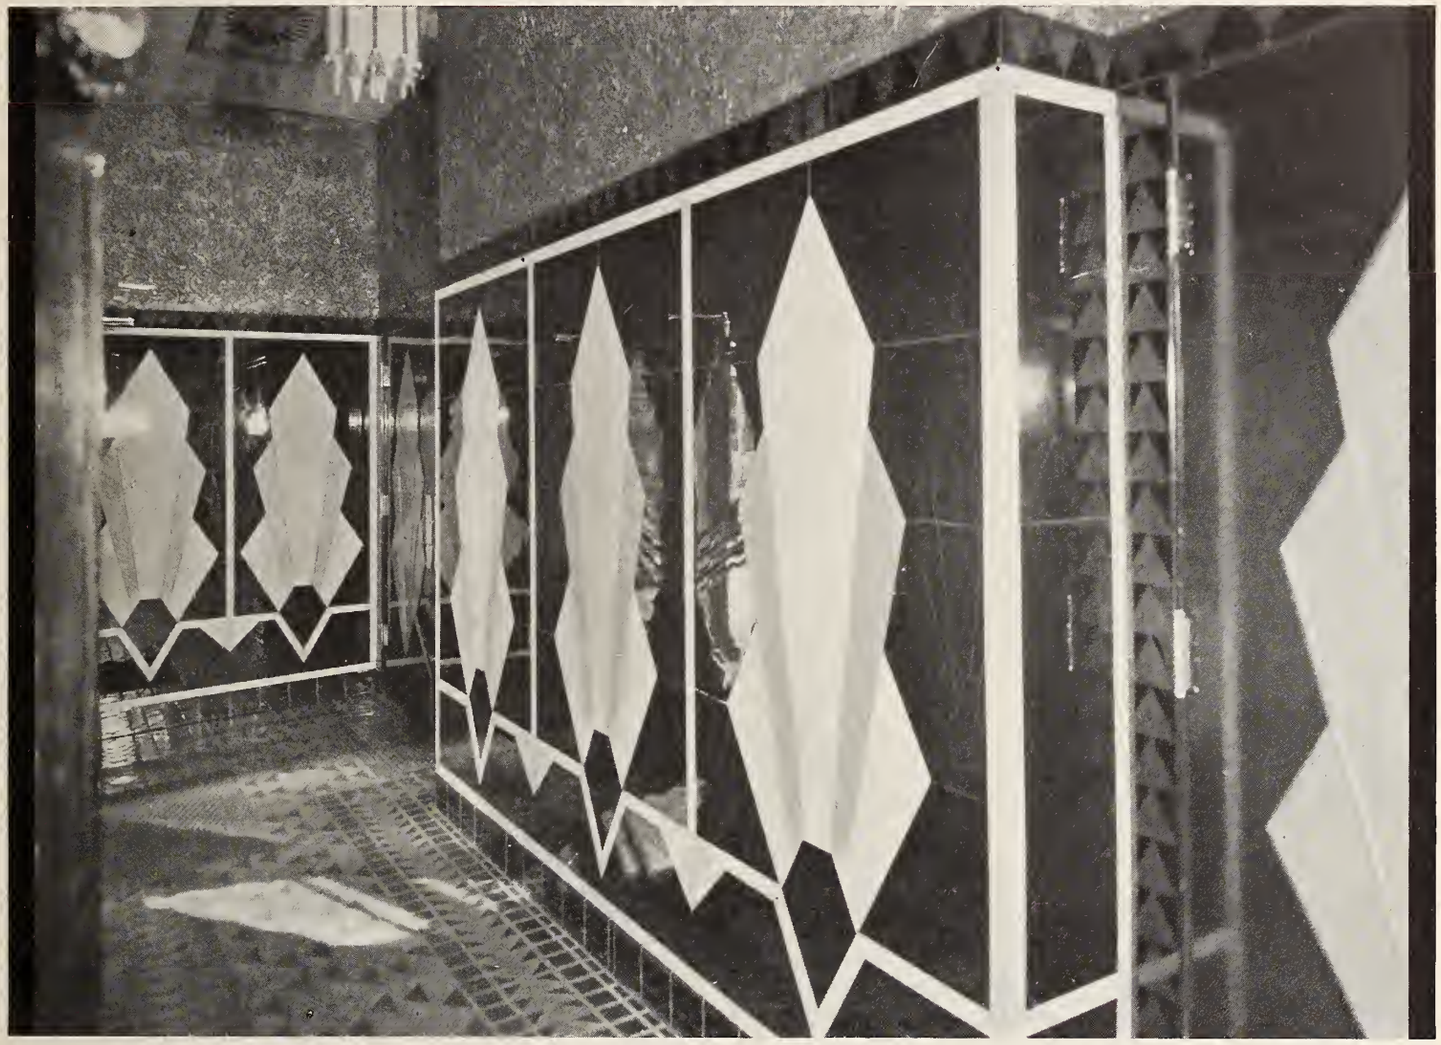
Theoretically the slope of the back should not affect the available space between rows. Practically, however, slouching or slumping is encouraged as the slope increases. An explanation of the technical reasons for the reduction in available passageway because of the increased back pitch and differences in level are not of importance to the subject of this paper and are not developed here.

There has been a gradual increase from the 28-inch row-to-row spacing that obtained 20 years ago to spacings as high as 34 inches, and in a few cases even higher. It is obvious that this has been effected at a considerable loss of seating capacity. An increase in spacing from 28 inches to 34 inches represents a reduction of about 20% in the seating capacity of a given area.

Very few of the building codes specify the width of chairs. Minneapolis has established a minimum of 18 inches, Chicago and Cleveland of 20 inches. Eighteen-inch chairs are now rarely used in new houses, and a minimum is generally observed. The obese individual cannot be comfortably seated in any chair less than 20 inches in width, and is more comfortably seated in 21-inch and 22-inch chairs. The mandatory use in some cities, and the voluntary use in others, of chairs 20 inches and wider, has caused another decrease in capacity of about 10%. An 18-inch chair spaced 28 inches from row-to-row occupies a net area of 504 square inches. A 21-inch chair spaced 34 inches from row-to-row occupies 714 square inches. Although this comparison is illustrative rather than representative, it shows a growing realization of the box office value of patron comfort.

Thicker backs give the impression of greater comfort and luxury and are for that reason preferred by theatre owners. Where thickness is obtained by the use of springs and filling material, the sitting comfort is markedly improved. The thickness of the back when the chair is occupied, and not its thickness when unoccupied, affects the net row spacing.

The comfort of the chair for most occupants is improved as the pitch of the back increases, until an angle of from 65° to 70° with the horizontal is reached. The effect of the stepped construction of the balcony, and the necessity for preserving good sight lines, usually limits the allowable pitch in this case to about 75°. Recent studies showing the benefits of raising the projection screen with relation to the main floor may encourage the use of greater pitches.



The angle between the back and the seat should be such that the occupant should feel no tendency to slide forward in the seat. It is the fault of some types of hinges and of certain materials that they permit the flow of metal under continued impact, resulting in a reduction of the seat pitch. The angle of the seat with the horizontal is generally 10°. A number of well documented studies have been made by investigators on large groups of school children. A number of principles have been generally agreed upon, one of the most significant of which is that good posture and comfort require that the feet of the occupant rest on the floor, and that the weight of the leg be supported from the floor and not under the knee. It is much better from this point of view that a seat be too low than that it be too high. Chair heights should therefore be corrected for the slope of the floor.

That part of a theatre chair standard known as the arm rest is used as a support for the elbow. When too high above the seat level, it causes an uncomfortable hunching of the shoulders, and when too low, fails adequately to support the occupant. Because its relative height is affected by the position of the occupant, it is measured from the bottom rather than from the top of the seat.

The sitting comfort of the seat is very largely responsible for the impression an occupant obtains from the chair. Upholstered parts give a sensation of luxury and comfort that bears some relation to the dis-

AN UNUSUAL THEATRE IS DULY REPORTED

Looking down into the inner foyer, with its tall reaches of highly glazed walls of dark vitrolite veined — "modernistically" — in white.

Proving that "Dad" Richardson's enthusiasms are not confined to Projection, for it was he who found the Hiehle in Parkersburg, W. Va., among his recent travelings

[The following account of one of the most extraordinary small theatres we have learned about, is F. H. Richardson's own report on the Hiehle theatre.—G. S.]

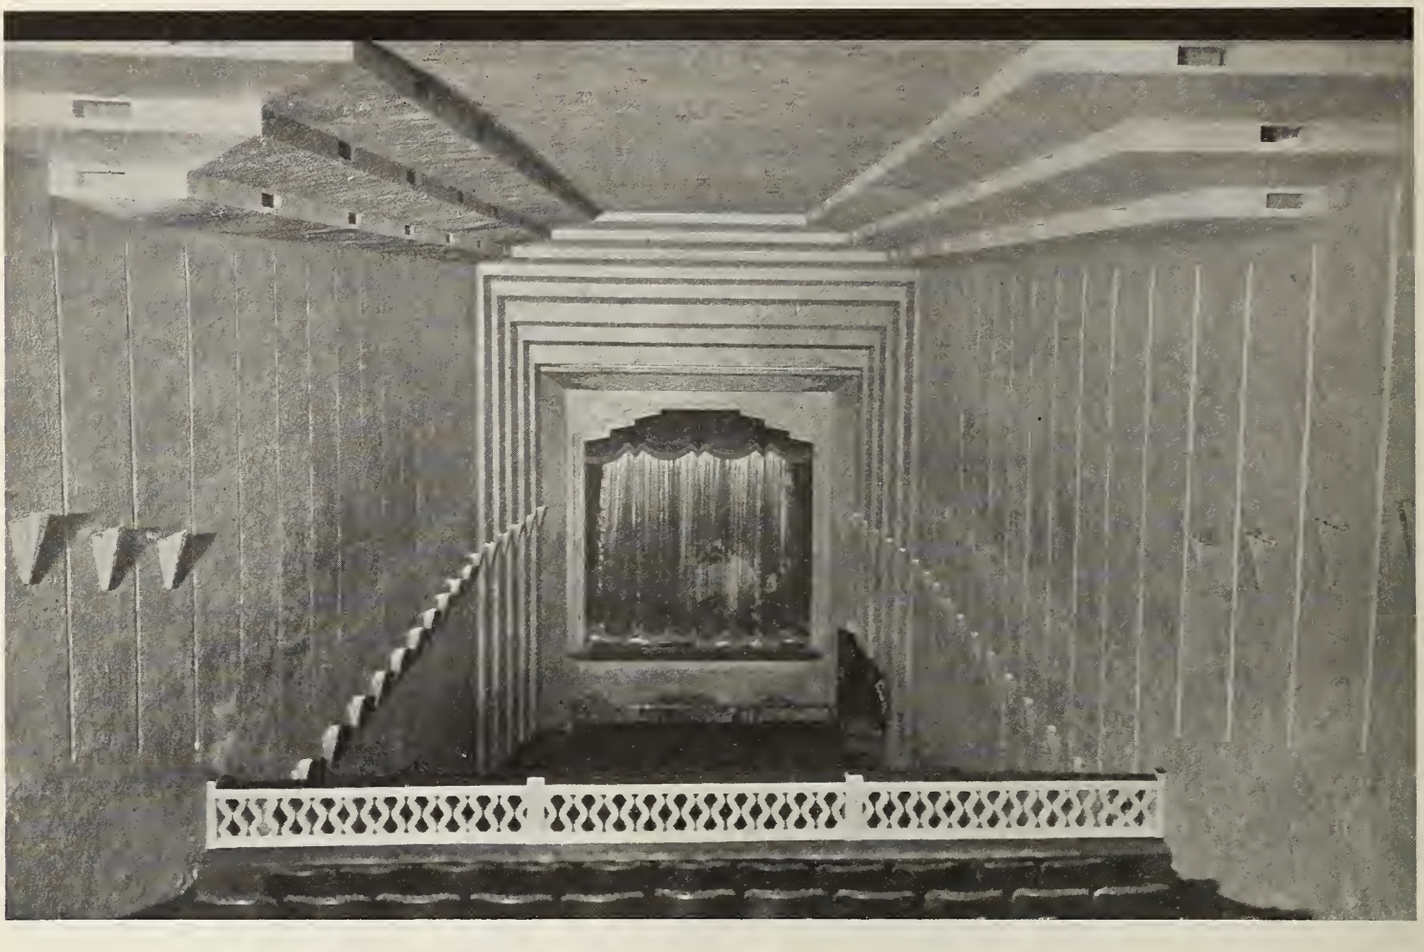
IN TRAVELING around over the country every once in awhile, I encounter something so very much out of the ordinary that even if it does not concern projection—that is, directly—I am moved to report it to the rest of the motion picture world so far as I am able, in the belief that many interesting things necessarily escape our notice.

On the way back from Ohio recently, I stopped over night in Parkersburg, W. Va., addressing the theatre people after the show had closed at night. In the evening I visited two or three of the theatres, and on what seemed to me the main street of the city, I found the Hiehle theatre, which is unique in both its design and its arrangement. Unique, indeed, when we must consider that its auditorium is only about 30 feet wide and fully 110 feet long, accommodating but 392 patrons.

When R. J. Hiehle built this theatre, the only space available was of the above dimensions. He had a lot of courage to tackle the proposition of erecting a costly theatre (costly considering its size) on so restricted a space. One cannot help but be filled with admiration at the results he obtained. Mr. Hiehle advised me that it cost $50,000.



The theatre is modernistic in design throughout. The auditorium walls are finished in what is called Italian Gesso. The wall color at the floor is a moderately dark green, which blends gradually upward into lighter hues, until at the ceiling it blends into a cream color. The ceiling itself is in a soft cream color.

Looking at the front end of the auditorium, one notices that the ceiling is laid out in a series of steps leading away from the wall. In each of these steps are many openings containing lights of different colors, which send forth light beams in different directions. The side lights are concealed in vase-like brackets.

The seating in the theatre received very careful attention. The seats are upholstered in brocaded cloth. They are decidedly high-class and very comfortable.

I asked Mr. Hiehle what he paid for such seats, and his reply was, "Fifteen hundred dollars for each 100 seats."

The projection room walls are of brick and tile. The cement floor is covered with a hard-finish grey linoleum. The projectors are Powers, equipped with Gardner reflector type lamps. The sound is Wsetern Electric. The room, of necessity, is a bit crowded, but nevertheless it was as clean as a new pin, well ventilated and painted in an agreeable color. I advised Mr. Hiehle that it would be much better to paint a strip at least one foot wide around the observation ports a dead black. That evening, before the lecture, one of the projectionists told me that the black had already been applied! D. O. Pernell and C. W. Cankell are in charge of projection.

The Hiehle is striking upon first sight, the entrance being as boldly carried out according to a modernistic decorative scheme as the rest of the house. At least, I suppose the geometric patterns used conform to the accepted idea of modernistic decoration, as noted in a great many commercial and apartment buildings today. The box office abuts on the sidewalk, the windows being approximately flush with a set of double doors on each side. The box office is faced with a glazed surface in dark and light angular figures, while the doors are carried out in a similar pattern. The marquee is studded underside with electric lamps, and above it is a tall vertical sign carrying the name of the theatre.

There is a small entrance lobby, which enters upon a narrow, high foyer. This foyer commands considerable interest, despite the absence of furnishings and ornamentation, for the walls themselves draw the eyes to an expanse, on either side, of angular lines, resembling (for purposes of illustration) the usual representation of an electric current. These lines wave vertically in parallel rows through a dark background of vitrolite, a highly glazed surface slightly reflective to the lighting. The stairway to the balcony leads from the lobby. The balcony is very shallow, considering the length of the theatre, and therefore is located far back in the auditorium.

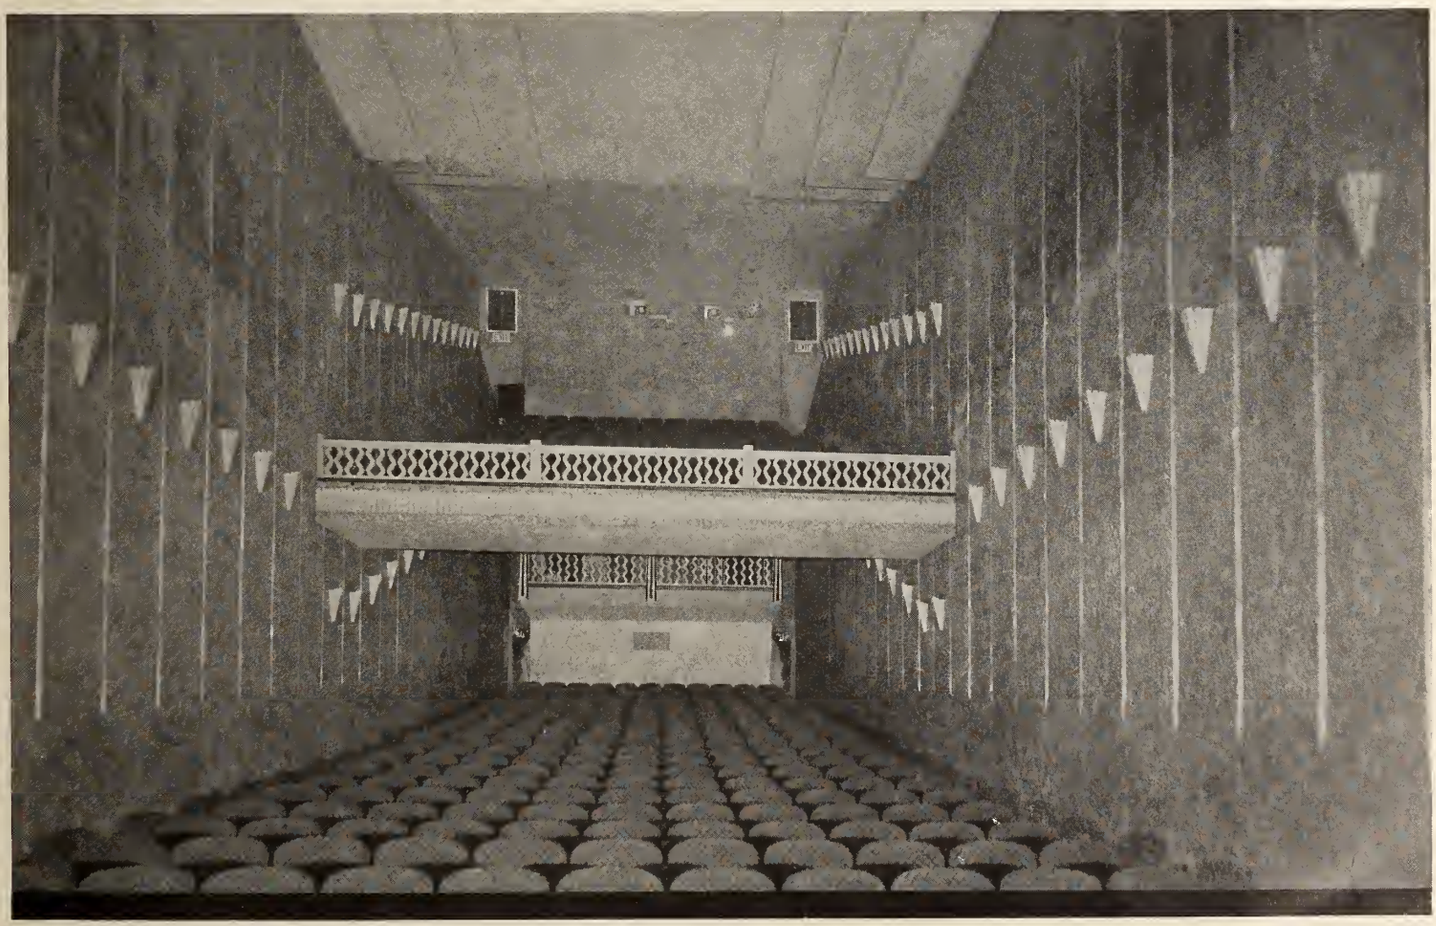
I asked Mr. Hiehle his opinion as to the effect of the depression on motion picture theatres in Parkersburg. His reply was to the effect that it certainly had dealt all business in that city a terrific wallop, which had reached its peak when three of the city's banks closed their doors some weeks before.



But here is another angle to that condition: Said Mr. Hiehle, "I still find, however, regardless of the depression, that if I get a good picture, I get a good crowd. My business for a single day has run as high as $1,600, and that, I think, is going some for a 392-seat house which uses second-run pictures."

In proof of this statement, Mr. Hiehle showed me a few of his records, one of which was just below $1,600 for a single day, and several others were over $1,500!

I also asked Mr. Hiehle his impression as to the value of sound—considered as a box office asset. His answer was: "Yes, sound has a distinct value, as is proven by the fact that the silent picture was losing its popularity when sound arrived. There is no question but that it was losing its popularity, at least in this territory.

"The only trouble with sound is that some of the present day productions have too much of it."

In the view at left we look down into the lobby from a landing of the stairway to the balcony. Below, the auditorium is seen as from the screen platform.

PICKETING : CONTRACTS : LEASES : LICENSES

new court decisions affecting theatres

By LEO T. PARKER

VARIOUS COURTS have held that members of unions may picket a theatre if such picketing is peaceful and unaccompanied by coercion, duress, or intimidation. The difficulty of a court is, in deciding in particular case whether the methods actually used are lawful or unlawful. However, if the men who are performing the picketing exercise duress, make threats or attempt to intimidate theatre employes or patrons, the higher court will issue an injunction against such picketing. Also, if it is shown that the acts of the persons who are picketing the theatre are liable to cause injury to theatre patrons, or other persons, or if their presence tends to block pedestrians, or other traffic, these acts are unlawful and may be restrained by a higher court injunction.

For illustration, in the late case of Bomes V Providence Local No. 223, of Motion Picture Machine Operators of United States and Canada (155 Atl. 587), it was shown that a theatre owner had in his employ two non-union operators of his motion picture machine. The union attempted to force the theatre owner to make a contract with it to employ only members of the union. To accomplish its purpose the union attempted a boycott against the theatre. When the theatre was open for business two members of the union paraded back and forth on the sidewalk in front of the theatre with paper placards on their hats upon which, conspicuously printed, were the words, "This theatre does not employ union moving picture machine operators affiliated with the American Federation of Labor." This picketing was done under instructions from the union.

The theatre owner filed suit and asked the court to issue an injunction to prevent further picketing on the grounds that the space in front of the theatre was very small and the presence of two men walking back and forth blocked the sidewalk. Also, testimony was introduced showing that one of the pickets pushed against a young woman who was about to enter the theatre and told her not to enter, that it was dangerous to go inside. Other patrons who were about to enter the theatre were also approached by the pickets and told it was dangerous to enter. One patron was stopped on the sidewalk near the entrance by a picket who said, "I know you won't go into a scab place, a non-union place."

In view of these facts the lower court issued an injunction to prevent further picketing, and the higher court sustained the injunction, and stated the following important law:

"The primary and plain object of the picketing was to injure complainant's business and thereby to force him, not merely to employ union men, but to make a contract to do so for a considerable period of time. The respondent (union) has the right to persuade the public by any lawful means to patronize or to refuse to patronize complainant's theatre. But this right is not superior to the right of complainant (theatre owner) to conduct his business free from unlawful interference. . . . Granting that peaceful picketing is lawful and the display of placards of the kind in question on the public street is lawful, all the authorities agree that such actions are unlawful when accompanied by coercion or intimidation. . . . In the circumstances and in view of the deliberate violation by respondent of the rights of complainant, we think that to now permit any picketing in the limited space near the theatre would inevitably result in the obstruction of the public use of the street and sidewalk and an added injury to complainant."

Liability in Contract Breach

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a person who sues to recover damages on a breached contract is bound to prove that he was ready and willing to perform his obligations. However, it is not necessary that he endeavor to fulfill his obligations when he knows he will not be permitted to do so.

For instance, in Weinglass v. Gibson (155 Atl. 439), it was disclosed that a producer and a theatre owner entered into a written contract under which the former was to produce, at the latter's theatre, a performance called "Settin' the Pace," during a special week.

The testimony disclosed that after the contract was entered into the theatre owner requested the producer to cancel or defer the date for the performance because he desired to substitute another production called "Africana" for this week, which the producer refused to do, assigning as the reason that his cast would not agree to any postponement.

Nevertheless, the theatre owner proceeded to enter into a contract with another producer and advertised the production. The producer of "Settin' the Pace" thereupon telegraphed the theatre owner and informed him that he had seen the advertisement and that he had forwarded his billing matter and stated that he was ready and able to fulfill his contract. The

A THEATRE EXECUTIVE WARNS AGAINST LEGAL DISPUTES

In a recent issue of the Paramount Publix theatre house organ, "Publix Opinion," Austin C. Keough, company counsel, warned all house managers that care must be taken to avoid commissions and omissions that might lead to lawsuits. According to a news report in Motion Picture Herald, Mr. Keough notes a great improvement, but still has his attention called to instances which prove the necessity of continued vigilance. Two outstanding possibilities pointed out are the condition of theatre seats, which may be the source of damage suits; and the maintenance of order, which may necessitate the ejection of a patron, not infrequently the cause of a damage suit based on a charge of false arrest.

RKO's ORPHEUM THEATRE IN DAVENPORT, IA.

Seating 2,700, this new combination house is one of the largest of its class in the country. In design it is the creation of the eminent stage set designer, Henry Dreyfuss

View of the auditorium, right wall flanking the proscenium arch. The organ grille is of pierced plaster in the ceiling pattern.

AN EXTRAORDINARILY large theatre for any city, and surprisingly so for one the size of Davenport, Ia., is the new RKO Orpheum in that Middle West city. The seating capacity is 2,700, and since it is a vaudeville theatre as well as a picture house, the Orpheum in Davenport compares in size with any theatre of this class in the country.

The theatre was designed by Henry Dreyfuss, who is also a creator of stage settings, having contributed the striking backgrounds of "The Last Mile." The decorative motifs take full advantage of the theatre's size and spaciousness, resort to important use of variegated embellishments, and to some extent employ, within the pattern, concealed illumination.

The grand lobby is framed in an arch, this large molding being repeated in the niches around the wall. The room is done in tan and gold, draperies and carpet colors ranging from browns, through hennas, to tan. The ceiling is of gold leaf, and there are two ceiling fixtures made of crystal and glass tubes. The brackets on the wall correspond in design. The railing on the grand staircase repeats the motif of the moulding used in the arch. Mirrors are placed above the balconies, reflecting the entire lobby. Directly opposite these mirrors, on the other side of the lobby (which is identical) are open arches leading on to the mezzanine. The open arches of the mezzanine look down into the main lobby.

Notable at once in the auditorium is the absence of any definite proscenium arch. The treatment here is really the enlargement of the proscenium arch to take in a good part of the theatre, and it helps make this theatre more intimate than the average one. There is no definite frame dividing the audience from the stage. The organ grille is of pierced plaster. The same pattern is used on the ceiling in dull tones, so that the grille does not stand out particularly. The colors used in the auditorium repeat the colors in the lobby, except that they are a bit darker. Here are used dull tones. The large round mouldings, which form the main decoration, are separated by V-shaped gold leaf motifs. The panels on the wall, instead of being covered in fabric, are draped in loose, graceful folds of the same material used for the stage curtain, thus repeating the color and texture and carrying out the idea of unity. The ceiling design is carried continuously down along the wall.

The lighting fixtures are arranged in a row along the wall and are made entirely of metal, through which reflected light is used. Lights are also placed behind the organ grille. There are lamps in front of the balcony which are arranged to project light upon the stage.

Under the balcony the treatment has been to incorporate the lights into the decoration. The fins shown in the accompanying photographs have lights concealed in them. Each row of overlapping fins is directly over an aisle, so that a person coming into the darkened auditorium can find his way by the dimmed illumination from these fins. Of course, on another circuit of lights this wattage can be increased so as to illuminate fully the entire balcony section. On the walls the drapery idea, as described in connection with the auditorium in general, is repeated. There are lights also concealed in the frames around these draperies, so that the rayon velvet used is highlighted.

The main lounge is in the basement. The effect attempted was that of a room not magnificent in scale or decoration, but comfortable and sufficiently attractive to make people want to rest in it. The room is done in an off-color white, with high lights on the mouldings of the pilasters picked out in gold. The carpet has a brown ground, with a touch of vermilion and a suggestion of brilliant green. The furniture is of henna color, with cream and black lines. There is a fireplace which has a bas relief done in the modern manner, depicting the taking of a motion picture scene.

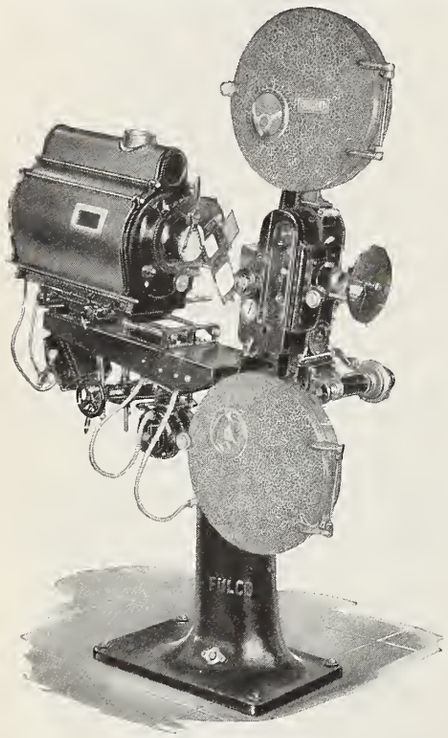
In spite of the fact that this room is underground, there are false windows with venetian blinds in them. Lights come from behind these blinds and reflect up to the ceiling. The decoration on the wall matches in scheme the decoration over the fireplace. Built-in benches correspond in color to the furniture.

The women's room is treated in boudoir style, of dignified luxury. In the men's room the walls are covered in silver Salubra. The wood moulding and wainscoating is of black ebony. The carpet is flat black. Leather upholstery is used in brilliant vermillion, while etchings on the walls are framed in brilliant borders which are also of vermilion tones.



These two views are of the auditorium section beneath the balcony, the picture at right showing the soffit treatment in detail. The "fins" of the soffit treatment contain light sources, each overlapping fin over an aisle.

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

WHAT 1932 MAY BRING TO SOUND

as indicated in the newer trend

By GORDON S. MITCHELL

IT HAS BEEN well said by a contemporary writer on the new motion picture that the ultimate aim of all motion picture effort is to create an illusion of reality which will make each individual member of the audience lose himself in the story. Problems arise in the lives of each individual which present more or less difficulty in their solution. If the motion picture can tell the spectator-auditor how to solve his own problem in a manner which will not smack too much of the sermon, it will be successful. The efforts of writer, director, cast, cinematographer and sound technician are all bent towards this common goal—a motion picture which will be so real, from all standpoints, that each individual member of the audience will leave the theatre feeling that he personally has passed through the experiences recorded on the screen.

The coming of sound to the motion picture (with the first showing of "Don Juan" on that sultry evening of August 6, 1926, at Warners theatre in New York City), revolutionized an industry which had been marked by no such sweeping change during the entire period of its previous history. The motion picture had been gradually improved since the "Great Train Robbery" was exhibited in 1903. Every succeeding year brought its progress, its new step in production or story. By 1920 most of the novelty of treatment, or of theme, had been tried, and the industry that had had such an inauspicious beginning only 17 years before, had grown until each production cost hundreds of thousands, and even millions, of dollars. The industry was in a state of mind wherein any novelty held an appeal—and sound pictures, as they were introduced that summer evening in 1926, were definitely a novelty.

Everyone familiar with the motion picture is familiar with the mad scramble which resulted from the introduction of sound to the industry, the ensuing months during which every producer expended his every effort to install sound apparatus, make a sound picture—and present it to the public before his competitor could—those months during which theatres were wired for sound, equipment was installed and tested, and the first audible productions were exhibited, hectic months, months filled with worry, hard work and excitement, but nevertheless months which, when viewed in retrospect, seemed filled with drama.

THE YEAR 1931 has, in the opinion of many of the leaders in the industry, marked the end of this period of rapid, more or less frantic change of apparatus and method. The year 1932, from all indications, will usher in a period of gradual improvement of apparatus, but will be marked by few startling changes.

Probably the most important change that will take place in the realm of sound will be an improvement of projection equipment in such manner as to increase materially the range of audible frequencies reproduced. Although careful design of microphone, amplifiers and recorder has made it possible, for some time past, to record a frequency range of from approximately 64 to 10,000 vibrations per second, limitations imposed by theatre equipment, and especially by the reproducing horns or loudspeakers, has made projection of sound in the higher frequencies impossible. (The ordinary theatre horn cuts off at around 3,500 vibrations per second.) Improvements in the design of this horn equipment which may be confidently looked for during the coming year, will result in a very notable improvement in reproduced sound.

A perusal of the records of the major sound equipment companies shows a marked decline in service calls for the year 1931, as compared with previous years. Two reasons may be assigned for this fact, one being the increasing knowledge of and familiarity with his equipment that is being gained by the projectionist, the other being the improvement in apparatus that is being constantly made. Individual units are being built of better materials and of more rugged construction. Still further improvement in this regard may be looked for during the coming year.

WHILE MANY of the larger theatres have during the past year improved the acoustics of their auditoriums and made changes in projection practice which have resulted in better sound, there has been little if any improvement noted in the small theatre (this according to the progress report of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, released during December). An improvement of general business conditions during the coming year will undoubtedly result in a greater effort to improve the sound in the smaller theatre.

There has been considerable publicity given to a recent prophecy by Mr. Carl M. Weber, president of the Weber Machine Corporation, who has given as his opinion the statement that 1932 will see a complete elimination of disc recording in conjunction with the motion picture. While indications point to a general decline in the use of discs in the theatre, it is felt by a number of technicians interviewed on the subject that the sweeping generality of the statement condemns it. There is no doubt but what the general availability of a low-priced, sturdy, positive drive, easily threaded sound head will do much towards a general replacement of disc reproduction by film. Improvements which have been made and which are being utilized at the present time in recording have resulted in better sound on film than may be obtained on wax. It is the general opinion on the Pacific Coast that comparable improvements may be expected in the near future in the apparatus or method of disc recording, but the absolute lack of definite and authentic data makes an intelligent prophecy on the film-or-disc question impossible. Suffice it to say that the trend at the present time, in view of present equipment and present practice, is away from the disc and toward the film.

It might be well in passing to note that all producing companies are at the present time, and have been since the introduction of sound to the motion picture, recording on both film and wax. If for nothing other than protection, this practice will no doubt continue even should use of the disc in the theatre be entirely discontinued.

In the realm of purely studio equipment it might be of interest to bring out the fact that there seems to be a definite trend towards the use of small portable recording units, which may be operated more economically than the large truck-mounted outfits. While the large and somewhat cumbersome sound trucks will no doubt always play an important part in recording activities, present indications are that much of the recording of the future will be done on small compact units, either mounted in a light car or truck or in carrying cases.

A recent example of the results which may be secured by the use of this light equipment is furnished by the Pathe production, "Suicide Fleet," the action of which takes place on board the destroyers, submarines and cruisers of the Navy. Much of the sound for this picture was recorded with a small unit weighing less than 250 pounds and mounted in nine small suitcases. There is no appreciable difference in the sound obtained with this recording unit and the sound obtained in certain scenes made in the studio and recorded on the regular studio sound system equipment.

SEVERAL months ago the producers technicians' committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, submitted a questionnaire to 60 cinematographers of the motion picture industry, inviting their opinions and ideas on present camera silencing equipment. Ninety-one per cent of these men favored a complete elimination of the blimp (soundproofing device which is placed about the camera in order that the noise of camera gears and moving members will not be transmitted to the microphone), while 55 per cent of them noted difficulties in focusing and in handling the camera during photography, due to the excess weight and cumbersomeness of the device.

Experimental work which has been carried on along the line of camera silencing has been directed along two lines. One has been towards an improvement of the existing blimp, the other towards the development of a completely silent camera, which would eliminate all necessity for any sort of blimp. There has been developed very recently a blimp which is of interest on account of its unique construction, but which will no doubt be overshadowed and its importance minimized by developments in camera construction that will be made and utilized during 1932. This blimp, developed at the Educational studios, is constructed with air-tight seals and embodies a small motor driven vacuum pump, which exhausts the air from the interior just previous to shooting. The camera thus operates in a (not perfect but effective) vacuum, the lack of air within the blimp making transmission of camera noise impossible. Certain details of construction make a perfect air seal impossible, but these limitations have been overcome to allow an exhaustion of air, which makes an effective vacuum for a period of two minutes, and that allows all but the longest of scenes to be shot without difficulty. Tests conducted by the studio have indicated that the blimp is completely silent to a microphone placed within two feet of it, which is eminently satisfactory and a material improvement over the blimps now in general use.

It is, however, the general belief of technicians that the year 1932 will see the introduction of a silent camera to the industry. In fact, Bell & Howell has, after some three years of research, developed such a camera, which is to be shown to the industry in Hollywood within the next month. This camera, although engineering details are not at present available, may prove to be an answer to the prayers of the sound engineer and cinematographer, having important bearing on reproduction. A completely silent camera motor, to be used in conjunction with the silent camera, has been developed by RCA Photophone, and will be ready for use with the new camera.

The past six months have been very lean ones for the commercial color companies. However, the year 1932 appears bright for this branch of the industry, and color no doubt will become a definite factor in the productions during the year. There is at the present time a definite trend towards color in short subject and advertising pictures, as well as an indicated tendency towards the use of color in feature productions. Color pictures have shown a general improvement, and several pronounced defects which have caused criticism in the past have been eliminated. The color of 1932 will not dominate the picture but will be blended with the other effects which combine to make the successful picture—dialogue, action, photography and sound. It is a significant fact that all the Bruce Travelogues for 1932 will be released in color for the first time in the 18 years during which Mr. Bruce has been producing these shorts.

CLOSELY allied with the problem of color is the problem of laboratory practice and the making of release prints. All laboratories making these prints are following the standards laid down by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, and aside from a greater care in the printing and inspection of these films by the laboratories, which is felt to be necessary by many connected with the production end of the industry, no great change in release print making procedure is anticipated during the coming 12 months. Bell & Howell, however, has announced a new continuous production printer to permit the printing of the picture and the sound record simultaneously with automatic control of printing light, which would give possibilities of standardization in release print quality. This machine is now in the process of manufacture and the first printers will be placed in the laboratories during the next three months. A general improvement of release print quality should be noted from the use of such a machine. Laboratory processing of the negative and master prints is felt to be quite satisfactory.

The general adoption of the standard release print has greatly reduced the necessity for cue sheets, and it is likely that during the coming year their use will be entirely abandoned.

The year 1932 will, from all indications, see the universal adoption of a standard aperture for both camera and projector. The committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences which is now working upon this problem, has arrived at a standard, and all details connected with the problem will within a short time be settled. The adoption of the standard aperture will have far-reaching effects, both in the studio aand in the theatre, among which will be the encompassing of the essential dramatic action on a full screen, and the elimination of all movable flippers on the projection machine and of changes of screen masks, aperture plates and lenses during the show. Frame lines will again help the projectionist, as in the old silent days, to correct for a picture out of frame before the audience is aware of anything wrong.

The more technically minded exhibitor and projectionist already knows that caesium is being substituted for potassium in the photoelectric cells used both in the studio and in the theatre. Reports indicate that all of the equipment of one of the larger equipment companies will include caesium cells by the end of 1932. Caesium, it might be remarked, gives a longer-lived photoelectric cell, as well as considerably more gain than the former potassium cell.

Conclusions drawn from the statements of the various reviewing groups throughout the United States forecast a definitely improved sound motion picture for 1932. "Better pictures for better attendance" seems to have become the slogan of the various producing organizations. There is a pronounced leaning towards the so-called family picture, which can do nothing but result in an increased theatre attendance during the coming year. The General Federation of Women's Clubs Review, in commenting upon this in a recent bulletin, remarked:

"If this tendency continues—and all signs point to it—we believe that a new audience will be found in the theatres, made up of discriminating people who enjoy entertainment that has dramatic value, clean ideas, and is, as a whole, in good taste."

The fact that this tendency has been operative during the past few years is shown by the fact that the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, which compiles a list of approved pictures, endorsed 49 per cent of the pictures reviewed during 1930, while the percentage jumped to approximately 65 during 1931. This tendency has not alone been noted by reviewing groups, for many of the writers whose daily and weekly comments on the photoplay are carried in various periodicals and newspapers, have met this trend in film improvement with praise and commendation.

It might be well to bring out the fact that it is the almost universal opinion of those who are charged with the production of the motion picture that the picture of 1932 will embody less talk and more action. During the first years of the sound era, the very novelty of the talking picture was sufficient to carry it, which fact coupled with the various limitations imposed by sound resulted in a picture which has grown to be considered wordy and slow of action. Improvements in sound equipment will make the motion picture of 1932, comparable in flexibility to the production of 1925, and the purely action picture may be looked for during the coming year.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

THE SUPERVISION OF PROJECTION

EVEN THE HIGHER officials of the industry are at last coming to a realization of the fact that projection is really one of the important units of the train of gears through which the industry has contact with its supporter, the public. They are beginning to understand that without excellence in projection they cannot hope to justify excellence in either picture or sound recording. Some of the larger circuits, after a long and enormously expensive delay, have instituted a department presumed to have authority over, and to handle all matters pertaining to, projection. To a limited extent some of these departments really do so, though some of them are rather farcical because of the fact that the director of projection has almost no real authority.

As a matter of fact, up to date, no corporation has delegated to its director of projection the complete authority he should have in all matters pertaining to projection. Also, up to this time, I believe every corporation that has instituted such a department, is insisting that its head officer, the director of projection, devote a goodly proportion of his time to visiting individual theatres, making equipment installations and performing other duties of like nature, which make it impossible for him to give other matters of at least equal importance the attention they should have.

The director of projection in any theatre chain of good size has all the work that he, by any stretch of imagination, can possibly attend to. He is but one man. He cannot possibly attend to the matters I shall hereinafter set forth, and at the same time visit theatres, make equipment installations, etc. Other men cannot take his place in the office, but he may and should obtain expert men to attend to the visiting of theatres—which latter should be done frequently and regularly. The director of projection should visit individual theatres only in cases demanding some special attention, or in cases where there seems a possibility that by such a visit he may add to his own knowledge.

The men he employs to attend to theatre matters, equipment installation, etc., must, if maximum results are to be attained, be expert in (a) motion picture projection, both from the practical and theoretic standpoint and (b) in all matters pertaining to both theoretic and practical sound reproduction and projection. No man not possessed of these qualities can possibly hope to visit a theatre and locate the seat of any particular fault in projection with any degree of certainty. It just cannot be done, and since excellence in projection is so very important to the box office, it follows that such regular inspections, if made by competent men, cannot fail to repay the cost at the box office.

However, if inspections be made by other than men thoroughly conversant with both practical and theoretical projection, and such persons undertake to fix the blame for faults detected, confusion will almost certainly result. Under such a condition a correct diagnosis will be not only highly improbable, but almost impossible.

All those working under a director of projection should be made to feel and know that, so far as they be concerned, he is the final authority. They must know that he has full, complete authority over his department and all matters pertaining to projection. If they do not believe this, it is certain that the best results will not be had. Division of authority always makes for poor results. By this, of course, I do not mean to convey the idea that there must not be an authority over the director of projection. But the director should have full authority over those directly under him.

What, then, should be the duties of a director of projection? First, so far as this may be, under the limitations set up by unions, it should be his duty to comb the field for the very best projectionists available. Second, he should make it his business to assemble in his department as many as may be necessary of the most competent available experts in practical and theoretic motion picture-sound projection affairs, to act as his direct representatives in the matter of inspecting theatres, effecting equipment adjustments, repairs, etc., and making equipment installations. Third, he should build up a system by means of which the chief projectionist or manager of each theatre shall make a weekly or a monthly report of each piece of projection equipment in the theatre, its exact age and state of repair, thus having at all times available a complete, up-to-date schedule of the equipment in every theatre of the chain. Fourth, it should be his duty to examine all new projection equipment put out by manufacturers, and himself make, or cause to be made, complete tests as to its operating efficiency, its stability and its cost, as compared with other similar equipment.

Every director of projection should attend all meetings of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, at the expense of his company. This he should do for two reasons: because such men are needed at such meetings, and the S.M.P.E. is doing work by and through which exhibitors benefit both directly and indirectly; and because at such meetings the director of projection cannot fail to gain ideas of real value, to him in his work and therefore to his company. It perhaps is hardly to be expected that individual exhibitors can afford to send their chief projectionist to all, or even perhaps to any, of these meetings, but certainly great theatre chains can afford to do so, and they owe it to themselves and to the industry to do so.

In addition to all this, directors of projection should, at reasonable intervals, (say, once every 60 days), hold a meeting in one of the theatres, either in the morning or after the last performance, at which new equipments may be shown and explained, and suitable talks on projection problems be given. Such meetings would be interesting to the men as well as very valuable.

IMPROVE SPROCKET IDLER ROLLERS

EVER SINCE the beginning of projection of motion pictures, considerable damage has been done by sprocket idlers, the rollers of which refuse to rotate. It is quite true that we are always "after" projector manufacturers, demanding that they make improvements. To do them justice, they have usually met the demand, and met it in acceptable fashion. However, there is nothing strange in the fact that we did demand these improvements.

Recalling a Chapter in Projection's Past

THE OTHER DAY I unearthed a photograph of the Nicholas Power luncheon given in the Biltmore Hotel in New York, August 24, 1915. It seems to me such a picture should be of distinct interest to you all, partly because it provides a view of some remembered ones who have gone to their eternal rest, partly for the reason that it shows how we scatter to the four winds and finally disappear from the industry, forgotten.

That last has already happened to some of those shown here, or at least I have been unable to find anyone who could identify them by name. Of course, we all know that Nicholas Power was gathered unto his fathers years ago.

In the photograph are shown: (1) John Wylie, then general manager of Moving Picture World, now with S. Waterburg & Son, makers of shoes, in Brooklyn; (2) John Skarrett, general manager of Nicholas Power Company, passed away years since; (3) unknown; (4) Arthur Lang, then foreign representative of the Nicholas Power Company, present whereabouts unknown; (5) Steven de Szlssnak, president of Steven de Szlssnak, Inc., a Polish count, at that time publisher of the well known export paper, Export American Industries; (6) William Johnson, then editor of Motion Picture News; (7) Mr. Gillette, then on the staff of Motion Picture News; (8) Edward Earle, general manager of Nicholas Power Company, long since passed away; (9) F. H. Richardson; (10) Unknown; (11) Terry Ramsaye, then in charge of advertising for Mutual Film Corporation, now editor of Motion Picture Herald; (12) George Blaisdel, then on the staff of Moving Picture World, now editor of the Cinematograph Weekly, on the West Coast; (13) Wendell Milligan, then on advertising staff of Moving Picture World, now editor of the Bridgeport Herald (I am advised that is the name of the paper, but my recollection is it is Norwalk instead of Bridgeport); (14) A. MacArthur, then advertising manager of Moving Picture World, now a producer and an agent for actors; (15 to 24) Unknown; (25) Will C. Smith, then on the official staff of the Nicholas Power Company, now with the Nation Theatre Supply Company, in its New York office; (26) Unknown; (27) George C. Vedder, now trades counselor on the staff of the McGraw-Hill Corporation; (28) James Hoff (or was it Huff), editor Moving Picture World, deceased; (20) Franklin Johnson, then and now treasurer of the American Exporter.

Perhaps we should have demanded some of them very much sooner than we did. It certainly is none too soon for us to examine the sprocket idlers now.

Sprocket idlers fail to rotate for the very simple reason that adequate lubrication is difficult to achieve. I venture the assertion that many projectors have been in operation for years without the sprocket idlers ever having been oiled. Then, too, even if they are lubricated, there is more or less a tendency for dirt to work in and gum the thing solid—or, if the oil be too heavy, it will be sufficient to stop the rotation of the roller.

After a sprocket roller idler has ceased rotating, in the course of time a flat spot wears, and when a thick splice comes through (there should not be any thick splices, but there are!) there is a tendency for the corner of the flat side of the roller to catch and tear the film.

It seems to me that such rollers should have a ball-bearing. This would require a roller of increased diameter—but after all, why not? If it is thought that increased diameter is objectionable, then why not merely a curved sheet of glass-hard sheet metal, or even a curved piece of glass. The only objection to the latter would be the possibility of breaking, and since the face of such a glass need only be the width of the sprocket brim, such danger would be negligible. However, it is not up to me to tell the manufacturers just exactly what ought to be done. The point is, I know and every projectionist knows, that those dinky little idler rollers are not what they should be. I therefore suggest that some kind of change be made the object of experimental work among the projector manufacturers.

AN INTERESTING PRIVATE PLAYHOUSE

WHILE VISITING the home of Otto Nelson, manager of the motion picture department of the National Cash Register Company, in Dayton, O., I was told that Mrs. H. E. Talbott, whose beautiful residence I had driven past several times, had caused to be erected upon her grounds and had for a long time operated what amounts to a private playhouse. So "intriguing" was the verbal description, that I ventured to call Mrs. Talbott by phone. As a result, Friend Daughter and I were cordially invited to call and look over the playhouse.

The Talbott home is on the crest of a small rise in spacious grounds, at the foot of which, immediately to the rear of the residence, is the playhouse. Mrs. Talbott takes very keen interest in all matters of civic welfare in the community, and because of her interest and her love for young people, she built the playhouse, in which her friends and family may enjoy clean, healthful amusements.

The building itself is 185 feet long and 80 feet wide. Its roof runs up to a rather high peak and is entirely of rough-finished glass. The auditorium has a level floor, covered with linoleum. The floor serves as a tennis court in inclement weather and during the winter months.

The auditorium is well lighted in a way that throws no shadows. A most charming feature is that the entire auditorium floor is surrounded by a narrow bed of earth, in which grow flowers—protected by suitable netting.

At one end is a spacious stage, fully

WANTS PROJECTIONISTS TO EXCHANGE LETTERS

SOME interesting suggestions have come from R. H. Reed of Hartford City, Ind. He believes that if projectionists all over the country were provided with a way to communicate with one another by mail, they would be able to help one another in many ways. He says:

"Now we don't know where in thunder to find the men who are interested in the motion picture industry from the projectionist's standpoint. I would be glad to communicate with any number of projectionists seeking to benefit the industry—through excellence of work in projection. Our Maker certainly knows that the projection room is the last thing thought of by most theatre managers, and it is up to the projectionist to make them see its importance in a clear light. May I suggest that if BETTER THEATRES would carry a list of persons who wish to co-operate or communicate with fellow workers, we would soon be able to get together to the benefit of the whole.

"I firmly believe that film should be distributed on 2,000-foot reels. The one-man projectionist has his hands full handling the sound, rewinding, inspecting, etc., without having to make a changeover every eight or nine minutes."

There is considerably more to this letter, but the main ideas of Friend Reed have been set forth in what has already been said. Correspondence by mail along the lines suggested would, with all due respect to Brother Reed, not accomplish much. Here is the situation: Say Friend Reed wrote 25 letters each week, which is certainly all any one man could be expected to do. He could thus reach 25 men out of somewhere between the 25,000 and 30,000 men actively engaged in projection in this country and Canada. On the other hand he could write just one letter to these columns and reach at least nine-tenths of the working projectionists in the two countries.

ONE MAN? OR TWO?

which endeavor they have my most hearty sympathy, for the reason that I hold such a reduction would in the end cost exhibitors very, very much more than the wage reduction would amount to; also for the further reason that it is, in my judgment, unreasonable for exhibitors to expect one man to handle the equipment of today in any but small theatre installations.

True it is very probable that no immediate ill effect may be observed, but that proves nothing at all. It is one of those things, the effect of which will, in the very nature of things, be insidious. A man who feels that he is being treated unfairly and who is obliged to perform the work which properly should be divided between two men, will feel resentful. Men who are contented, who feel that they have been fairly dealt with and that they are being asked to perform a reasonable amount of work, will do decidedly better work. They will perform their duties in a much better way. They will take decidedly better care of the costly equipment intrusted to their care.

The cost of the projection installation, including sound, in what might be termed the average city theatre, runs from $10,000 to $12,000. It may, and not infrequently does run, to almost double that sum in deluxe theatres, but such houses are not included in this discussion. The figures are not my own. They were supplied by the head of one of the largest supply-dealing corporations in the country—a corporation making projection installations constantly, hence in position to know the facts as to total cost.

Now presuming an installation to be the minimum, or $10,000, and that with proper care it will last for, say, five years without major replacements, we may figure the deterioration at $2,000 per year. Of course, that is not accurate, because some parts of the equipment will last much longer. But it is close enough for our purpose.

Now suppose we reduce the projection force to one man, and that man, feeling dissatisfied (besides having his hands very full), becomes careless. He does not give the equipment the constant careful care he should, hence it deteriorates more rapidly, and at the end of three years is in the condition it would have been in at the end of five years with better care.

There is also another side to the matter. The careless man does not do as good work as the contented, careful one. Certainly it must be recognized that the added deterioration in equipment, plus more or less carelessness in work, must affect results. Common sense tells us that poor projection results must mean, in the end, box office loss.

I therefore say that in my opinion the reduction from two men to one man cannot represent clear gain. I go further, and say that it may easily mean financial loss, when the story is all told, though unfortunately it is a thing which must be "figured out" in probabilities, since any accurate check in results is impossible.

However, what I started out to say—that the Salt Lake City men have resorted to the radio to set before the people of that city their side of the one-or-two-man controversy, which is certainly good business procedure. I have been privileged to examine their radio address, in typewritten form, and I find it to be a clean, business argument. The men have not resorted to mud slinging. They have set their side of the matter before the people in what seems to be a fair, straight-forward manner.

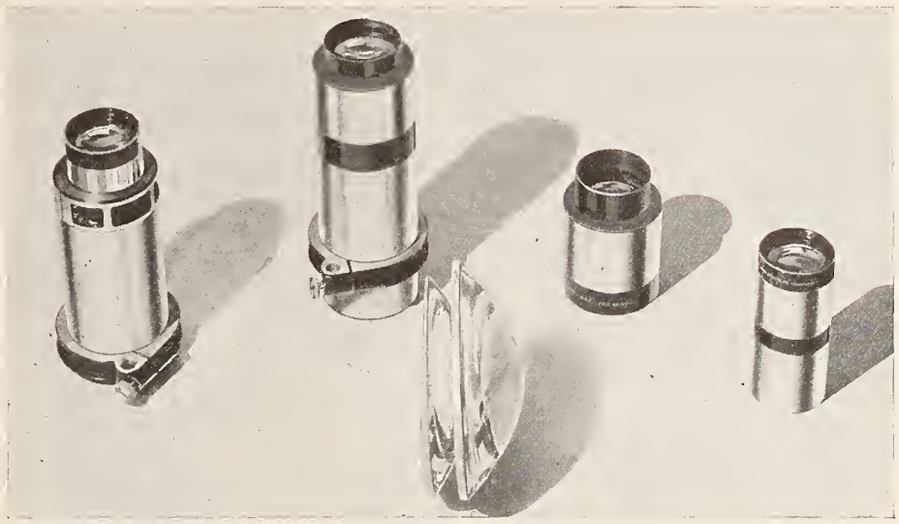
The radio has opened to everyone an opportunity to lay arguments before the public. If a station of recognized standing be used, and the argument be put on at an hour when the whole family is presumably at home, the public, or at least a very goodly share of it, will know, when the week is finished, exactly what it is all about. No tossing of mud, though! Just the facts, as they may seem from your own viewpoint. The public does not like mud, no matter by whom it be thrown.

PROJECTION IN MERRY ENGLAND



FROM a progressive projectionist in England comes the following:

"First of all I would like to say how pleased I am that you are always ready to champion the cause of the projectionists over here, as well as those in your own country. There are not many in this land who would speak out as you do. I don't really care for trade unions. I prefer to be able to call my soul my own. Over here, in this country, there is a musicians' union, and I have known of so many absolutely dud musicians receiving remuneration which, compared with their accomplishments, was entirely absurd.

"I don't think conditions for projectionists over here are generally anything good. I would like to make it quite clear that I have no complaint with reference to my own job, as I get £5 a week, have really decent working hours and am treated like a human being. I would like, however, to set before you a few facts about two cinemas here in this town where things are very different.

"In one case the hall is just a small suburban one of no class. The chief projectionist, who has been there for about 16 years, left recently to go to another and better hall. His place was given to a lad who was his former spool-boy. He also worked for me for a year, though I can assure you he would never be placed in any theatre of mine (if I owned one), not even in second or third place. At this hall he is assisted by another lad who has little or no knowledge. They receive the magnificent sum of 30 shillings [normally $7.50] each per week and are quite pleased to have it. The proprietor of this hall says he cannot pay any more. The other case is different. A new super hall was recently opened here. It has all of the modern improvements in equipment. The manager here applied for and got the management of the new hall. He wanted me to go along, but when I found out the working conditions I refused.

"They have four projectionists and one maintenance man, the latter being responsible for the electrical work. He also Get Aboard the Large Picture Trend with Super Cinephor!

There's no denying the trend to larger pictures, and their appeal to the public must be recognized by every theater operator. The modern theater must be prepared for wide film and wide screen requirements while continuing to give the best in the way of standard screen projection.

Super Cinephor and the new B & L Condensing System meet this demand exactly. Super Cinephor is the first true anastigmat. Corrected for wide angle projection, and made in focal lengths down to 2 inches, it produces sharp, clearly defined images to the very margin of the screen.

It distributes the light so efficiently that even on wide or giant screens the image has exceptional brilliance. It's got a projection punch that means profits. Are you missing this opportunity to make a moderate investment that will put your showings out in front?

F. H. RICHARDSON

With over 20 years of experience and the well-known Richardson brand of sincerity, this famed feature of Better Theatres includes a desire to aid projectionists in their daily professional problems. When puzzled about the way your equipment is acting, write Richardson. He's one of those queer birds who likes to help the other fellow.

assists the projectionists. The chief receives 6-10-6 per week [six pounds, 10 shillings, sixpence], for which he must work every day from 9:30 a.m., to 12:30 p.m. He then is allowed the whole of an hour for lunch, after which he is confined in the theatre till 11 p.m.; not allowed to leave the premises even for tea. He has no nights off—nothing but work and sleep. Exactly the same conditions apply to the second and third man—though the janitor is actually allowed to go out for tea! There is no proper cafe attached, as there is here in my place. They have to eat in a miserable messroom down below.

"Now, Mr. Richardson, I am fond of my work, as any sensible man is, and have, on special occasions, worked all one day, then all night and all the next day again, without complaint, for it was unavoidable. But I submit that for projectionists to work under the conditions I have described is little short of slavery. It makes neither for good health nor good projection. I have been to see the show, and it was not as good as it might have been, by a long shot. But what can be expected?"

And yet this brother does not believe in unions, or at least does not like them, and really the objection he has voiced is an entirely legitimate one. We have seen exactly the same thing here, in both the musicians' and the projectionists' organizations. I said, "We have seen." I was wrong. We see it right now, though not nearly to so great an extent as we did a few years ago. That condition, it must of course be granted, is not altogether the fault of the union—in fact, may not be their fault at all. It may be a condition forced upon them by the fact that in licensed territories men are now licensed who are not competent in projection matters, and that the unions are forced to take at least a percentage of these men into the organization, or very quickly there will be a great abundance of half-baked "projectionists" outside the organization, at least some of whom will be very willing to step into the place of union men when there is any argument over wages, working conditions, etc., which would, of course, reduce the effectiveness of the union.

However, in the United States and Canada, we have found that organization, while undoubtedly by no means perfect, nevertheless is a very highly necessary thing. Moreover, we have found that the increase in wages which employers fear so greatly, really operates, in the end, for their own benefit. Our English projectionist gets 30 shillings a week. He has no money to spend, except that which is necessary for the very cheapest kind of a home, the cheapest kind of clothing and the cheapest kind of foods, with little or nothing left over. The merchant benefits but very little by his work. The exhibitor benefits nothing at all, for aside from box office damage resulting from the poor grade of work he is bound to receive in return for low wages, this man's family has no money to spend for amusement.

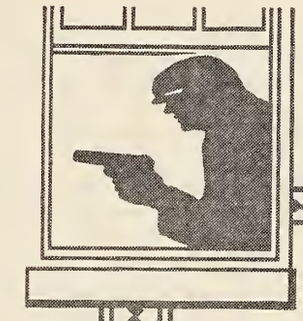
No, the unions have their faults, but we cannot agree with you that those faults are sufficient to justify their abolition.

TRACING CAUSES OF A HUM

G. L. TAGGART of Brookfield, Mo., is having trouble, which he describes as follows:

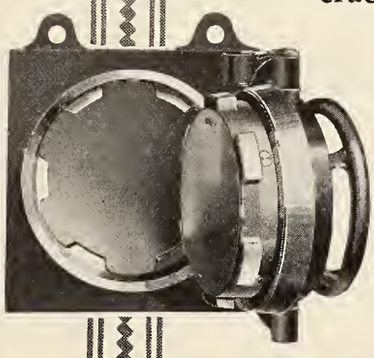
"I am owner of a small theatre located in a nearby town. Up to a short time ago the sound was quite good. During the past three weeks a noise has developed which may best be described as a 'hum.' It is neither harsh nor very loud. Can you advise me as to what various things might cause such a trouble?"

Several things, Friend Taggart, nor am I at all certain I can name all possible seats of such a fault. Defective, shorted vacuum tubes may be the cause, usually in either the last stage of amplification or the stage next to it. Worn tubes have low emission and may cause howling or squealing. Another possible cause is unbalanced rectifier tubes. Hum (usually a loud one) may be set up by shorted by-pass condensers. It also is possible the trouble may be charged to an open secondary to in-put transformers and bias resisters, or to filter chokes and filter condensers.



You see, the possible seats of such a trouble are many, and I have not set them all forth. It is even possible to trace the cause of hum to the magnetic fields set up by nearby electrical equipment, such as motor generators, rotary converters, or even to a mercury arc rectifier. You may ascertain whether or no this latter is true by energizing the amplifier, with the motor-generator or other set suspected, dead. Then if there is no hum present, turn on the suspected set or sets until the hum appears. Such a condition means that the set causing the trouble is located too close to the sound apparatus.

First, however, make very sure the tubes are all right, as they, or one of them, is the most likely seat of the trouble. If it be not in them, or any one of them, test the condensers and other things named, making sure they are all in good condition. Tracing such a trouble is a bit of an engineer's job, but in small towns it is now pretty necessary that the projectionist be something of an engineer, if he expects to find and remedy all those many possible ills the modern projection room equipment may fall heir to.



PULLING AIR-PLANE STUNTS

RECENTLY Phillip M. Mohun, airplane stunt pilot, and Johnnie Runger, parachute jumper, wing-walker and aerial acrobat, honored me and Friend Daughter by spending an evening at our home. They did this (Secrut—Don't tell the traffic cops) after having negotiated 364 miles in 8½ hours, mostly through Pennsylvania mountains, where curves are curves—when they are not V-bends!

Naturally, when the demands of hospitality had been met, I steered conversation stuntwards, with results which I am sure will interest our readers, even though the "projection" we shall talk of employs the earth as a screen.

Most of the stunts pulled by these gentlemen are for incorporation in motion pictures, though of course not all of them. The day following their visit to our home, Mr. Mohun was slated to drop from a plane at a 5,000-foot altitude and drop 3,000 feet before opening his chute. That was to be a motion picture stunt. What I shall relate to you came direct from the lips of either Mr. Runger or Mr. Mohun.

Mr. Mohun has performed some hair-raising stunts for motion pictures, and he bears scars a-plenty for remembrance—a silver plate in his skull, some awful looking scars on his legs, and a bit of his shin bone doing duty for some missing bone in his back, for example.

Just to get the boys going, I expressed belief that collisions in the air were more or less cleverly managed fakes. Suffering catfish! You should have heard them rise to that! They mighty near' bit me, and in the verbal mix-up I got what I was after.

First, the scars I spoke of were displayed as visual evidence, and they were pretty terrible, too.

"Of course," said Mohun, "we protect ourselves as much as we are able to, but about all it is possible to do in that direction is to reinforce the cockpit and pad it thoroughly. But when one must wreck a plane at a speed of from 50 to 70 miles per hour, reinforcing and padding is not exactly a guarantee of safety. We must just go through the stunt, whatever it may happen to be, and trust to the god of luck to see us through. And the things some of the directors want done make us wonder each day where we will be on the morrow.

"Aside from what has been said, there is little we can do, except try to keep our wits about us at the instant of trouble. But when one must wreck a plane, remembering that slow speed is entirely out of the question, the shock is such that usually, at least for an instant, the brain itself is more or less numbed.

"On one occasion [This from Mohun], my job was to drive a plane through a row of trees and wreck it by smashing the wings against the trees, one tree on either side. The first wreck was unsatisfactory. I did it again, but still it was not just what was wanted. The third time it clicked, and I was left alive to tell the tale."

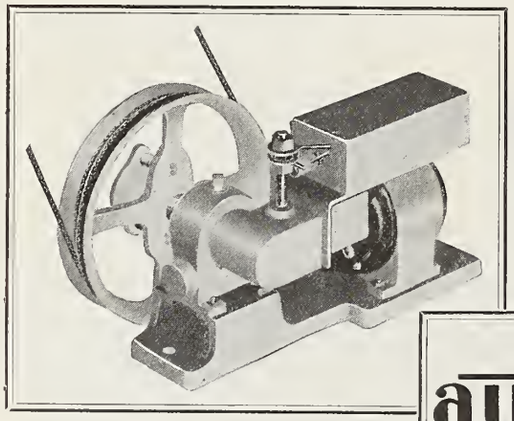
Mohun told us of many exciting exploits, one of which was to collide with another plane at 5,000 feet above the earth. They brought the planes together wing to wing—one wing of each plane, of course—because propellor to propellor would have meant instant death to both pilots. At the time of impact, the pilots were both strapped to their seats by two broad leathern belts, which were released by jerking a ring sidewise. Just how he got free from the plane, Mohun was unable to tell me.

"Things happen too fast at such a time for one to remember details. All I know is that I did manage somehow to rip those straps off and jump out, after which it was all right, as the planes, locked together, drifted away, and I had my parachute."

Runger has made a total of 354 jumps to date. Aside from jumps, he has, on a number of occasions, stood unsupported on an airplane wing while it made a complete loop-the-loop.

"During the first second," he said, "one falls 16 feet. During the next second this speed is exactly doubled, and it keeps on doubling until at 1,200 feet it has reached the rate of approximately 125 miles per hour. This is assuming the chute remained unopened. When that speed has been attained, there is no further acceleration, the resistance of the atmosphere being thereafter sufficient to overbalance the pull of gravitation.

"Except that a parachute cannot be made to move against an air current, its occupant may guide it in any desired direction merely by manipulating the shroud lines—the lines by means of which the chute top is attached to the curved portion of the D-ring, to which the jumper's harness is attached. If it is desired to drift in any given direction, the occupant has only to pull down on the shroud lines on the side he wishes to drift toward. This has the effect of inclining the chute top, partially emptying it of air, increasing the speed of drop and causing the chute to side-slip in the direction desired.



"Should the jumper wish to drop fast and vertically, he may pull the shroud lines on three sides until the chute collapses, losing all but a small portion of its air, whereupon it will stand in a vertical position and drop vertically, or very nearly so. The experienced pilot may thus collapse his chute, drop vertically until within 150 feet of the ground, whereupon the lines are released, the chute fills and the speed of descent is brought down to a speed of safety for landing. This, however, must only be attempted by men of experience, who understand their business thoroughly and are able to keep a clear head while flirting with death, since in dropping, 150 feet is no great distance. The highest jump to date is between 27,000 and 28,000 feet.

"There is danger of the chute failing to open. Many have died from that cause. However, the careful, experienced jumper need have no fear. Chutes fail to open because of dampness collected in the cloth, because of faulty construction of the chute, and because of faulty manipulation by the jumper. I have myself had three cases where my chute failed to open, but was able to remedy the trouble in time. On one occasion I pulled the chute bundle down to me by the shroud lines and forced it open with my hands, which may be done by an experienced jumper, if there be sufficient length of drop to provide time, and the jumper works very fast and intelligently.

"After the chute has opened and settled down, it drops (I speak of the 24-foot-diameter chute) 16 feet per second, or 960 feet per minute, though the speed varies somewhat according to wind pressure. Chutes of various diameters, of course, fall at different speeds. The diameters now in use are 22, 24, 26 and 28 feet. The 24-footer, which is most practical for picture and other stunt work, weighs 18 pounds.

"When landing in a strong air current, either on land or on water, the procedure followed by experienced men is as follows: When about 200 feet from contact, we release ourselves from the harness, holding to the D-ring bar with the hands. Just before contact we bend the knees slightly, at the same time raising the body as high as possible with the arms. These two movements provide a limited amount of shock absorption. At the instant of contact we release the chute and let it drift away. Regardless of how expert the jumper may be, he cannot possibly hope to escape alive if when making a water landing he permits the chute to settle down over him. He will be instantly entangled by the shroud lines and covered by the great sheet of cloth.

"When a chute oscillates heavily, the movement may be stopped by pulling the shroud lines on the high side at each swing. It is now compulsory for all jumpers engaged in exhibition work to wear two chutes, one a 28-footer carried on the back, and an 18-footer on the chest. The large one is, of course, opened for the descent, and the small one when near the ground if it seems necessary.

"The strain upon the harness is very heavy when a long delayed drop is done and the chute opened only after a maximum speed of 125 miles per hour has been reached. Often heavy black and blue marks appear upon the shoulders and body. It frequently is very painful when the chute is opened on such drops.

"Often after jumping the body will begin turning somersaults, one to each 150 feet of drop. This movement cannot be controlled by the jumper, and since the chute must not be opened while beneath the body, the jumper must watch his chance and pull the rip cord while the body is beneath the chute.

"The shroud lines are attached to a metal ring in the form of the letter D, of which the straight bar is underneath, with the harness attached to it."

A most interesting and highly dangerous game. No wonder the motion picture "hero" prefers to have a double when such stunts are pulled! Next time you project a chute or airplane stunt, just remember that it is no fake, but the real thing, the making of which caused men to pass very close to the gates of Paradise or—well, anyhow, they certainly shook hands with the Grim Reaper, even if he did not gather them unto their fathers.

"The results were at least 100% better when we used your amplifier instead of the commercial type we previously had used.

"The greatest difference we noticed was in the absolutely natural tone; the clarity and purity of both speech and music being astonishing. Another thing visiting exhibitors always comment on is the almost entire absence of 'surface' or 'background' noise. The screen is so silent you can't tell whether the sound is on or not until a character speaks."

THE PROJECTIONIST TODAY

a note on his new position

By SILVAN HARRIS

[A FOREWORD BY F. H. RICHARDSON: The projectionist should be gratified to have this recognition from a representative of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. I would only comment upon Mr. Harris' remarks to the extent of pointing out, since Mr. Harris does not, that what he here sets forth, the projectionist's elevation to the position of an engineer, represents in large measure the work of such old friends of projection as myself. Until rather recently, there was no motion picture engineering society, or any other similar agency, laboring in behalf of the projectionist. At first I conducted a lone fight, through the publications now represented in Motion Picture Herald, for the establishment of projection on a higher plane, and later I was joined by others. It is pleasant to have the editor-manager of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers now recognize what must be to a large extent the fruits of these efforts.]

AS TIME goes on the world is learning to appreciate the fact that the projectionist is no longer the operator of old—the mechanic who turned the crank and trimmed the carbons. He has evolved into a technician, a man who must possess the knowledge and training which are requisite for properly operating a number of highly developed and complex pieces of apparatus, to keep them always in good order, and in emergencies, to repair them.

The requisite attainments of the men who have charge of this equipment have advanced with time in direct proportion to the complexity and technicality of the equipment. The motion picture world has come to realize this, and is now beginning to look upon the projectionist with a proper regard and respect, which he could not command in the past. The Society of Motion Picture Engineers, especially, has signified its acknowledgment of the importance of the projectionist to the art, and of his deserving of full recognition, by establishing the Projection Practice Committee, whose function it is to study the complicated problems that perplex the projectionist, and to assist him in solving these problems.

As the strength of a chain is dependent upon the strenth of its individual links, so the motion picture show is no better than what the projectionist makes of it, regardless of the quality of the film with which he is furnished, or of the grade of apparatus with which he is to project the picture. It is therefore incumbent upon the industry to pay more attention to the projectionist and to the projection room, to establish standards not only of design of apparatus, but also of programs of maintenance, to furnish the projectionist with the information requisite to good projection, and above all, to afford him all of those things which contribute to his self-respect as a technician—for the projectionist is a technician—which were not attainable in the past in his role of "operator."

For it is nowise to be conceived that the box-office receipts are less dependent upon projection than upon production, or processing, or any other phase of the art. The picture and the sound are the tangible commodities which the patron receives for the money he leaves with the cashier. The projectionist, and the art of projecting pictures and reproducing sound, must be admitted between the film which is delivered to him and the patron who views it, and upon the projectionist alone depends how much of the quality—dramatic, photographic and acoustic—of the film reaches the screen. When one considers that the existence of not only the theatre, but of the studios, processing plants, film manufacturies, equipment builders and all the rest, is contingent upon what is displayed upon the screen, he begins to realize the importance of projection as the means by which all these phases are brought to the patron.

The success with which a motion picture may be projected to the screen, and with which sound may be reproduced from film or disc, depends on a multitude of things, all of which are included within the projection room. But it is a matter of fact that things outside the projection room can exert considerable influence upon what the patrons of the theatre will view and hear. A screen darkened by dirt or illuminated by stray light, an auditorium full of reverberation or spotted by "sound pockets," distortion of the picture on the screen due to the necessity of projecting at a large angle from the horizontal, masking of the tops and the bottoms of pictures due to the lack of standardization of aperture dimensions, and many other related things—any or all of these may easily vitiate the efforts of the projectionist to produce a screen picture that will invite the patrons to visit the theatre again.

DURING the past year, the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers concentrated its attention mainly on the projection room, devising plans for the physical layout and the construction of the room, and a program of conduct and maintenance which would effectively contribute to the projection of high-quality pictures. Having accomplished this, the committee is this year directing its attention more particularly to the equipment of the projection room. The various mechanisms employed in projection are being minutely studied with regard to the tolerances required, and the wearing of parts in motion, and the effect of these things on the life of the film and the danger of mutilating it.

Although the Projection Practice Committee deals primarily with the projection room itself and its contents, it is not possible for it to ignore entirely the factors external to the projection room, as has been mentioned before. Sub-committees of this committee form linkages with the Sound Committee, the Projection Screens Committee, and the Projection Theory Committee, the functions of which are to investigate the factors outside the projection room which contribute to the quality of projection.

On account of the fact that so many factors influence the projection of pictures and the reproduction of sound, over which the projectionist has no control, it is all the more important that he become acquainted with them, not so much for the reason that he can do anything about them, or for the reason that they might furnish "alibis" for faulty projection or reproduction, but rather that a proper knowledge of these factors will enable him to segregate from the mass the particular factors which appertain directly to his own problem of projecting pictures and reproducing sound. The acoustical properties of an auditorium may so distort the reproduced sound as to make it impossible to judge whether the fault lies within the province of the projectionist or within that of the acoustics engineer.

IT IS CLEAR, then, that the projectionist should have a general knowledge of many phases of motion picture technology, for although it may not be to a man's credit to be "Jack of all trades and master of none," it surely would react considerably to his advantage to be "Jack of all trades and master of one."

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers was founded for the distinct purpose of assisting those engaged in motion picture engineering to become such. The extent of the investigations which are conducted by the committees, the diverse natures of these investigations and of the technical papers published each month in the Journal of the society, furnish material for every type of "Jack" and every type of "master" to be found in motion picture engineering. It is for the projectionist to take advantage of such a fountain of technical knowledge, to consult the reports of these committees, to widen his associations by adding to them those gained by membership in the society, and to familiarize himself with the wealth of material appearing regularly in the Journal, which is published at the headquarters of the Society in New York City. He is cordially invited to join with his fellow-technicians in a movement which cannot but add to his dignity and the proper respect in which he will be held by the motion picture industry.

Equipment News and Comment

PHOTOPHONE MERGED

● The activities of RCA Photophone, Inc., have been unified with those of the RCA Victor Company, the latter being the phonograph subsidiary of the Radio Corporation of America. The Photophone staff, as well as that concern's operations, are to be transferred to Camden, N. J., location of the Victor plant.

The announcement, which officially came through David Sarnoff, president of RCA, explains that the unification will "mean a closer association of sound recording and reproducing with the radio laboratory, and should give impetus to the introduction of sound reproducing equipment for use in homes, schools and industrial organizations, as well as in theatres."

NEW SOUND SCREEN

● A sound screen has been developed by Charles Beseler & Company of New York, having the perforations at an angle, the object being to give full transmissibility of sound without reduction in reflective qualities. It is asserted that the screen is fire-proof. This company also manufactures animated lobby displays.

NEW SOUND HEAD

● A sound head that, it is stated, eliminates all batteries, chargers, rectifiers, motor-generators and complicated wiring, has been brought on the market by S. O. S., of New York. The purchaser acquires only the sound head, amplifier and the necessary speakers.

SOUND STUNT

● Ingenuity is always contriving some special use for sound that tends to dissipate the established idea that sound processes are delicate and complicated. For example, the recent adaptation of sound equipment to the combined exploitation of "The Sin of Madelon Claudet" at the Boyd in Philadelphia, and the Philadelphia premiere of "Five Star Final" at the Stanley theatre. The sound department of the theatre was instructed to equip two floats for a parade. The float representing the Boyd consisted in a studio scene with actors, director, cameramen, sound engineers, etc. Forty 6-volt storage batteries mounted on a 4-deck rack were connected in parallel. The stage was lighted by two 110-volt, 1,000-watt lamps. Signs on the float were lighted by strip lights containing a total of fifty 10-watt lamps.

Sound equipment was operated from a 110-volt d.c., to 115-volt a.c. converter. A WE 387-W transmitter operated through a specially built amplifier having three 227's, and a pair of push-pull 245's, and a Pacent 70 amplifier supplied power for two Wright DeCoster dynamic speakers with flat baffles. Thus the people along the street were able to hear as well as see the action on the float.

Sound equipment on the Stanley float consisted in an Amplion transverse current microphone operated through a 60-mil 500-ohm primary transformer of two 227's and four parallel push-pull 245's. Plate current was supplied from a 12/400-volt d.c. motor-generator set. Filament current was from a 12-volt tap on the storage battery bank. Horns were WE 3½-foot trumpet with 555-W receiver and a 4-foot Racon trumpet with a Racon dynamic unit.

. . . and taking like wildfire in theatres here and abroad . . .

TESTED by Electrical Testing Laboratories for Light and inflammability. APPROVED "Accoustically" by Electrical Research Products, Inc., for use with Western Electric Sound System and by R.C.A. Photophone.

WHY?

1. The SARASONE Screen features a modern, patented construction.
2. Its selected yarns, interwoven with silver wire, produces myriads of tiny reflectors.
3. The SARASONE Screen produces clearer definition and more lifelike images.
4. The SARASONE Screen produces greater depth for pictures.
5. The SARASONE Screen spreads sound without echoes or dead pockets.
6. It amplifies and clarifies sound and vision throughout the house.
7. It is firmly constructed of durable materials for lasting service.
8. The SARASONE Screen is flame-proof.
9. The SARASONE Screen is seamless.
10. It is adaptable for your present frame for lacing or stretching.
11. It is Tested and Approved by nationally known, recognized laboratories.
12. It is priced direct from the maker at savings of 50% to you.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

I AM operating a few small houses in the Middle West. Most of these houses are treated with radiators. These radiators are recessed in the wall, but no grilles are provided for them. To improve the appearance of these houses, I would like to provide grilles in front of them. Some people seem to think that it would take away too much heat, but I think that I have plenty of heat capacity that I could stand a little loss of heat to improve the appearance of my houses.

There is another item I would like to ask you about, and that is, in the winter time when my heating apparatus is in operation, I get dirty spaces in the walls over the radiators. I have noticed that at several other houses, too. I have instructed my managers every spring to clean these with a wall cleaning material, but it has discolored the walls to such an extent that it is very noticeable and looks very bad. Do you know of any remedy for this difficulty?

You will think I want a lot of free advice, but I still would like to ask you one more question, and being a constant reader, I trust you will overlook my inquisitiveness.

In one of my houses I have a great deal of trouble in heating the foyer. I have two sets of doors in the lobby, but in the winter time when the doors are continuously opening a draft of cold air makes several of the last rows of the auditorium too cold for the patrons to be comfortable. About two-thirds of the front part of the house is all right. I seem to have enough radiation in the foyer, but I cannot get away from the drafts.

I will anxiously await your reply, and want to thank you for your kindness in giving me your appreciated advice.—A. W. C.

The Answer:

MY ADVICE would be to install metal grilles of neat design in front of your radiator, as it certainly would improve your house in its general appearance. You had better see a heating contractor and have him check up the radiation capacity, as you will lose a certain amount of heat. Of course you can obtain pretty nice stock designs of a large mesh, and if the area of the recess is quite a bit larger than the radiators, the loss of heat will be negligible. Be sure that the bottom of the grilles will be about even with the bottom of the legs of the radiators, so as not to have a dead pocket, which may stop the circulation.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

Have these grilles set in angle iron frames with the top hinged and provided with latches at the bottom for closing purposes. It is necessary that the grilles open not only for cleaning but also for access to valves.

The trouble which you are experiencing with dirty spots on the walls over radiators is very common, and I wish there was a satisfactory way of overcoming this nuisance. In a new house this trouble can be overcome by using a certain type of radiator, but in cases like yours the best thing to do is to clean the recesses out frequently. If you install the grilles of which I spoke before, you may have a metal cove projecting about three inches installed in the upper horizontal angle of the frame. This helps a great deal but does not eliminate the trouble entirely. I have tried to use several thicknesses of muslin on top of the radiators. This muslin should be washed about once a month. This has given pretty good results, but above all see that the radiators are cleaned frequently.

The last matter of which you ask advice is a common occurrence also. You did not mention whether there is a standee railing between the foyer and auditorium. If not, you could build a solid wall behind the last row of seats up to the soffit of the balcony (if you have any), then provide a set of doors at the end of each aisle. This method will remedy the trouble of draft and certainly will improve your house for sound. The other way of improvement would be to install a blower heat unit opposite the entrance doors from the lobby. This would force back the cold air to the lobby and would keep the back part of your auditorium comfortable. The only handicap is that you need about a 3-foot space to recess this blower. I advise you to consult with a heating contractor for sizes and capacity.

The Question:

LAST SPRING you were kind enough to give me suggestions for improvement of some rough sketches for a small theatre, also you gave me an approximate estimate of cost. Since my new house is nearly completed I want to thank you very sincerely for your advice, as it has been very beneficial to me and I have been able to construct my new theatre for less money than your estimate. I could not follow your suggestion of consulting with a theatre architect, as no architect lives in this town on account of small population, so I consulted with a good, reliable contractor and with your advice we have obtained a nice little theatre, but there is only one trouble we have; namely, that our ceiling will not dry out.

We use electric fans and put a lot of heat in the theatre, but still the ceiling keeps sweating and does not seem to dry out. We are ready for decorating and we wonder whether it could be the acoustical plaster we used, as the ordinary plaster on the side walls seem dry.—F. C. B.

The Answer:

YOUR KIND words are greatly appreciated, and I am glad to have been of some assistance to you.

The trouble which you are experiencing is very common. However, it is no fault of the acoustical plaster. The sweating of the ceiling is caused by the air pocket between ceiling and roof. I presume that the outside temperature is rather low.

Now the trouble is caused by condensation because of the hot air below the ceiling and the cold air above the roof. To remedy this you should place at least two ventilators in the middle of your roof equal distances apart, then place two grilles with adjustable louvres in the ceiling (not knowing the size of your auditorium, I suggest you consult your heating contractor in regard to sizes), and in a very short time the ceiling will be as dry as possible. The grilles in the ceiling will also serve for ventilating in the hot weather. Be sure your ceiling and walls are perfectly dry before decorating.

Paper: Society of Motion Picture Engineers

UTILIZATION OF DESIRABLE AREAS IN RELATION TO SCREEN SIZES AND SHAPES AND THEATRE FLOOR INCLINATIONS

[The following is a paper by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, delivered before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at its fall meeting in Swampscott, Mass., as of publication in the S. M. P. E. Journal for February, appended to which is a report of the discussion that followed reading of the paper to the society.]

THE PRINCIPLE of reversing the orchestra floor slope in theatre structures, as presented in a previous report, suggested the possibilities of correcting the faults of present day theatres. Bodily posture in seating, vision, projection angles, accessibility to the various levels, and construction costs were all affected. Further study of this new principle of theatre planning has resulted in the development of a definite relationship of the various functions that constitute the workability of the whole. Study has also brought out the fact that this new principle is not only applicable for improving the present form of the theatre, but also that many new forms, more adaptable to motion picture exhibition, can be derived from it.

A complete analysis has been made of correct bodily posture in connection with this new principle. With the aid of seating engineers, certain maximum and minimum pitches of chair backs and floor slopes have been arrived at. Tests have been made of the ranges of vision possible vertically, which can be obtained while sitting against differently pitched chair backs.

Practical projectionists have verified the need of lessening the angle of projection. This need has been recognized and answered in the studies made, by establishing a maximum angle of ten degrees to the center of the screen from the lens center. In most cases this angle will even be less, varying from ten degrees to an absolutely horizontal line of projection. The present method of theatre planning causes projection angles as great as thirty degrees and more. Regardless of the size or seating capacity of a particular theatre, the reversed floor principle of theatre planning requires no angle of projection greater than ten degrees.

It has been found that the enlarged screen can be more easily accommodated in a theatre structure if the reversed floor principle of planning is applied; and that it would be impossible to practically house an enlarged screen, using the present type of theatre planning, without causing considerable waste areas of structure and inefficiency in seating arrangements, resulting from failure to utilize the areas most valuable for comfortable vision. The difficulty of using an enlarged screen in present theatres has already evidenced itself, and is partly delaying its popular usage. Balcony overhang obstructions and the difficulty to obtain a full comfortable view of a higher screen are serious impediments, which are overcome by the use of the reversed floor.

THE PRACTICABILITY of applying the reversed floor principle to variously sized and proportioned plots of ground has been given special attention, the object always being to obtain a maximum amount of good seats within a minimum area. Many different adaptations of the reversed floor principle have been devised to fit the peculiar conditions of various theatre projects. The feasibility presents itself of placing a part or the whole of a theatre auditorium above or below the portions of a structure which may be used for other purposes. It therefore becomes important to design a theatre auditorium so that it will not require too much valuable area in the vertical sense. Thus the remaining portions of a structure above or below a theatre may provide an additional income, which in turn, results in a reduced rental for the theatre itself. The use of the reversed floor permits the building of the theatre within a limited height, where it would be impossible to include a theatre planned according to present practices.

A revised building code for the City of New York, affecting theatre structures, is about to be put into effect. The revision committee of this code has taken into consideration the possibilities of the reversed floor method of theatre planning by providing for its development in the wording of the code. The revised code will permit the inclusion of a theatre auditorium having a capacity of more than 600 seats directly under the portions of a building used for other purposes. This is already permitted in many other building codes.

For the purpose of making possible better vision, smaller projection angles, and reducing the cubage of the theatre structure, a very intensive search has been made to ascertain which of the physical areas are most valuable for seat locations, in relation to the screen—the object then being to use these areas only for seating arrangements. The present system of theatre planning necessitates the utilizing of portions beyond these valuable areas, thus causing extreme projection angles, distorted vision from high balconies, unnecessary construction costs, and the payment of excessive rentals for space which not only has no value to the exhibitor, but which also creates conditions highly unsuitable for motion picture exhibition. For these reasons the present method of theatre planning results in unscientific and uneconomically built structures. If the original construction and maintenance costs can be reduced, and yet give the theatre patron the comforts and surroundings due him, box office admissions might be such that would appeal to a larger theatre going public.

A chart (Fig. 1) showing the location of these desirable areas has been developed. These areas have been found by determining how much above and below, and how far from and near to a fixed screen, a spectator may sit, maintaining a comfortable bodily posture, and obtain a view of the entire screen. The spectator should also be seated in such a position, that will make the picture on the screen appear at a level which is most imitative of the level from which natural surroundings are viewed in real life. Still another determining factor in locating these valuable areas is that it is more natural to sit low, leaning slightly back against the support of a chair to obtain a higher view, than it is to sit high and lean forward to look down at a screen below the eye level. For these reasons, therefore, the desirable areas of seating are limited to levels below the top of the picture. While both the reversed floor slope and the present orchestra floor slope come within the desirable areas, the present slope of floor, which rises up away from the screen, causes all upper levels of seating to come within the areas undesirable for natural and comfortable viewing. The reversed orchestra floor slope has a much slower pitch downward than the present type of floor has upward. The present type of orchestra floor eats into the valuable areas unnecessarily, while the reversed orchestra floor hugs the lower region of the desirable areas, leaving the remaining valuable areas for additional seating levels.

A SYSTEM of adjusting the levels of the screen, the levels of the various eye lines, the distance between the eyes and the screen, the slope and inclination of the various levels of seating, and the pitches of the backs of the seats, has been developed (Fig. 2), keeping a definite relationship between all the elements involved. Mathematical formulae have been evolved to regulate the exact position of the screen in relation to the slopes and inclinations required for the orchestra and balcony levels. The shape and size of the screen are also a definite part of the calculations. Given the shape and size of the screen, and the distance between the screen and the first eye nearest the screen (which should equal exactly the width of the screen for perfect horizontal vision), the vertical distance between the level of the first eye nearest the screen and the level of the bottom of the screen is determined by means of a formula. This found distance then regulates the slope of the orchestra floor and the pitches of the chair backs. The resultant slope is a parabolic curve which starts near the screen with the downward pitch, and which decreases ununiformly until the floor is practically flat at about the twenty-fourth row of orchestra seating.

The orchestra floor slope in existing theatres does not have sufficient pitch to allow for vision of the bottom of the screen over the head of the person immediately in front of the viewer. If a sufficient pitch were used, it would be too steep for comfortable walking and it would make difficult the adjusting of the standards and leg supports of chairs to the slope of the floor. The mild pitch of the reversed floor necessary to allow full view of the bottom of the screen eliminates these difficulties encountered with the present floor slope. Full comfortable view of the entire height of the screen can not be obtained until the ninth row of the present orchestra floor slope is reached, causing severe neck and eye strain in about 300 seats in the average theatre. The reversed floor corrects this condition entirely, allowing comfortable view from every seat in the orchestra and higher levels.

The slope of the reversed floor automatically sets the proper pitch for the backs of the seats in every row. This eliminates the need for specially adjusted backs and changes in the standards and leg supports of the chairs. All chairs can then be exactly alike in every detail of construction. Instead of designing differently constructed seats to fit a particular slope, as is now necessary, the floor is designed to suit uniform seating. It is just as though the seats were placed in an ideal position for viewing the screen, with the floor built afterwards to support the seats as they are set.

The matter of determining the maximum tilt of chair backs has been taken up with the engineering department of a leading seating company. A tilt of twenty-seven degrees to a vertical line of gravity for the first row of seats nearest the screen has been suggested. This tilt will equally distribute the weight of the body to the seat and back of the chair, keeping the head of the spectator in a comfortable position. The tilts diminish to sixteen and two-thirds degrees in about the twenty-fourth row, and remain constant thereafter. The fact that the head assumes a pitch of two or three degrees less than the pitch of the body has been taken into consideration in the calculations for determining the floor slope (See Fig. 2). The feet of the occupant of a seat receive uniform and constant support, eliminating the feeling of sliding forward out of the seat as experienced in the present type of orchestra seating, because the angle and distances between the floor and the seat remain constant. The seating engineers report that there is no need for any mechanical change in the seat and claim that many economies can be effected. The "spring edge" seats which are required where the present type of floor inclines steeply from the front of the chair, are costly and undurable and can be eliminated. The reversed floor permits the use of the "box spring" seat which is less costly and more durable. The uneven wear of the seats and backs of chairs of the present orchestra floor is also corrected by equally distributing the weight of the body by properly tilting the seats on the reversed floor.

The results of these studies and tests of the principle of reversing the orchestra floor slope have been utilized in preparing a series of new forms for motion picture structures. Many variations of the seating arrangement are made possible that could not have been arrived at with the use of the present type of floor slope. The chart locating the valuable areas has been used as a basis for designing these forms.

DISCUSSION

MR. KELLOGG: From a novice's standpoint, I have sometimes thought of how I might try to figure out the best arrangement of theatre floor and seats. Imagine yourself looking toward the audience from the center of the screen; if the solid angle which your eyes encompass were filled with eyes and ears as compactly as possible, that would be on the way you could get the most people in. Thinking of it from that standpoint, there are several parts of the possible solid angle, within which people might hear and see satisfactorily, that are poorly utilized. One is the region below, which the arrangement proposed by Mr. Schlanger is primarily aimed to utilize to better advantage; and the other is the part of the solid angle occupied by the fronts of the balconies. There is only one way to cut out waste space due to balconies, besides making them as thin as possible, and that is, not to have balconies. But that does not furnish good space utilization, either.

From the standpoint of the utilizing angle below, one is confronted with the fact that the part of the audience nearest the stage subtends a disproportionately large angle compared with the number of people. I am wondering, whether, following the idea described in the paper, we might not actually, within the proper angle, pack more people into a theatre of given dimensions by not trying to begin too close to the screen. If you drop a little further back you can begin a little lower, leaving more height available for balconies.

There is one question I do not believe was answered in the paper, and that is, what is considered the desirable rise per row of seats. To be more specific, if a line were drawn from the back of one row of seats to the bottom of the screen, how much would that line miss the back of the next row? As a general rule, one can probably figure on looking between heads of the people immediately in front, but he will have to look over the heads of those seated two rows ahead of you. I should be interested to learn how much allowance is made for this factor.

MR. SCHLANGER: The point about having the first eye line farther away from the screen is quite possible, but it depends on how much area in front of the screen the theatre exhibitor is willing to devote to it. That area is costly. It is better practice to place the first seat a little farther away from the screen than it is usually placed.

Referring to the slide, it is seen that a given person sees above, and not between, the heads of the persons in front of him. His sight line passes over the head in front, passing to the very bottom of the screen. The orchestra floor in the present type of theatre is not pitched sufficiently to allow this complete view of the screen, therefore making it necessary for people to keep shifting their positions in order to see between the heads of the people ahead.

When constructing the diagram, a line is drawn from the bottom of the screen to the top of the head of the first spectator. This gives the eye level for the next row. The distance from the eye to the top of the head is four inches. So we connect another line from the bottom of the screen to a point four inches higher, and we have the sight line for the next row, and so on.

The pitch of the floor varies from row to row. The first row requires a greater pitch than the succeeding one, and so on. On reaching the twenty-fourth row, in the reverse floor system, the floor becomes practically flat. If the theatre were large enough, the curve would rise again somewhat above the fiftieth row.

In the present type of house, the low placing of the screen makes it necessary for each succeeding head to be higher, in order to see over the head of the person in front. The pitch increases so rapidly, that in existing theatres a compromise has been effected, and one looks between the heads of those in front, and not over their heads, as on the reversed floor.

MR. L. C. PORTER: I should like to know how much tolerance, if any, is allowed for variations in height among individuals. Is any allowance provided for such variations, or are the angles worked out for an average height?

MR. SCHLANGER: The average height measured from the floor to the eye level, the person sitting in a normally pitched chair on a flat floor, varies from three feet seven inches, to four feet; four feet is the dimension for a person six feet two inches tall. To allow for a person five feet eleven inches, or six feet, would be about right. Therefore, about three feet eleven inches should take care of every condition.

MR. F. H. RICHARDSON: On what do you base your choice of what you term desirable areas?

MR. SCHLANGER: The desirable areas are determined by the distance above or below the level of the screen at which it is comfortable to view the screen. To establish areas of desirability, a line is drawn from a test point to the important focal point on the screen; a line is then drawn, representing the back of the spectator, ninety degrees to this line. This will show how much the spectator must lean forward or backward. The areas where the spectator does not have to lean forward or raise his head are most desirable. The degrees of deviation from the comfortable posture determines the relative value of a given area.

MR. J. L. SPENCE: The suggestion was made that this floor plan would be adaptable to a Trans Lux theatre. The Trans Lux theatre was designed with a ten foot headroom, in order to be able to move in and out of established office buildings. To use this type of floor it would be necessary to break through to the cellar. If rear end projection were used it is possible that people walking in the aisle would get into the beam, and the seats would have to be placed farther back from the screen. The angle of view is so much wider with a rear projection screen, what would be gained by putting a projection room near the box office, would be lost at the front.

MR. SCHLANGER: The distance from the first row to the screen is not determined by the method of projection. It is determined by the size of the picture. Because the Trans Lux theatre presents a small picture frame on the wall, and therefore we can get very close to it, does not mean that. by the use of Trans Lux projection alone, can we exhibit motion pictures effectively.

As to the ten foot height mentioned, the headroom of the first floor of the average building is near to twelve feet. It is possible to use standard projection in such limited heights, by employing the reversed floor, thereby requiring only half the projection booth area necessary for Trans Lux projection. The saving in annual rental for this space on the street level, could be used to rent a foot or two below the street grade, which would allow the use of a much larger screen than is now used in Trans Lux theatres.

PROGRESS IN 1931

● Although the advances cited are limited to those effected by the Westinghouse engineering corp, the report of that company indicates that technical progress in the electrical world knew no depression during the past year.

Among the forward steps in electrical engineering at Westinghouse was the improvement of transformer design making it possible to throw a surge of 2,520,000 volts, rising at the rate of 11,000,000 volts per millionth of a second, on the transformer without incurring any damage. The report also cites the reduction of mercury rectifiers 33 per cent in size, while sectional rectifiers have been designed for assembly in groups at any desired rating.

OVERSTRESSING COOLING?

● J. F. Dailey, well known in the theatre field through his association with the Typhoon organization, comes forward with the statement that too much emphasis has been placed on "cooling" in considertion of the air conditioning needs of the theatre.

"In my opinion," he declares, "so much stress has been placed on the cooling angle that theatre owners have been led to the adoption of cooling systems that go far beyond the real need of their theatres."

What Mr. Dailey probably refers to is the tendency to regard air conditioning as cooling, rather than a system of providing pure air at all times, heating or cooling only as at any moment may be required.

Mr. Dailey now is president of the newly formed company, Typhoon Air Conditioning Company, which was organized to succeed the Typhoon Fan Company. E. L. Garfield, also of the former organization, is in charge of engineering. Headquarters are in New York.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● As a part of its new merchandising policy, discussed a few issues back in BETTER THEATRES, the E. E. Fulton Company has made San Francisco its headquarters city for the entire Pacific Coast. Paul Bush is in charge of company operations from this point.

Those who have had much to do with theatre seating, have generally thought that seven years should be considered as the life of a chair. But here's a recent instance in which that seven has been tripled, with the junkheap not in sight yet. When Robb & Rowley reseated their Big Springs, Tex., house, the chairs removed had been in service 22 years. They were installed in another R & R house then being renovated. This same circuit had previously removed chairs in service over 20 years, and selling them as second-hand chairs, got a price higher than had been originally paid for them! At least that's the story E. G. Bentley of the American Seating Company, tells.

C. W. Bates, formerly Chicago branch manager of the Square D. Company of Detroit, has been appointed assistant sales manager. G. S. Blomgren of the Chicago office succeeds Mr. Bates.

tance through which the occupant passes before being rigidly supported by the springs. Various practical design problems prevent the use of seats greater than six inches or seven inches in thickness in the conventional theatre chair. Occupants frequently vary in weight from less than 100 pounds to more than 200 pounds. It is necessary, therefore, to design spring units for seats so that the heavy occupant does not rest solidly on the supporting frame. Such a seat, however, is not yielding enough under light loads to give light occupants the sensation of greatest comfort. It is necessary, therefore, that the softness of seats be something of a compromise, and experience has shown that durability is secured by the use of spring constructions which are somewhat stiffer than those which give us the sensation of maximum comfort.

There may be a considerable difference, however, between a seat which will give an initial sensation of comfort and one which will continue to give that sensation after several hours of continuous occupancy. In general, extremely soft upholstering is less likely to be comfortable over long periods than cushions which flex enough to secure continuous contact, but in which one does not rest too deeply. It is highly desirable that the front edge be flexible, since a considerable portion of the occupants will consist of women and children who would normally be comfortably seated in lower chairs, on account of their lower average leg length.

The most annoying circumstance to which the theatre patron is subjected is the necessity for crowding past occupied seats at the end of the row to unoccupied seats in the center. The persistence with which human beings continue to select aisle seats in an empty row is irrefutable proof that mental evolution is at best a very slow and uncertain process. Operation counters applied experimentally to end and center seats show that the end seats are raised about ten times as often as center seats. In houses operated continually, very nearly to capacity, there is a continual movement of patrons entering and leaving seats. The inconvenience of this condition under continuous operation has been relieved somewhat by the gradual increase of row-to-row spacing. This increase in spacing, however, has encouraged the metropolitan habit of remaining seated as others are passing. Under these conditions it is doubtful if the increase in row-to-row spacing has effected much improvement.

A great many methods and devices have been suggested to relieve this condition. The Kunstler theatre of Munich by Max Littman has an aisle-less seating plan by which the row-to-row spacing is supposed to be sufficient to allow easy passage. By this arrangement the occupant of an end chair in this comparatively small house may have as many as 14 people walking across his line of vision. It seems unlkely that American audiences would appreciate this arrangement.

The problem has also been attacked from the opposite point of view. A seating arrangement in which four chair rows are used has been compared with the conventional arrangement for a number of houses. Although the individual aisles are narrower it would be necessary to increase the total aisle area by an amount that would cut down the seating capacity about 8% to 10%. This plan should hasten the emptying of a house and probably secure better utilization of its seating capacity. This has a number of very interesting possibilities.

A search of the United States Patent Office shows that the problem of designing a theatre chair which would facilitate ingress and egress has engaged the interest of many casual inventors. In general, these devices are quite impractical. Most devices secure space in front of any given chair by encroaching on the space of the chair behind. This is likely to be objectionable under any circumstance and might be a real physical hazard whenever patrons are simultaneously entering or leaving adjacent rows.

Most retracting chairs (as this type is called) require more power for movement, in either the rearward or forward direction, than the average occupant can develop in a seated position. Many of the designs disclosed by the patents could only be moved if the occupants were to place their feet well forward into the passageway, which retraction was supposed to be opening up, thus defeating the purpose of the chair. Most of the designs are inherently noisy, many of them have in-built finger pinching hazards, and few of them appear to be designed for continuous service.

Self-folding seat devices are being seriously considered at the present time as a partial corrective for some of these conditions. The patron entering a row can safely get by empty chairs without stumbling over unfolded seats. It is expected that these devices will allow a theatre to be filled and emptied with less confusion and in a shorter period of time than with conventional seating.

It is reasonable to expect that continued attention to the problem of seating comfort, and in particular to means for facilitating ingress and egress, will insure theatre chairs that will set new standards in comfort.

ing the audience to sing request selections. The station asked future co-operation in placing more solos on the air.

If your stage is equipped with a scrim drop, you have at your command one of the most desirable pieces of equipment to be had. Use the scrim in place of the picture screen for your slide novelty—your audience will appreciate the change, for it gives them something different to look at while watching the slides. Naturally the scrim is most adaptable to the straight type of slide novelty, and the effects that can he had through the use of stage lighting are invaluable in the struggle for variety. Enlist the aid of the stage electrician and come down early of a morning and experiment for effects.

There are still a great many organists who believe that the sight of the console rising in a colored spot is a novelty. The average patron might be inclined to dispute the fact, were his opinion enlisted. There is no doubt that the organ plays a great part in dressing up or "deluxing" the modern theatre program, but the organist must never take too much for granted along these lines, and should utilize every possibility to insure the continued popularity of the greatest of all musical instruments.

In these trying days of strict economic policies, most theatre men and managers are disinclined to provide a budget covering the rental or purchase of large numbers of slide novelties. It therefore becomes the burden of the organist to create novelties without cost to the firm. The man who can hold down the expenditure of cash in the organ department is viewed as a distinct asset to the policy of the firm.

In conclusion, allow me to express the hope that this recitation of actual experiences may prove useful to our profession in one way or another. Now, more than ever before, the organist must fight for his spot in the show. Co-operation with the house manager will usually insure the proper advertising and publicity angle covering an unusual organ novelty. It would be a bold statement to say that an organist who constantly strives to create something new and entertaining could be assured of uninterrupted employment, but I honestly believe his chances would be enhanced about 100 per cent in the great endeavor of securing and keeping a steady position.

NEW THEATRE PROJECTS

FOLLOWING is a list of new projects in motion picture theatre construction compiled from reports available on January 12. The list also includes remodeling projects and contracts awarded. An asterisk before an item indicates that additional information has been received since a previous report.

Theatres Planned

California

BERKELEY — The United Artists Theatres of California, 333 South Broadway, Los Angeles, Calif., has revised plans by Walker & Eisen and C. A. Balch, Western Pacific Building, Los Angeles, Calif., for a reinforced concrete theatre to be located on Shattuck avenue. Former contract rescinded. Estimated cost, $200,000.

LOS ANGELES—Owner, care S. C. Lee, architect, 2404 West Seventh street, is preparing sketches for fifty concrete theatres, with 300 seating capacity each, to be located in various cities. Estimated cost, $50,000 each.

Florida

HIALEAH—James Hodges, of Miami, Fla., plans the erection of a new reinforced concrete theatre, with seating capacity of 650.

Georgia

ATLANTA—J. A. Ress, 516 Boulevard, S. E., has plans by Marye, Vinour, Marye & Armisstead, Walton Building, for a two-story brick and stone-trim theatre, 50 by 102 feet, to be located on Fair street, S. E.

Indiana

EVANSVILLE—Dixie Realty Company, A. O. Hasensell, president, Claremore Hotel building, 127 Locust street, has plans by A. S. Craven, Inc., 100 North La Salle street, Chicago, Ill., for a three-story theatre to be located at Second and Sycamore streets. Estimated cost, $200,000.

Kansas

WICHITA—D. Walker and associates propose to erect a new brick, terra cotta and reinforced concrete theatre at First and Main streets.

Louisiana

ABBEYVILLE—R. J. Montagne has plans by Charles Davis, 1204 Jackson avenue, New Orleans, La., for a proposed modern brick theatre, 50 by 121 feet.

Massachusetts

GARDNER—L. G. McKnight, 324 Main street, plans the erection of a new brick theatre on Main street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

New Jersey

RED BANK—Boylan & Levine, architects, 143 Albany street, New Brunswick, N. J., have invited bids for a two-story brick theatre for the Red Bank Amusement Company. R. C. Burke, 76 Summit avenue, Plainfield, N. J., engineer. Estimated cost, $250,000.

New York

NEW YORK—The F. H. D. Holding Corporation, 309 West Twenty-third street, has plans by Thomas B. Lamb, 507 Seventh avenue, and invited bids on the general contract for a new theatre and store building to be located at 261 Eighth avenue. Estimated cost, $1,000,000.

North Carolina

CANTON—The Strand Theatre plans the erection of a balcony theatre on the State Highway at Park avenue and Adams street, 50 by 115 feet, with seating capacity of 1,250.

WINSTON-SALEM—Pilot Real Estate Company plans the erection of a theatre for colored patrons at Church, Fourth and Chestnut streets.

Virginia

NORFOLK—W. S. Wilder, director Newport Theatre, has plans by Bernard Spilgel, New Monroe Building, for proposed theatre to be located at Calley and Shirley avenues.

WILLIAMSBURG—Luther E. Warner, architect, Grace Securities Building, has completed plans for proposed new picture theatre.

Vermont

BELLOWS FALLS—Suter Estate, J. W. Suter, trustee, plans the reconstruction of three-story theatre, store and office building recently destroyed by fire. Architect not selected. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Canada

SARNIA, ONT.—M. Harris, 264 Brock street N., has plans by S. Alliston, 174½ Christiana street, N., for a brick and tile theatre, 80 by 175 feet. Estimated cost, $200,000.

Remodeling

Florida

MIAMI—John C. Knight, Venetian Arcade Building, has awarded the contract to G. Henry Hunt, Inc., 1636 S. W. Ninth street, for repairs, additions and other improvements to the Paramount Theatre, S. E. First avenue. Lee L. Wade, architect, 1006 Exchange Building.

New Jersey

NEWARK—F. Grad, architect, 1023 Broad street, is taking bids on the general contract for alterations and constructing an addition to theatre and store building at Market and Ward streets for the Fleissner Realty Company. Estimated cost, $150,000.

New York

NEW YORK—Alurion Realty Corporation, W. T. Knight, president, 60 Wall street, has plans by Thomas B. Lamb, 570 Seventh avenue, and has invited bids on the general contract for alterations to theatre at 254 West Forty-second street. Estimated cost, $500,000.

South Carolina

COLUMBIA — Paramount - Publix Theatres, Paramount Building, New York, has leased theatre and plans expending $10,000 to remodel.

Tennessee

CHATTANOOGA — Independent Theatres, Inc., 527 Market street, has awarded the contract to Rogers & Leventhal, Eleventh street, to remodel two-story theatre at 39-41 East Main street. William Crutchfield, architect, First National Bank Building. Estimated cost, $20,000.

Contracts Awarded

California

LONG BEACH—The United Artists Theatres of California, 333 South Broadway, Los Angeles, Calif., has awarded the contract to J. Wesley Forderer, 742 Hill street, for the completion of 100 by 145 foot reinforced concrete theatre. Former contract rescinded. Estimated cost, $118,000.

Indiana

ANGOLA—Westley Corporation, 228 North La Salle street, Chicago, Ill., has awarded the contract to C. W. Holland for the erection of a new two-story brick and stone-trim theatre, 60 by 200 feet. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Massachusetts

GLOUCESTER—J. D. Bloomberg, 83 Main street, has awarded the contract to G. B. H. Macomber Company, 38 Chauncy street, Boston, Mass., for the erection of a one-story brick, stone and reinforced concrete theatre at 238 Main street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

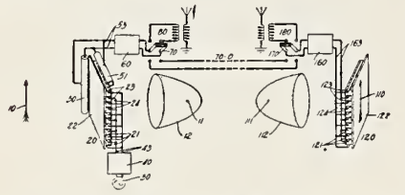
Maryland

CUMBERLAND — F. Hazelwood, Howard street, has the contract for the erection of a three-story reinforced concrete theatre for the Capitol Theatre Company. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY—R. B. Bingham, 704 East Third street, has the contract for the erection of a one-story brick theatre, 30 by 115 feet. Estimated cost, $10,000.

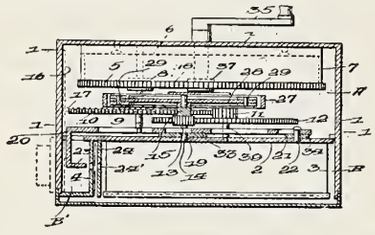
Rhode Island



PROVIDENCE — J. Conn, 368 Friendship street, has awarded the contract to E. Turgeon, 36 Exchange street, for the erection of a brick theatre and store building at Chestnut and Broad streets. Estimated cost, $150,000.

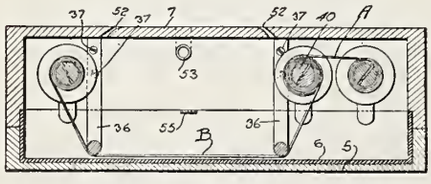
West Virginia

CHARLES TOWN—Benjamin T. Pitts and E. C. Bill, Fredericksburg, Va., are erecting a two-story brick theatre, 55 by 135 feet, with seating capacity of 1,000. Estimated cost, $65,000.



New Inventions . . . illustrated descriptions of devices related to motion pictures and allied crafts, recently published by the U. S. government and selected for Better Theatres by William N. Moore, patent specialist of Washington, D. C.

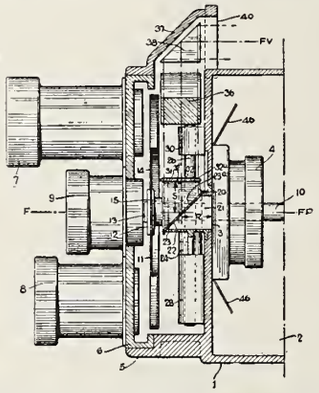
1,808,137. ELECTROOPTICAL SYSTEM. Ralph V. L. Hartley, South Orange, N. J., assignor to Bell Telephone Laboratories Incorporated, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Aug. 28, 1928. Serial No. 302,448. 14 Claims. (Cl. 178—6.)



1. The method of producing an image electro-optically which comprises simultaneously producing a plurality of trains of light waves equal in number to the elemental areas of a field of view, an image of which is to be produced, each of said trains being modulated in accordance with the light tone values of the corresponding elemental area of the field of view and having a distinctive super-audio frequency characteristic.

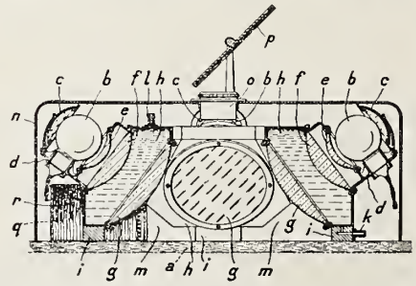
1,772,772. CINEMATOGRAPHIC CAMERA. Otto Fischer, Dresden, Germany, assignor to the Firm: I C A, Aktiengesellschaft, Dresden, Germany. Filed Aug. 8, 1925. Serial No. 49,055, and in Germany Aug. 9, 1924. 3 Claims. (Cl. 88—18.4.)

1. In a cinematographic camera, a casing having a partition dividing the same into compartments, a film holder in one compartment, a spring motor in the other compartment, a driving shaft operated by said motor, a film feeding member also in the latter compartment and supported by said partition, said partition having an opening in which a portion of the feeder is movable for engagement with the film, means on said shaft for imparting reciprocating and oscillating movements to said member to feed the film in said holder, and a regulator also on said shaft for controlling the speed of rotation thereof.



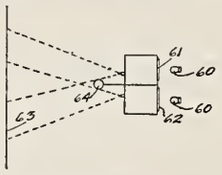
1,808,585. APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING AND PRINTING PICTURES. Eugene Wasylenko, Chester, Pa. Filed Sept. 26, 1929. Serial No. 395,441. 6 Claims. (Cl. 95—90.5.)

1. In a device for preparing and printing films, comprising a container adapted for holding a developing fluid, a cover for the receptable having transverse openings in its upper wall, and means for directing a film negative into close engagement with the bottom of the receptacle or through the transverse openings in the cover.



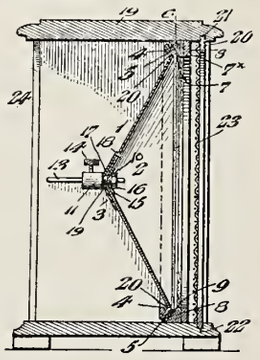
1,777,419. FOCUS AND FINDING APPARATUS FOR MOTION-PICTURE CAMERAS. Oscar A. Ross, New York, N. Y. Filed Apr. 23, 1927. Serial No. 186,089. 15 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.)

1. In combination, a motion picture camera, an objective supported thereby arranged to project a beam of image rays onto a film therein, a view finder attached to the camera arranged to receive the beam projected by the objective, a reciprocating light deflecting member supported by the camera for intermittently intercepting the beam between the objective and the film arranged to periodically deflect the beam into the view finder, a shutter positioned to travel in the path of the beam having opaque portions, each arranged to intercept the beam between the objective and the film during each reciprocating movement of the reciprocating member but



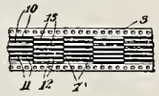
permit the beam to pass therethrough during the stationary periods of the member, and means for operating the reciprocating member and the shutter in synchronism whereby the beam is alternately projected into the view finder and onto the film during the stationary periods of the reciprocating member and the opaque shutter portions will intercept the beam while the reciprocating member is in a state of reciprocation from one position to the other.

1,807,614. APPARATUS FOR EPISCOPIC PROJECTION. Walter Bauersfeld and Bruno Gerstenberger, Jena, Germany, assignors to the Firm of Carl Zeiss, Jena, Germany. Filed June 28, 1929, Serial No. 374,435, and in Germany June 29, 1928. 4 Claims. (Cl. 88—24.)



1. An apparatus for episcopic projection, containing a projecting objective, a plurality of sources of light arranged in a circle round the said objective, a plurality of condenser systems, the axes of these condenser systems being obliquely directed inward to the spot on which the object to be projected is to be placed, the said condenser systems being adapted to receive the rays emitted by one of the sources of light and to reflect them on the said spot, and, disposed between the sources of light and the said spot, a circular chamber adapted to hold cooling liquid, the said chamber being provided with openings permitting the rays coming from the sources of light to pass on to the said spot.

1,808,352. PHOTOGRAPHIC PROCESS. Henry John Hollen, Chicago, Ill. Filed Nov. 9, 1925. Serial No. 67,965. 2 Claims. (Cl. 88—24.)



2. The herein described process of projecting blended images from photographic pictures taken from different positions, which consists in projecting light simultaneously through two or more positives or negatives upon image-receiving surface, certain portions of the light projected through one negative or positive overlapping that projected through another adjacent negative and positive and simultaneously causing a decrease of the intensity of light from the outer edges of the overlapped area to the center thereof.

1,762,184. ACOUSTIC DEVICE. Spencer W. McKellip, Philadelphia, Pa., assignor to Wirt Company, Germantown, Pa., a Corporation of Maine. Filed Apr. 1, 1926. Serial No. 98,987. 4 Claims. (Cl. 181—31.)

1. An acoustic device comprising a support having an opening and a ring of yielding material surrounding it and forming a cushion, of a cone of vibratile material having an edging of similar material resting against the cushion and means for vibrating the cone.

1,807,877. MOTION PICTURE. Sydney J. Sanford, Philadelphia, Pa., assignor of one-half to Chester W. Larner, Philadelphia, Pa. Filed May 12, 1926. Serial No. 108,481. 4 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.)

1. A motion picture film having a series of successive picture spaces, each of said picture spaces having a plurality of spaced portions and a plurality of successive independent exposures on groups of said spaced portions, each group and corresponding exposure being distributed across the picture space, the portions being so small as to appear to the eye to merge together, successive groups forming a continuous series of motion pictures across each of said picture spaces and groups of said spaced portions across each successive picture space being of one continuous motion picture whereby a relatively short length of motion picture film is provided.

theatre owner did not request the producer of "Settin' the Pace" to fulfill the contract, and the latter did not bring his company to the theatre the week of the contract, but later sued the theatre owner for damages. The lower court held the theatre owner liable, and the latter appealed to the higher court on the contention that the producer was not entitled to recover damages, because he had not appeared at the theatre ready to perform the contract. It is interesting to observe that the higher court held the theatre owner liable in $5,000 damages, saying:

"Plaintiff (producer) did not bring his company from New York to Philadelphia and tender performance at defendant's theatre, and it is argued in the latter's behalf that plaintiff was bound to do so before he is in position to sue. Under the circumstances we think the position not well taken. Plaintiff knew that the other play was about to be staged and defendant did not advise him otherwise or in reply to his telegrams call upon him to bring his company to Philadelphia. . . . By contracting to exhibit the other production during the week when plaintiff's (producer's) was to have appeared, defendant put it beyond his power to perform so far as plaintiff was concerned."

Meaning of Lease Contract

A COURT will not construe a contract different from the intended meaning of the contracting parties. However, where a clause in a contract is ambiguous, the court may interpret its meaning in the light which it believes was the original intention of the contracting parties. This point of the law was upheld in the late case of Sutcliffe v. Pawtucket Amusement Company (155 Atl. 578).

The facts of this case are that a property owner and a theatre owner entered into a lease contract. A clause in the lease specified as follows: "Three months before the expiration of the first period of ten (10) years said lessor and said lessee shall each give in writing to the other the names of three (3) disinterested men familiar with real estate values in said city, and each party shall select from the three (3) names given by the other party one (1) man to act as appraiser. The two (2) men so chosen shall select a third and these three (3) appraisers shall fix upon a fair and just sum for the annual rental of said demised land, and the building thereon, for the further term of ten (10) years."

At the end of the ten year period three appraisers were selected to determine the valuation of the real estate in order to arrive at a reasonable rental charge. The appraisers failed to arrive at an agreement, although two out of the three rendered a verdict.

The property owner contended that although the contract did not specify that a decision rendered by a majority of the appraisers should be considered valid and enforceable, yet since various higher courts in this and many other states have held that in cases of this kind the majority rules, such law should be read into the contract. The counsel for the theatre owner argued that the three appraisers should unanimously agree because the clause in the contract specified that "appraisers shall fix upon a fair and just sum for the annual rental."

However, it is important to know that the higher court held that an opinion rendered by the majority of appraisers is void and unenforceable, because the lease contract does not distinctly specify whether the majority or the unanimous opinion of the appraisers rules. This court stated the following important law:

"It will be observed that in the clause of the lease above set forth there is no express provision for an award by a majority of the appraisers nor any language from which such provision might arise by implication. . . . In construing a contract, the primary object is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the parties. The court is not at liberty to read into a contract a meaning which the parties did not intend. . . . It is evident from the lease itself that it was prepared by those expert in such matters, and it is a fair presumption that they were aware of the court decisions in this state which call for unanimity on the part of arbitrators. Had it been their intention to be bound by a majority of the arbitrators, they would undoubtedly have said so."

Leases and Licenses

IT IS ELEMENTARY law that no particular words, technical or otherwise, or forms of expression, are necessary to constitute a lease. In fact, the relationship of landlord and tenant is determined from the intent of the parties ascertained from a consideration of the entire contract. Generally speaking, if exclusive possession or control of the premises, or a portion thereof, is granted, even though the use is restricted, the contract is a lease and not a license.

The importance of being able to determine the distinction between a lease and a license resides in the fact that a theatre operator who leases property is practically the owner thereof, during the term of the tenancy, whereas a theatre operator who merely has a license to occupy property cannot use it in any way not specifically included in the contract.

For example, in Barnett v. Lincoln (299 Pac. 392), it was disclosed that a property owner entered into a contract by the terms of which he assumed responsibility for the maintenance and repair of the building and its roof, whereas the tenant assumer responsibility for loss, damage or injury to the premises caused by its employes, invitees, or licensees, other than by reasonable use of the building.

The contract further provided that "in the event the building situated on the premises should be totally or partially lost or destroyed by fire or other casualty, the tenant shall have the right to declare the contract terminated by written notice."

In holding this contract to be a lease and not a license, the higher court stated the following important law:

"A lease is a contract for the exclusive possession of lands or tenements for some certain number of years or other determinate period, and a contract for such exclusive possession is a lease, although there may be certain reservations or a restriction of the purpose for which the possession may be used, and although it may be described as a license. . . . A tenant, as we have before seen, has the possession and the right of possession, which he may assert against the whole world, and which, except in the case of a tenant at will, he may transfer to another, and is not terminable at the landlord's option. . . . One having a license, on the other hand, has merely a permission to do certain acts."

Lessee Liable for Injury

IT IS SETTLED law that a theatre operator who has the unrestricted use and control of theatre premises, and who is in actual occupancy and control thereof, has accepted the duty to exercise ordinary care in the use of the property and the appurtenances thereto in order to avoid injury to patrons and pedestrians on the adjacent sidewalk.

For illustration, in the late case of Shouse v. Dubinsky (38 S. W. [2d] 530), it was shown that a theatre operator leased a theatre building which had affixed thereto a flight of iron steps leading to the gallery of the theatre. Although it was a fire escape, it was used at times to accommodate the exit of patrons from the gallery when large crowds attended the theatre.

One night a pedestrian, when walking on the sidewalk, bumped his face in contact with the lower section of the fire escape, which resulted in serious injury. He sued the theatre operator for damages and proved that, when the injury occurred, no light was on the fire escape and that the theatre operator had control over its operation.

The theatre operator attempted to avoid liability by testifying that he only leased the building and the owner had constructed the fire escape. Nevertheless the higher court held the theatre operator liable.

BROKAW'S THEATRE

ANGOLA. INDIANA

December 24,

O. F. Spahr, President,
The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.,
564 W. Randolph Street,
Chicago, Illinois.

Dear Mr. Spahr:

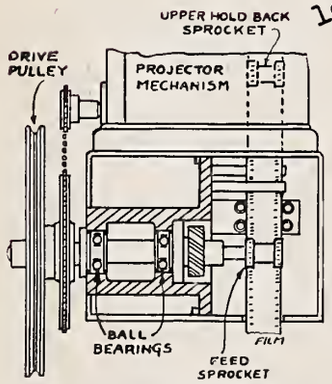
In reply to your inquiry as to how we like your Motiograph Sound Projectors, wish to state that:

We opened the New Brokaw Theatre Aug. 27, 1931, and have averaged more than twenty shows a week without a stop. Our Patrons are mostly college students from all over the world, attending Tri-State College here. This school teaches Electrical Engineering.

These students visit our booth daily to learn how we produce such wonderful SOUND.

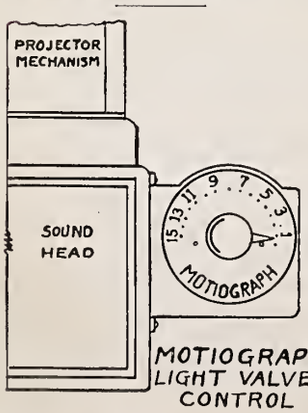
I have used Motiograph Machines for over twenty years, and was satisfied when you decided to build Sound Projectors that the reproduction of Sound would be in Par with your Projectors. You have proven this by eliminating batteries and operating A.C. You have also discarded the Fader, and use a Light Valve Control, which reproduces all the sound recorded.

Last but not least, is your Rear Shutter, which eliminates over one-half of the heat from the Film. These improvements built in One Unit, and sold outright is all that can be expected from any Company.



To show our appreciation of this Equipment and your Company, you are privileged to send or bring any prospective buyer here at any time for a demonstration.

Wishing you A Merry Xmas and A Happy New Year, I am



Yours very truly,

Joe Brokaw

CONSISTENT SERVICE

TWO monthly departments of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, namely School and Screen, and The Junior Show, are in their exhibitor response and activity in the exhibition field reflecting important progress in terms of both dollars and goodwill for the motion picture industry. Neither, however, is of the character which attracts any considerable Broadway attention since they are not related to the high fever school of exploitation. They represent rather the sanely considered, persistent, community-conscious endeavor of showmen who live where they work and relate themselves responsibly to their neighbors. In sum total, the exhibition and exploitation activities reflected in these pages mount to many, many millions at the box office and contribute vastly to the improved status of the industry in these United States among those persons who inhabit wholesome American homes.

In this week's issue presenting the monthly Juvenile Show section, Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick makes record of certain developments specifically in the city of Stamford, Connecticut, which show how the commuinty interest in the motion picture, when permitted to escape, may set up unpleasant and destructive competition for the exhibitor.

Meanwhile the response of exhibitors, clubwomen, public service groups, educators, churchmen and numerous influential institutions, to the endeavors of MOTION PICTURE HERALD's School and Screen and Juvenile Show sections grows apace. Also by the testimony of some important producers and distributors of motion pictures these pages have tremendously contributed to the success of some outstanding product of the current season.

ETERNALLY NEW

IN an article of effective terseness, Mr. Oscar Doob of Loew Theatres, contributing to this week's Round Table section, remarks: "A theatre is in a new business every time it changes its program."

It may also be observed that a producer-distributor is also in a new business every time he releases a new picture.

Mr. Doob's remarks are aimed at advising his fellow exhibitors that ardent, earnest, persistent advertising and selling is an essential of success, even if the product is perfection itself. His observations are of special interest when one takes measure of how much that passes for selling and exploitation is in truth an expression of habit, a function of routine rather than enthusiasm. The picture that is produced, distributed and exhibited as just another picture puts no hump in the earnings curve. Mr. Doob interestingly observes: "We never believe that a picture gets its maximum business."

WHAT THE SCREEN DOES

POSITIVE, particularized evidences of the social influence of the motion picture, so isolated that they may be accepted as indisputable data, are rare. Generalizations either for or against the screen are all too common, and nearly always governed much more by prejudices and professional attitudes than by facts. This makes of special interest a news dispatch to MOTION PICTURE DAILY, saying:

> East St. Louis, Ill., Jan. 14.—A picture depicting gangster life and carrying the moral that crime does not pay, which he viewed at a theatre in Effingham, Ill., on December 6, last, caused Elmer Parker, 19, West Virginia farmer, to surrender to the Illinois State Highway police on a charge of stealing an automobile. These facts were brought out in his confession read to United States District Judge Wham when Parker pleaded guilty to a charge of violating the Dyer act by transporting a stolen automobile from one state to another. Judge Wham sentenced him to six months in jail.

The picture concerned was "Are These Our Children?" which has been in some localities the subject of considerable adverse comment.

For the one instance of this sort of effect upon the mind of the picture patron which becomes spectacularly of record there are the millions in which reactions and influence is so removed, remote, or attenuated, that they pass off into the haze of general environmental influence. The only peculiar aspect of this case of the Illinois farmer is that the incitement affecting behavior became of court record in the presence of the press. If the farmer had not had the motor car episode on his mind he might well have merely gone home more firmly convinced of the merits of the laws of property. That would have been more of a social service than putting a man in jail, but it would not have appeared in the papers.

Incidentally, now that the serious aspects of this editorial have been set down, it may be observed that a man who would confess to a judge named "Wham" must have known he would get it.

WHO'S WELL KNOWN?

MR. WALTER WINCHELL, who nightly infects the air with radio broadcasts and the journalism of New York with a column in the Daily Mirror, on Monday last recorded: ". . . The best known movie magnate tried suicide Thurs." The town has buzzed with the tale since. If the writer of this paragraph knows who the best known "movie magnate" is, the story is a falsehood. Allowing for latitude, it is also a falsehood as applying to the six best known "movie magnates." If Mr. Winchell wrote such a line about the lumber, coal, steel, banking or telephone business, he would hear something from somebody. The motion picture industry, however, the aggressive, enterprising, diligent, public spirited business of the screen—takes it.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

WE'RE A PANACEA

THE CHRONICLE of SAN FRANCISCO cheerily records the most remarkable application of the motion picture which has yet come to our attention, in these words:

A Boston dentist has hit on the scheme of projecting a moving picture on the ceiling of his clinic to divert the mind of the victim in the chair.

The idea seems susceptible of a variety of combinations according to the length of the agony and the temperament of the patient. Laurel and Hardy for a short operation, Charlie Chaplin for a long one. These, of course, for patients who want to forget their pains in comedy.

But some may attain surcease of sorrow by looking at troubles greater than their own. For this, Boris Karloff and Bela Lugosi are suggested off hand. Then there is the Great Garbo, who runs the gamut of human misery without any apparent effort, and can return to a happy ending with the ease with which the dentist removes the gag and releases the patient.

There are interesting possibilities in the dental movies. Still, most people will prefer to see the pictures while sitting upright in the neighborhood theatre. This gives more opportunity to make running comment and annoy the occupants of the seats in front.

"NUISANCE!"

THE INDIANAPOLIS STAR is more than a little annoyed at the idea of motion picture censorship in general and the censorship of the motion picture by the state of New York in particular. It remarks:

A report submitted to the New York state commissioner of education shows that motion picture censorship has brought a million dollars into the treasury since legalization of this official meddling a decade ago. While that sum may have been welcome even in the rich Empire state, it scarcely compensates for the nuisance thus imposed on the theatrical industry. No formal report could disclose the harm done in mutilating films to meet the views of a group of political appointees scarcely qualified to pass upon the merits of screen productions.

It will be admitted readily that the movie producers have released some atrocious pictures for public entertainment. Most of those to which objection has been voiced were inane rather than immoral. A small percentage of the films prove sufficiently meritorious to gain a reputation which insures ample box office receipts. The others are merely mine-run stock, neither good nor bad. Yet these political snoopers, faced by the necessity of appearing to fulfill their missions, have cut and slashed to the alleged benefit of patrons.

The New York report cites the miles of film which were subjected to the official scrutiny. A total of 1,687 scenes and 1,344 titles was eliminated on grounds of indecency, tending to incite crime, immoral, tending to corrupt morals or sacrilegious. The inspection department is asking for additional help, a plea which has a familiar sound. Since personal opinion differs widely, the inspectors themselves do not agree on what should be eliminated. When a few busybodies were trying to induce the Indiana legislature to approve a censorship bill, one of its proponents said she had never seen a film without some objectionable features. That attitude marks the average official censor.

In New York the regular inspectors are aided by state police in the rural sections. With due respect for these officers, it scarcely could be contended that the average policeman is equipped to censor screen plays, although able to note whether films were stored properly or other safety measures obeyed. An official movie censorship offers nothing more than a political sinecure and a nuisance to the film industry, with little benefit to the public.

HAVE TO GO

THE HERALD TRIBUNE of NEW YORK is not entirely happy with all social aspects of modernism, but its recent editorial about "The Good Old Times" supplies interesting emphasis on the fact that people just will go somewhere. Perhaps it is just as well to have them "go to the movies." The editorial says:

Winter evenings are traditionally the feast of sociability, but—with no realization that the theft was taking place—changing mores have drained sociability from life. It leaves us enduring a starvation as grave as that which lack of full sunlight and clean air may inflict upon a city. Mankind is by nature sociable, yet for decades the trend of all amusement has been away from the satisfaction of that hunger.

Our principal diversions have come to be listening to vocalizing devices, watching expert athletes perform, solving puzzles, motoring and playing bridge. Not one of these fosters sociability. Observation leads one to believe that "movies" and motors have promoted public lovemaking, but this is a different affair. The fundamental sociability that went with a slower, more neighborly mode of life, in which people could enjoy those very benefits at which communal existence aimed, is no more to be had.

The comfortable evening, when friends merely came in and talked and did themselves good thereby, is gone. They now come in to go out, or if they do stay the group must be given artificial good fellowship, having nothing to say to one another. Should they feel the desire or obligation to hear some subject discussed they pay a lecturer. In taking the place of the lighted living room and the hospitable chair, the motor and speakeasy have divided communities into small units, which shoot off in different directions at every leisure hour.

MOVIES DID IT!

THE LEDGER of NEWARK in NEW JERSEY, in a news story, has revealed an entirely new method of blaming the motion picture for juvenile delinquencies, as follows:

Two 13-year-old Harrison boys, arrested last night after a long hunt, confessed having turned in more than 30 false fire alarms within the past six months, police said.

"On account of the hard times we didn't have much money to go to the movies," one of the lads said, "so we turned in fire alarms to see the fire engines come out."

INDUSTRY OPENS WAR ON TAXATION OF ADMISSIONS AT HOUSE HEARING

Attack Launched by Pettijohn and Representatives of Allied and MPTOA before Ways and Means Committee

The industry's war on taxation of theatre tickets is under way. On Thursday at Washington the attack was launched when Charles C. Pettijohn of the MPPDA, and representatives of Allied States Association and the MPTOA appeared before the House ways and means committee, armed with protests of exhibitors everywhere against the unfairness of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon's recommendations that all admissions over ten cents be taxed ten per cent to meet a government deficit.

Pettijohn appealed on behalf of the circuit members of the MPPDA and for the industry at large. M. A. Lightman, president, is representing the MPTOA with Ed Kuykendahl and J. J. Strickling. Sidney Samuelson (New Jersey), of Allied States, and Charles L. O'Reilly, of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, are representating their respective organizations, aided by Abram Myers, general counsel of Allied, who heads a large delegation of owners from New England, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska. Allied this week filed a brief with the Ways and Means Committee, and has been conducting a systematic letter-writing campaign, each member being charged with the duty of writing his congressman and the two senators from his state in protest, and also of enlisting the aid of his patrons in the effort. Henry Moskowitz represented legitimate theatres and A. R. Hodges appeared on behalf of the National Association of Amusement Parks. Congressmen Emanuel Celler, New York, and Hubert Peavey, Wisconsin, appealed on behalf of the amusement business, likewise Frank Darling, Rye, N. Y., representing amusement parks; J. H. Farrell, Auburn, N. Y., representing baseball, assisted by J. William Branham, Durham, N. C. Melvin Hildreth, Washington, spoke for the Circus Fans Association, and Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh, for the Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania.

The committee was also told that one or two industries, such as pictures, tobacco and automobiles, should not be taxed when other industries are not so treated, and that the proposed taxation does not discriminate between a 20-cent theatre ticket for a child and a $20 prizefight ticket for an adult. Other reasons advanced for not taxing theatres included:

Any tax collectible in nickels and pennies is devasting, discouraging and disheartening by its very nature.

The apparent psychology of collecting penny taxes, 52 times a year, from millions of men, women and children, who average going to the motion picture theatre once a week.

The expense to the Government in the collection of taxes of these small amounts—pennies and nickels—the bookkeeping, printing of forms, mailing, plus the expense of a new form of "snooping-inspection" will equal almost as much as the Government can get out of any such taxes paid in pennies and nickels. Add to the government cost the expense of the theatre owners who are having 10 per cent of their gross sales taken away; their expense of keeping track of this tax; classifying prices; making of reports to the Government, etc., suggests not only an unproductive form of taxation, but an expensive form, both to the parties taxed and the Government itself.

No theatre in America is making a profit of 10 per cent of its gross receipts, thus settling the question of whether or not it is necessary to pass it on to the public.

To drive the motion picture by taxation to higher admission rates is to fly in the face of the modern demand for the best possible entertainment at the lowest possible cost.

When we consider that taxpayers of this country are now paying in excess of thirteen billion dollars a year to run the federal, state and local governments; when we consider that this thirteen billion dollars a year being paid out to run the government is more money than we have in circulation; when we consider that this sum—thirteen billion—is more than the annual value of all our crops, it should not be immodest to suggest that attention be given to cutting down the cost of government, before or at least at the same time that any attempt is made to "balance the budget," and further that the budget can be balanced without compelling 75 to 85 millions of people per week to pay one penny, two penny, and three penny taxes to the U. S. Government.

The people of this country will stop looking for "Mr. Prosperity-Just-Around the-Corner" when the Government, or the states, commence to take pennies and nickels from them to "balance" budgets of millions and billions.

The various industry representatives verbally bombarded the committee with their arguments against a proposed tax measure. Legislators on the committee were told that theatre taxation is discrimination and the expense to the Government for collecting it would reduce the net obtained by such legislation to a negligible amount

The leaders' arguments were in general as follows, pointing out that a federal tax has been levied upon motion picture theatres only in the emergency of war and then to be rescinded as quickly as possible:

First, because a motion picture admission tax strikes at the essential recreation of the millions of workers and farmers of the nation.

Second, in treating the necessities of the poor like the luxuries of the rich, it discriminates against families of limited income.

Third, because of the questionable amount of revenue accruing in view of the burden of expense involved in the administration and collection of such a nuisance tax, including the expense placed upon the small theatre owner for necessary checking and accounting services.

In the present state of unemployment and business depression, the legitimate objections to such a tax are multiplied manyfold.

The admission tax is aimed at a popular entertainment which must serve the millions most seriously affected by a protracted period of unemployment and depressed business conditions.

It is aimed at thousands of exhibitors in every city and town in the United States whose problem of survival is aggravated by every unfavorable business development in their communities.

It is aimed at the vast American consuming public whose wages have been lowered and whose earning power has been reduced.

At the present time the motion picture industry of the United States is going through a process of financial and industrial readjustment, imperatively demanding the following measures:

Reduction of producing costs. Executives, directors, artists and other studio personnel are cooperating through sacrifices of salary, in order that the financial structure of the industry may be able to survive and meet the demand for the best possible entertainment at the lowest possible costs.

Readjustment of theatre operating expenses, to check as far as possible the further closing of theatres, and the resulting added unemployment.

In this situation, the proposal for a federal 10 per cent tax on motion picture theatre admissions is most untimely. In percentage such a tax would be greater than the net operating

DISCRIMINATION!

Exhibitors throughout the country were represented at the initial tax hearing before the House ways and means committee at Washington on Thursday. Taxation is discrimination, they told the legislators, who heard representatives of the industry vigorously denounce proposed tax levies:

First, because a motion picture admission tax strikes at the essential recreation of the millions of workers and farmers of the nation.

Second, in treating the necessities of the poor like the luxuries of the rich, it discriminates against families of limited income.

Third, because of the questionable amount of revenue accruing in view of the burden of expense involved in the administration and collection of such a "nuisance" tax, including the expense placed upon the small theatre owner for necessary checking and accounting services.

WORKERS LEAST ABLE TO MEET TAX

profits of 99 per cent of the motion picture theatres in the United States, and must therefore be passed on to the public. Inevitably it would involve the following immediate results:

1. An unfair exaction, in the form of a continuous nuisance tax, upon those most seriously affected by unemployment and depression—the mass of people dependent for essential, low-priced recreation upon motion picture entertainment.

2. A further move towards depression and unemployment by the shutting down of many more motion picture theatres throughout the country, the throwing of more men and women out of work and loss to exhibitors. In this connection Pettijohn was to present a schedule of theatres closed in 1931.

3. The darkening of thousands of motion picture theatres, the closing of which would seriously injure the immediate local shopping areas dependent upon them.

4. Cutting down in the production and quality of motion picture entertainment, for no producer can succeed if exhibitors suffer and if attendance is reduced to such a condition.

5. The public irritation that would follow, when the worker or the farmer, attending a movie once a week, is slapped in the face 52 times a year with penny and nickel taxes, for the low-priced and essential entertainment service at his command.

In a single decade the motion picture industry has purchased a billion dollars worth of steel and stone and cement and lumber. It has become the biggest single customer of the furniture, the printing and the lithographic trades and one of the heaviest taxpayers in the nation.

It provides steady employment to a population greater than the inhabitants of some states. Its payroll is one of the backlogs of prosperity, and it buys $100,000,000 worth of newspaper, magazine and billboard advertising annually.

It employs 325,000 employees in production, distribution and exhibition.

Government is using motion picture films to teach conservation, improve industrial processes, public health and agricultural methods.

Industry has discovered new ways of demonstrating production problems, analyzing markets and training personnel through the use of the film.

Science has found the motion picture a useful adjunct in research and in the teaching of surgery and medicine.

Education has discovered that the film is an animated blackboard for the classroom, and definite progress is being made in developing educational projects for the school.

The screen is a moving billboard which brings the nation's shop windows to the potential shopper in the remotest village in the land.

Recreation Essential

To lump a child's 20-cent movie admission with a 20-dollar ringside seat at a prize fight or a $200 opera box, is to make no distinction whatever between essential entertainment and luxury entertainment.

No competent tax authority has heretofore failed to make this vital distinction. During the World War motion picture entertainment was deliberately classified as a necessity of vital importance to public morale. Thus theatres were permitted to consume coal and use electric light power denied to unessential industries.

To tax motion picture admissions, therefore, is to tax an essential, not a luxury service.

It is the broad maxim of sound taxation, that it is better to tax what men have than to tax what men need. The proposal for a general theatre admission tax is an inequitable proposal to tax necessities and luxuries on exactly the same basis.

Least Able to Meet It

The average worker in the United States, through direct or indirect taxation levied against him, is now giving up on an average of one day's pay for every six working days to the cost of government.

Add the penny, two penny and nickel taxes on to his theatre admissions (and the average theatre exhibitor must either do this or go out of business) and you impose on the worker and the farmer discriminatory taxation.

The greater sacrifices of readjustment already have fallen upon those whose wages have been cut down and whose purchasing power has been reduced to essentials.

What answer can be made to the workers' question: Why necessities, instead of luxuries? Why tax an admission to a motion picture theatre and levy no tax upon the sale of a $2,000 fur coat, or upon the gift of a $5,000 diamond bracelet?

Congress has previously recognized that only wartime emergency could justify a general amusement admission tax.

In 1922, therefore, Congress removed the tax on admissions of 10 cents and under to places of amusement.

In 1924 it exempted from taxation admissions of 50 cents and under.

In 1926 it exempted taxation on admissions of 75 cents and under.

In 1928 Congress exempted admissions of $3 and under, and this is the law at the present time.

In a recent public statement, a leader in the field of industrial relations declared:

> "It follows inevitably that the motion picture is the wage earner's outstanding educational opportunity. The motion picture stimulates in the heart and imagination of the wage earner the desire to improve his own condition. . . . Those who would impose admission taxes on motion picture theatres should remember two things: First, additional taxation in any form is no way to remedy depression. Second, while it may appear that it is the theatre that is being taxed, all taxes eventually come from the pockets of the people. In the case of the movies, such a tax would directly affect the welfare and prosperity of the wage earner."

Institution Already Overtaxed

Motion picture theatre owners generally already pay the following taxes:

1. Real estate property tax on theatres and grounds.
2. Personal property tax on all personal property and on projection machines, organs and other equipment used in the theatres.
3. A special city or town license fee for theatres.
4. A special community tax per theatre.
5. A special industrial board license fee.
6. A special music tax collected under the federal copyright law.

Moreover, the theatre owner pays rental for films and this rental must be sufficient to take into consideration the various and manifold taxes, corporation and otherwise, paid by the producing companies.

These are the legal taxes on the theatre owner.

In addition, there is the voluntary taxation imposed by charity and relief work which hits the theatre owner first in every community. He is the first man affected by any civic, social or charitable enterprise that needs support. He is asked for free shows, free advertising and the free use of his premises and equipment.

There is grave danger that this source of neighborly aid in cities and towns in the United States would necessarily be cut off as the result of excessive federal taxation, levied at a time when the national policy urges a program of self-help in every community.

Legislative Experience

The proposal to place a federal admission tax on motion picture theatres runs full tilt against the experience of the national Congress itself and the careful investigations conducted by state legislative committees.

The experience of the federal government with this nuisance tax led the Congress gradually to exempt all admissions under three dollars.

Since January 1, 1929, city ordinances proposing to tax theatre admissions from 3 per cent to 10 per cent have been proposed in 14 cities and in 23 states. In every instance, after due consideration, these proposals were rejected by the legislative bodies for carefully weighed and sufficient reasons.

In every case, investigation of the facts disclosed the impracticability and futility of such a nuisance tax.

Element of Depression

Although the film is primarily a medium of popular entertainment, no greater trade stimulant exists in the United States than the motion picture screen. The film is an animated catalogue. The housewife sees a new labor-saving device and she purchases it. The husband sees something that will help him in his business or give him greater comfort at home. Buying suggestion, through the portrayal of conveniences and comforts, is the great unpaid advertising service of the motion picture.

What of the theatre itself as an ally of business?

In one small town in Kansas the business men themselves operate the picture theatre on a non-profit basis because it brings in customers and keeps their stores alive.

In a small town in Missouri, fire destroyed the only theatre. The merchants soon noticed that people who lived five, ten or twenty miles away were no longer coming to town to shop as they had been in the habit of doing. The merchants investigated the reason. The result—a rebuilt theatre.

The motion picture theatre is the community's principal center of entertainment. It draws large crowds to the shopping centers every day in the week.

There is hardly a town or city in the United States where the average local exhibitor can not say:

> "Take my theatre and pay me one cent on every 10 cents that comes in at the door—you to pay for the pictures, meet the rent, pay the wages, meet the interest on indebtedness and cover all other overhead, allowing me, the owner, a modest salary, plus 10 per cent or even 5 per cent of the admissions for my total investment and years of labor, and you can have my theatre gladly."

Take the great state of Texas. The following table compiled by the Texas Theatre Al-

WOULD STRIKE AT NATIONAL MORALE

manac as of January 1, 1932, is a graphic instance of the burdens upon motion picture theatres generally. The survey discloses:

1. That between 75 per cent and 85 per cent of the paid admissions at the average theatre are sold to patrons who attend the theatre at between 7:30 p. m. and 8:30 p. m. In other words, the bulk of such business as theatres can do must be done in one single hour out of the 24.

2. The 945 motion picture theatres in the state of Texas have a seating capacity of 438,035. Of this 110,161 seats, or 25 per cent of the total, are in theatres which remain dark seven days in the week. Those figures refer to seating capacity. Of the theatres that remain closed, the number is 352 or 37¼ per cent of all the motion picture theatres in the state of Texas.

3. Approximately 150 motion picture theatres are operating in the state on a part-time basis of one to three days a week, leaving only 443 theatres operating full time out of a total of 945 theatres in the state.

To add a theatre admission tax in a situation such as this would place a burden upon the surviving theatres they could not carry.

National Morale

An admission tax strikes, at a critical time, at the very existence of an institution which the nation requires today more than ever before—a focal center in every city and town where people may go in orderly fashion and find relief through recreation and entertainment from the strains imposed by depression and unemployment.

Every darkened motion picture theatre is a victory for the forces of discontent and disorder in the United States. Every time you destroy a place of decent, cheap amusement for the masses, you cut off a supply of a vital necessity—entertainment—and you leave taut nerves, strained loyalties, and no escape, except the contemplation of destructive processes that bitterness breeds.

In 1927 Chicago movie theatres closed their doors because of a strike. For two nights restless masses of people roamed through the streets vainly seeking entertainment. The situation threatened civic peace and order. The authorities became alarmed. They called in the parties to the dispute and said: "The theatres must open!"

A federal admission tax would be far more than a nuisance tax. It would be a threat against the maintenance of public morale in the United States, at a time when depression and unemployment are fertile sources of discontent and disorder.

Huge Cost of Collection

Tax experts have estimated that the cost of collecting such penny nuisance taxes requiring individual daily accounting in thousands of theatres in as many cities and towns in the United States, would aggregate up to one-third of the total sums possible to collect. This is the expense imposed upon government.

The expense imposed upon thousands of exhibitors through dual accounting records and other requirements is certainly no less. Thus to the burden of the actual theatre tax would be added the burden of special accounting and other measures, to make it more difficult for the average motion picture exhibitor to continue in business.

In other words, when every national need calls for business stimulation, such a nuisance tax would only add to the plight of thousands of exhibitors now desperately seeking to keep their heads above water.

Whatever justification there may have been for an admission tax previously, it is evident that in the present situation the revenue produced would be negligible in relation to the national budget needs, that the expense of collection would be no less than before, and the burden of expense to the small theatre owner infinitely greater.

Deny Alien Actors Favored

The Hays organization has answered the charge of Congressman Samuel Dickstein of New York, chairman of the House immigration committee, who charged there are more than 1,000 foreign picture actors and actresses here who "don't belong." The Hays office denied that there is any discrimination against American players in favor of foreign. Dickstein will ask that foreign stars pay 25 per cent more income tax than Americans.

Asks Abolition of N. Y. Censor

Abolition of state film censorship is provided in a bill introduced into the New York state legislature at Albany by Assemblyman Langdon W. Post of Manhattan. He also has sponsored a measure requiring the censor to report in detail all deletions and file the reports for public inspection. The abolition bill has been introduced into the state body for years almost as an annual feature.

Offers Kentucky Censor Bill

A bill to "establish a board of censorship for motion pictures," was introduced into the senate of the Kentucky legislature, when the session was but one week old and on the first day for the introduction of bills. The measure was referred to the committee on municipalities.

Quebec To Raise Ticket Tax

The Quebec legislative assembly has been informed by Premier L. A. Taschereau that the amusement ticket tax of 10 per cent is to be raised, in order to secure additional revenue. The amount of the increase was not made known.

Ask Federal Film Supervision

The Oregon State Teachers' Association, in its annual convention at Portland, expressed the belief that a law should be enacted providing for federal supervision of films to establish higher moral standards.

Kansas Towns Defy Blue Law

Every key city in Kansas is now operating theatres on Sundays in defiance of the state blue law. Expectations are that numerous of the smaller towns will join the procession shortly.

Report Studios To Close Unless Made Open Shop

Hollywood reports on Wednesday had it that the MPPDA, on behalf of producers, had served notice on various studio unions that unless members' studios go open shop the studios will be forced to close. A spokesman for the Hays organization denied the participation of the MPPDA in the controversy and said:

"The association does not handle, nor does it interfere in any union matters whatsoever."

Pat Casey, who represents producers in union affairs, could not be reached for confirmation of the open shop report.

Concessions from studio unions, whose agreement with Coast producers expired on November 29 last, are in sight, it is believed, as a result of negotiations which have been continued daily in New York between representatives of the Coast unions and officials of the IATSE. Definite terms have not yet been reduced to writing, but it is expected that a written understanding will be reached shortly.

The studios are represented by Pat Casey, S. R. Kent, R. H. Cochrane, H. M. Warner, Earle W. Hammons, Nicholas M. Schenck and Leslie Thompson. They are seeking a wage cut, reported to total 10 per cent. The committee is meeting with union officials, headed by William C. Elliott, president of the IATSE and the Coast representatives. The producers' group is understood to have used as its basic arguments in asking a wage cut the general economic condition within the industry and the tendency toward reductions in other lines of business.

The unions, it is learned, are leaning toward reduction, at least until conditions take a turn for the better. It is anticipated that major points of difference will be settled at the New York conferences, but that final settlement will be arrived at on the Coast, where final conferences are expected to be held about February 1. Twenty-five union officials are in New York from Hollywood.

Union spokesmen indicate that complete unionization of the Coast production forces will follow the signing of the studio mechanics' standard agreement. It is not noted whether or not actors are to be included. Assisting Elliott are Fred Dempsey, secretary-treasurer; Sal J. Scoppa and others. The Coast interests are being looked after by Howard Hurd, Harold Smith, Carl J. Kountz, Lew C. J. Blix, Carney Hardin and William Cullin.

ONLY 11 OF YEAR'S 87 BEST SELLER FICTION BOOKS BOUGHT FOR FILMS

And of Wholesaler's Ten That Brought Most Orders from Retailers, Only Three Were Purchased by the Producers

The best selling fiction books of 1931 proved to be a relatively unimportant source of motion picture material. Of 87 titles which made the monthly "Best seller" lists of the year compiled by Baker and Taylor Company, New York wholesale book dealers, only 11 were purchased by producers, and of the company's annual compilation, the "Ten Best Sellers of 1931," screen rights to only three have been disposed of by publishers. And one of those three may never be used by the producer who acquired the rights, as it involves Oriental characters exclusively and its drawing power, in consequence, is regarded with some misgivings by the producer.

Various Explanations Offered

Although authoritative figures to show what percentage of the "best sellers" of other years became pictures are not available and, consequently, accurate comparisons cannot be made, it is believed, however, that never before have the "best seller" lists so definitely failed to intrigue producers.

Various explanations of the industry's evident disinterestedness in the most popular works of 1931 fiction are advanced by publishers, literary agents and the producers themselves. They include everything from charges of ignorance of literary values flung at the producers by publishers and literary agents, to contentions on the part of producers that once the worthless and censorable material has been eliminated from the average "best seller" there is not enough material remaining on which to base a good one-reel comedy.

There were also intimations on the part of the story departments of several large producing companies that the return on pictures made from "best sellers" in years past has been consistently so unimpressive as to reduce the value of such material in the opinion of producers to the stage where any negotiations between literary agent and studio are definitely ruptured before discussions of sales prices are ten minutes old.

The two negotiating principals usually fail to consummate their deals by an average demand-and-offer difference of $32,000, which is a considerable chasm when it separates a best selling novel from a motion picture stage, said Francis Ludlow, editor of The Retail Bookseller, Baker and Taylor house organ. Once deals of this kind cool off, they are seldom revived—at least such was the case during 1931.

The producers, apparently, were in no mood to gamble on the steep prices asked for "best sellers" by publishers, it was pointed out. In a season in which originals, dramatizations and magazine stories were obtainable at modest quotations, for the most part, and were proving good box office in a majority of instances, "best sellers" wearing price tags upwards of $25,000 were examined with exceptional care by producers during 1931. From what the records of the year disclosed, many of them were found wanting.

Fiction Books Purchased

The 11 Baker and Taylor "best sellers" of 1931 which were bought by producers are: "Twenty-four Hours" (by Louis Bromfield), Paramount; "Back Street" (by Fannie Hurst), Universal; "Grand Hotel" (by Vicki Baum), MGM; "Big Money" (by P. G. Wodehouse), MGM; "Impatient Virgin" (by Donald Henderson Clarke), Universal; "The Good Earth" (by Pearl S. Buck), MGM; "Skyscraper" (by Faith Baldwin), Fox; "The Road Back" (by Erich Maria Remarque), Universal; "Hatter's Castle" (by A. J. Cronin), Paramount; "Red-Headed Woman" (by Katherine Brush), MGM, and "Westward Passage" (by Margaret Ayer Barnes), RKO Radio.

Of the Ten Best Sellers of 1931, also compiled by Baker and Taylor, rights to only three have been acquired by producers. The three are: "The Road Back," "Grand Hotel" and "The Good Earth." All characters in "The Good Earth" are Chinese.

SIDNEY KENT ABRUPTLY LEAVES PARAMOUNT PUBLIX, NO PLANS YET

Opens Negotiations for Settlement of Contract Having Two and a Half Years To Run; Successor Not Yet Announced

Sidney R. Kent abruptly terminated his connection with Paramount-Publix Corporation Tuesday. Wednesday he entered into negotiations pertaining to settlement of his contract, which bears a termination date some two and a half years hence.

Mr. Kent's successor as vice-president, director and general manager, is yet to be announced. Also Mr. Kent's plans for future activities are, in his words, yet to be made.

The Kent story did not escape the tight lipped policy of the corporation until nearly twenty-four hours after a session with John Hertz, of Yellow Cab fame and member of the Chicago triumvirate recently added to the Paramount board, which is said to have precipitated the move.

Two Formal Statements

Wednesday evening two formal statements issued from the office of Charles McCarthy, publicity director of the corporation. The first read:

> Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix Corporation, announced yesterday that Mr. S. R. Kent had presented his resignation as vice president and director of the company and that it had been accepted by his associates and the company with deep regret.

The second statement, signed by Mr. Kent, said:

> I regret deeply leaving Paramount after fourteen years of continuous effort. I shall take a brief vacation and announce my plans at a later date. In parting I wish Paramount every success and hope to be able to play a constructive part in the future of the industry.

All inquiries concerning detailed aspects of the subject of the announcement addressed to Paramount executives were referred to the publicity office of the concern. However, Mr. Kent somewhat amplified his statement in a conversation with Motion Picture Daily, in which he said:

> When I said I had no plans, I meant exactly that. The first immediate thing I am going to do is to go to Florida with Mrs. Kent, who has been in bad health, for a rest. I am pretty well shot myself.
> I intend remaining there for two or three weeks and then I am coming back to New York to look for a job. I haven't a plan in the world.

SIDNEY R. KENT

Broadway speculation arose at once concerning Mr. Kent's probable successor in his important post at Paramount. There were indications that this had not been given consideration, due to the abrupt suddenness of the vacancy. It was pointed out that it had been generally understood that for some two years or more Kent had been grooming George Schaeffer, his assistant on distribution, for the post, when Kent's eye was on other ultimate probabilities which would have changed somewhat the scope of his responsibilities. The name of Sam Dembow, assistant to Sam Katz, head of the Publix theatre sector of the corporation, was also considerably discussed in connection with the situation.

"Haven't Met Kent," Says Tinker

The New York Sun in presenting the story in late editions gave expression to a current report that Mr. Kent might go to the Fox Film Corporation. This was in motion picture opinion to be considered based upon or a sequel to stories of endeavors in certain quarters to interest Mr. Kent in the Fox situation some months ago. An inquiry was made last night of Edward R. Tinker, the newly installed president of the Fox concern, eliciting from him the statement: "I have not met Mr. Kent. That ought to answer your question." Mr. Tinker was at pains to indicate that he meant precisely that and did not intend it as an evasion of any implied set of facts.

Within a few hours the chatter of Broadway had Mr. Kent connected with all existing and some non-existent film corporations.

Rose Through Sales Department

Kent rose to prominence and power in the corporation through the sales department. He has long been an ardent advocate of block booking as an effectively economical sales method. He also has played a prominent part in the celebrated 5-5-5 conferences between exhibitors and distributors, looking toward the elimination of difficulties in distribution and distribution contracts.

Move Said to Have Been Precipitated by Session With Hertz; Schaeffer or Dembow Mentioned for the Vacancy

The interesting story of Mr. Kent's career, taken from the biographical section of Motion Picture Almanac, reads:

Born at Lincoln, Neb., and at age of 14, just after he had finished grammar school, got his first job stoking boilers in a greenhouse at $5 a week. From this humble beginning he has developed a business career which is one of the most strikingly successful ones in the annals of the picture industry. Before he was 20 years old he had pushed up in Wyoming and was occupying a responsible position with Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. He was one of an engineering company and he and five other men were sole inhabitants of 36 miles of desolate country. They built their own roads and pipelines, established camps and literally opened up territory to civilization and business activity. In 1912 he went to the Pacific Coast with the American Druggists' Syndicate. Shortly afterwards he returned East where he became a salesman at $50 a week. Three months later he was the company's assistant sales manager, then assistant to the president and for three and one-half years he was virtually in charge of the entire business.

A friend talked to him enthusiastically of the motion picture business. He liked its prospects and cast his lot with the films with the old Vitagraph Company. It was not long after that General Film Company was indicted under the Sherman Law and buried under judgments aggregating $25,000,000. Frank Hitchcock had the job of unravelling the tangle and he called Sidney Kent to help him. The job was cleaned up and Kent walked into the office of Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players, and sold his services, but not at a price. That was to be determined if and when he made good. He went to work in the company's administration bureau, and at the end of eight months was getting $250 a week. His first work, in the distribution department, was as special district manager of the territory which included the Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Des Moines offices, which position he held until May, 1919, when he was called to the home office to become general sales manager. On January 8, 1921, Zukor appointed him general manager of distribution and a year later he was elected to the company's board of directors. In 1926 he was named general manager.

Publix Splits With Fanchon, Marco Over Use of Shows

Publix admitted on Wednesday a split with Fanchon & Marco over the use of F. & M. stage shows at the New York Paramount and at the Paramount in Brooklyn, two ace houses of the Publix circuit. Publix executives refused to discuss reasons for F. & M.'s loss of both key spots. Boris Petroff will produce shows for both houses for Publix.

MAY LIMIT PERCENTAGE PLAYING TO THEATRES OF LARGER CITIES

Sales Executives Point to Small Returns on Most Pictures in Rural Areas, Checking Cost, Temptation to Falsify Returns

Percentage playing may be restricted to theatres within metropolitan areas almost exclusively during 1932, in the opinion of sales executives of the larger distribution organizations. The small percentage returns on any but exceptional pictures playing rural sections, together with the cost of checking and the increased temptation to falsify returns, are regarded by the sales executives as being principally responsible for unsatisfactory results being obtained from percentage contracts outside of city territories.

In applying percentage contracts to metropolitan theatres, however, distributors are being confronted with an entirely new problem in de luxe presentation houses. Operators of these theatres are avoiding percentage playing on the premise that their stage attractions, frequently including performers with unquestioned drawing power, are responsible for a large share of the final grosses, and that the picture distributor has no right to share in the entire gross of the house.

In line with these objections, Publix will refuse to play percentage pictures in any of its de luxe presentation houses hereafter, it is understood. Other circuits are also reported to be considering similar action.

Doubt Block Sale Elimination

No other outstanding changes in sales policies during the coming season are foreseen at this time by executives, several of whom already are engrossed in discussions of new season selling plans. Improvements in checking services will be sought by the distributors, who have voiced dissatisfaction with both cost and results of present checking systems.

Voluntary elimination or modification of block booking by the distributors themselves is considered as distant as ever, due to the impracticability of selling economically by any other system. Adoption of the 5-5-5 uniform contract, regarded in some business paper circles as likely to occur on April 1, is considered a dormant issue, remote as ever, by both sales executives and spokesmen for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

While obviously willing to discuss freely the probability of changes in the more or less uniform sales practices with the arrival of the new selling season, the sales executives interrogated refused to be quoted on the grounds that in connection with impending national conventions of exhibitors' associations there have been announcements of intentions to discuss and take some stand on the sales practices cited and that, in view of this, any commitment on the part of sales executives at this time might be construed as controversial and aimed specifically at exhibitor groups or their convention programs.

The sales chiefs uniformly hold that there is little prospect of percentage playing being eliminated during the year, although a majority are of the opinion that the generally unsatisfactory results obtained with percentage contracts in rural sections last year may result in fewer such contracts being made with small town exhibitors next season. In all probability, they declared, only the outstanding and exceptional picture will be sold on percentage in rural sections this year.

Less of Problem in Cities

Slimness of percentage returns from small, country theatres, together with the expense of having the houses checked, and the increasing dissatisfaction among exhibitors with current checking systems, adds to the belief that the percentage contract may pass from rural districts during the year. It has been found that, except in the cases of extraordinary pictures, checking costs frequently consumed all or most of the percentage returns from small, rural houses. Moreover, the increase in copyright violations last year, attributed directly to the added temptations of percentage contracts by the Copyright Protection Bureau, is also being studied with great concern by sales managers with whom the percentage contract was in great favor last year.

Larger returns from metropolitan theatres make the percentage contract less of a problem except in the deluxe theatres that show presentation attractions. Moreover, checking is not the problem in many cities that it is in rural sections. Bookkeeping systems employed by circuit organizations, for one thing, make falsification of returns next to impossible, thus relieving the distributor in many instances of the expense of checking large numbers of circuit theatres.

With both distributors and exhibitors dissatisfied, it appears likely that some attempt may be made during the year either to correct faults in the present systems or to evolve new checking methods. Exhibitors oppose present checking systems on the ground that they make public property of information concerning the exhibitors' income.

Any change in block booking practices is regarded as least likely of all to occur. Selling on an individual picture basis, the distributors pointed out, would involve costs which would result in prohibitive rentals, making it next to impossible for any but the largest of theatres to obtain pictures.

TAKE GOOD AIM!

Do not waste your advertising in those out-of-town communities where even guest tickets will not be used advises G. T. Gallagher of Publix, in a communication to managers. Concentrate advertising where the bulk of the patronage comes from, is the burden of his suggestion. Two ways are offered for determining the source of out-of-town patronage. One way is to distribute "keyed" guest tickets, and another is to make a survey of license numbers of parked cars on weekends. Concretely he recommends that the local chamber of commerce will supply information as to the manner of ascertaining the registration place of a car through the license plate. He goes further, suggesting that the chamber of commerce might easily be induced to conduct such a survey more thoroughly than the manager could himself.

Board Exceeded Power, Says Hess

A recent decision handed down in Cleveland by an arbitration board brought an opinion from Gabriel Hess, counsel for the Hays office, stopping over on his way to the Coast, that only that part of a decision is binding which applies directly to the question submitted for arbitration.

Dan Robins, Warren, Ohio, exhibitor, was given a verdict against Universal in which Universal was ordered to deliver to Robins "Strictly Dishonorable," according to a contract entered into between Robins and Universal.

Hess is quoted as saying that the majority members of the board exceeded their powers when they stipulated the amount of money to be paid for the picture, and this section of the verdict is void. Universal held out the film, claiming that Robins had failed to notify the exchange of playdate as per contract.

Allied to Fight Hays Group In Nebraska, Steffes Warns

A national campaign directed against the Hays group will be waged in Nebraska to correct alleged illegal practices in violation of statutes on restraint of trade, Iowa and Nebraska Allied members were told Wednesday by Al Steffes, president of Allied. Nebraska will have full support of national officers in the battle, Steffes stated, referring to the W. N. Youngclaus suits.

H. M. Richey, business manager of Allied, told the meeting that independents are unable to cut admission prices. Governor Charles W. Bryan of Nebraska was guest of honor at the Wednesday night banquet, with several hundred exhibitors present.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

OPENING GUN. Of the Democratic 1932 campaign, as sounded at the meeting of the executive committee, with Burt New, representative of the Hays office, as secretary. Shown are John J. Raskob, Jouett Shouse and New.

NEWCOMER. (Right) Ann D'Vorak, who will make her screen appearance with an important role in First National's latest vehicle for James Cagney, "The Crowd Roars," thrill drama of the speedway.

VICTOR. Lou Brock, RKO shorts producer, demonstrating the form that won him low gross score of 83 in the RKO studio golf tournament over the Fox Hills course. Lew Maren was high net man with 65.

A TRANSCONTINENTAL CALL. Abe Montague, district manager for Columbia in New England, putting in phone call for Joe Brandt, company president, in New York at dinner in Boston preceding opening of Columbia's "Forbidden." The voices of both Brandt and Barbara Stanwyck, the star, who was in Hollywood, were heard. Shown are Mayor Curley of Boston, Montague, Joe McConville and Nathan Yamins, exhibitor leader.

FORMER STAR STUDIO VISITOR. Patsy Ruth Miller being introduced to Melvyn Douglas, a new screen juvenile, by her husband, Tay Garnett, on the "Prestige" set at RKO Pathe. Garnett directed this vehicle for Ann Harding, opposite whom Douglas is featured.

HIS OWN. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., showing a Warner technician the microphone that he found best adapted to his voice. He now takes it to the mixing room when going on the set, recapturing it when work is over.

ASSIGNED. (Left) Rose Hobart, who has again been cast with Charles Bickford, this time in Universal's "Ambition," a newspaper story directed by Russell Mack.

REFLECTIONS. Perhaps on the immediate past, which includes two completed roles for Warner Brothers—opposite William Powell in "High Pressure," and with Joe E. Brown in "Firemen, Save My Child." This study of Evalyn Knapp is a new portrait by Ferenc.

AN OPPORTUNITY. But this was not the only way Bill Cody took advantage of that Hollywood snowstorm. When the climate thus went berzerk, Monogram changed Cody from "Texas Pioneers" to "Law of the North."

THE BEERY FAMILY NOW. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Beery and the three children orphaned by the death of their mother, a relative of the M-G-M star, who has adopted the girl and will also bring up the boys.

IN DEBUT. (Right) George Brent, called by Warner Brothers "a find," who has already been assigned the male lead opposite Barbara Stanwyck in Edna Ferber's "So Big."

TICKLISH BUSINESS. But Johnnie Weismuller assumes full responsibility for keeping Una Merkel in the breathing zone. Johnnie, of course, is the world's champion aquatic star, but as a swimmer, Miss Merkel is so far one of M-G-M's finest featured players.

FREE ADMISSION PLAN FOR JOBLESS DROPPED

Likely Harmful Effects on Regular Sale of Tickets Called Chief Reason for Abandonment; Fay Tests Proposal

Preliminary consideration of a plan for allotting free admission tickets to motion picture theatres to "worthy" charity cases and to penniless unemployed has ended without any formal proposal being made to theatre operators. The impracticability of the plan was evident to representatives of the industry early in the discussions, in which officers of the MPPDA and of the New York Unemployment Relief Committee participated.

The harmful effects which it was feared such a plan would have on the regular sale of admissions was regarded as the chief reason for its abandonment. Unsatisfactory results obtained in other cities where the plan has been adopted also contributed to the death of the proposal, which emanated from the Relief Committee. In Detroit, at Providence and in other cities where similar plans have been tried, the experience of exhibitors was that the free tickets were usually diverted to unworthy cases, resulting in complete failure of the plan and in actual losses to theatres.

Fay Makes Test

Last week, Edward M. Fay, of Providence, turned over 500 tickets—each good for two admissions—to the welfare organizations in that town, for use at Fay's Theatre for matinees. Only 265 were used, or slightly in excess of half the total allotted. Fay reports that 80 per cent were presented by "well-dressed" persons who gave no evidence of being in want. "Only 20 per cent looked like people that were unemployed and down on their luck," Fay said. Of the total used, 10 per cent were presented by children and the rest practically evenly divided between women and men.

"The noticeably outstanding feature of the experiment," Mr. Fay remarks, "was that most of the tickets were presented by well-dressed people. The experiment was a failure from both ends: the theatre and from the angle of alleviating the so called depressed spirit of unemployed. There was no local newspaper publicity attached to this experiment."

The proposal at New York was made unofficially to the MPPDA, which assigned a committee to investigate its possibilities. They reported the plan as being dangerous to theatre owners and unfeasible and impractical in regard to operation. It was vetoed without even being submitted to member companies. Early discussions considered the possibility of extending the plan nationally in the event it was found feasible.

Indicating a realization that motion pictures are a necessity and not a luxury to the masses, as anti-industry legislators have said on occasion, the New York branch of Walter S. Gifford's National Unemployment Relief Campaign proposed late last December that the industry aid in alleviating the mental distress of unemployed by alloting blocks of free tickets to the various civic and relief organizations for distribution to recognized "worthy" cases. Films are next in importance to food and clothing, the relief committee said.

Exhibitor Leaders Skeptical

In reporting the proposal to the industry, Motion Picture Herald gathered the opinions of several important exhibitor leaders throughout the country, the majority of whom were skeptical as to its feasibility. M. A. Lightman said that "the plan is excellent if functioned properly. Its danger lies in imposing greatly on theatre owners if misused."

Al Steffes, of Minneapolis, recently elected president of Allied States Association, said: "To give the plan national publicity will close 80 per cent of theatres now open."

Steffes has been admitting "worthy" unemployed to his theatres at Minneapolis for several weeks past.

Cleveland exhibitors this week tied up with Associated Charities in Cleveland to distribute free tickets to those on the association's charity list.

At Rochester, a proposal submitted by the Civic Committee met with opposition of exhibitors, who suggested that the committee might offer something which would bolster the morale of theatre owners.

Showmen Demand End of Outrages

Kansas City exhibitors, harassed by the series of outrages which have marked the continuous retaliatory measures practiced by the IATSE local and the Sound Projectionists' Association, in the operators' union war there, are demanding that authorities press their investigation until peace is restored and patrons assured safety.

The series of stench and sulphur bombings and dynamiting of theatres, culminating in the death last week of a janitor at the Loew Midland, $4,000,000 prize Kansas City house, when he lifted a time bomb from under a balcony seat, has resulted in confessions being obtained from Ermal J. Lime, president of the association; E. M. Evans, secretary, and John E. Gillespie, dupe of Lime, who carried the bomb to the theatre. The auditorium had been cleared only a few moments before the bomb exploded prematurely, having been set for 11:45, blowing the janitor to bits.

John McManus, manager of the Midland, expressed the hope that the two confessed dynamiters would be hanged, in accordance with the 1929 bombing act, which provides the death penalty as the maximum punishment, regardless of the consequences of the act. Gillespie is an ex-convict, having been arrested five times previously. Local police authorities are seeking legislation regulating the purchase and use of dynamite, in an effort to curb the racketeering maneuvers which are terrorizing the motion picture houses of the city.

RCA Now Owner Of 65% of RKO

Radio Corporation of America now controls approximately 65 per cent of the total common stock of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, and also owns more than $9,000,000 of the 10-year 6 per cent debentures, as a result of the recent RKO refinancing. Previously, Radio Corporation had owned only 8 per cent of the RKO stock.

Control went to RCA through failure of RKO stockholders to subscribe for more than $2,000,000 of the $11,600,000 of 10-year, 6 per cent debentures recently offered, which carried three-quarters of the common stock with them. Approximately 15 per cent of the stock held outside the Radio Corporation contributed to the debenture plan. About 6,000 of the 30,000 stockholders were represented when the books closed.

In taking up $9,000,000 of the debenture issue, RCA increased its stock holdings in RKO to more than 1,600,000 of the 2,750,480 shares outstanding.

Executives of RKO Continue Meetings

Conferences continue at the Coast studios of RKO at which the executive lineup of production forces both for RKO-Radio and RKO Pathe will be determined. The meetings got under way on Tuesday when Hiram Brown, president of RKO, and others arrived from New York, including Ned Depinet, Charles Rosenzweig, Joseph I. Schnitzer, Lee Marcus, David Selznick and Frank O'Heron. Arthur Lehman and Paul Mazur, of Lehman Brothers, important factors in RKO financing, arrived in Hollywood with Brown to participate in the meetings. Depinet and Rosenzweig are expected to spend one month at the studio studying new product and outlining a sales campaign on 1932-33 product.

Detroit Censor Denies Only Five Features During 1931

Only five feature pictures were completely eliminated during 1931 by Lieutenant Royal Baker, Detroit police department censor. Baker is virtually the Michigan state censor, because though his jurisdiction is confined only to Detroit, the rest of the state bodies generally follow his lead.

In addition to the five features, 167 spoken lines were deleted, 72 sequences cut out and three films were re-edited.

Many Open, Reopen in Canada

Various Canadian openings and reopenings in recent weeks are looked upon locally as an excellent sign of the rebirth of more satisfactory conditions. Toronto, Winnipeg, Ottawa, Montreal and several Ontario towns are brightened with newly lit marquees.

Anti-Trust Answer Postponed

The date for filing an answer to the alleged anti-trust suit against the Hays organization by Cleveland exhibitors has been extended from January 24 to February 8.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

ONE of the many important problems now worrying distributors is the reputed breakdown of the system by which box offices are checked on percentage bookings. Unless a substitute can be found which is more dependable than the integrity of people, indications at present point to less percentage playdates next season than ever before. Individual deals on outstanding productions, or roadshows, of course, will be the exception, but where a blanket product deal is involved, insiders predict a limited amount of percentage agreements commencing with 1932-33 contracts.

Theatre owners and distributors always have been at odds over the placing of checkers in or about theatres to protect the distributors' interests, but not until recently has the system failed so completely when, forced by what they claim to be unlivable salary fees, checkers are said to have openly "propositioned" exhibitors.

Formerly, checkers received $10 and upwards per day, but conditions have reduced this figure to as low as $3, and in one town near New York City the checker is forced to pay carfare of $1, plus the cost of meals.

A communication to Warner chiefs from Jason Joy, of the Coast producers' association, states that "The Honorable Mr. Wong," a new release, is entirely satisfactory and safe from any unreasonable censorship difficulties, adding that the Chinese will have no grounds for complaint.

Exhibitors in states where chain store legislation is proposed, or where it already has been enacted, might study the scope and method of operation of a similar measure passed recently in Indiana. Theatres are not affected, because they do not dispose of "wares or merchandise," as stipulated in the measure. However, where exhibitors have candy counters or vending machines they must pay the tax. Even the sale of gum any place in the theatre, automatically places the theatre in the "store" category.

Metro's studio at Culver City forwards to the home office the information that juvenile "sound racketeers" now are invading Hollywood to confound directors working on exterior sound shots.

Al Santell found his work on "Polly of the Circus" balked by the "building" activities of two youngsters on private property nearby. Al bought off the youngsters with a ten dollar note.

Tod Browning, while making "Freaks," was harassed by the continued coughing and sputtering of a dilapidated "flivver," being "repaired" on the street by two other urchins. They likewise pleaded the need of ten dollars—apparently a standard "silencing" fee established by the boss of the juvenile band.

THERE are those who still contend that the widely heralded retiring nature of La Garbo's is neither according to the lady's nature, nor to her preferences, but is imposed upon her by wise employers.

Garbo, they say, would like to share the public limelight off the set just as much as any do, but is prohibited from just that by a supremely wise authority, according to skeptics.

Her reputation and glamour founded on a distinct camera personality, Metro is reputed to have been endowed with enough foresight to realize that constant and promiscuous contact with the press and public would puncture the star's aura of romanticism and charm sooner or later. Hence, the Garbo "mysticism"—which, incidentally, occupies an important spot in current advertising copy pertaining to Greta's newest feature.

In any event, this strange "mysticism" has succeeded in veiling to the public for nigh onto seven years the plainness of person and the "distinguished screen personality" that is Garbo.

However, regardless of the possible influence of Metro in enforcing a retiring nature, very few—if any—home office executives were aware of her recent departure from New York to Hollywood. They first learned of her sudden and dramatic return when they saw pictures of their star alighting from a train at Chicago, in newspapers on the following morning.

One of the many basic reasons for the wide public appeal of motion pictures is the fact that normal individuals assimilate 65 per cent of their knowledge through the eyes.

UNLESS an independent operator of a costly theatre, built especially for first-run operation, has actually contracted for sufficient product to guarantee him a first-run supply, he is usually in a constant state of worry for fear a shortage will force him to establish a second-run policy and thereby injure the possible earning power of his house. This frequently happens to independents, rarely to circuits, and, particularly, affiliated circuits, but when it does, that's news!

Publix and Shea operate four first-run theatres at Buffalo, where the other day the Court was forced to abandon its first-run status because of a shortage. Schedules of the four Publix-Shea houses require more first-run releases than Metro, Fox, Paramount, Warners, First National, United Artists, Radio, RKO Pathe and Universal can be counted on to supply.

RCA Photophone's 16 mm. sound-on-film portable projector

Erpi, RCA Follow Different Channels In 16mm. Selling

Western Electric will not merchandise a sound-on-film producer of 16mm width for the non theatrical field, but intends to market a sound-on-disc machine upon the completion of current technical developments. RCA Photophone, Erpi's competitor in the sound equipment field, recently finished laboratory work on a sound-on-film 16mm device for non theatrical use, but Erpi officials are of the opinion that disc, and not film, is necessary for a successful non-theatrical market.

Erpi and Western Electric will not effect a unification plan similar to that which was announced this week by RCA Photophone and RCA Victor.

Electrical Research cannot market sound equipment in the home field, but must confine its non-theatrical merchandising to class rooms and other educational phases, to churches, clubs and commercial organizations. RCA Photophone has exclusive rights to home sales, in addition to regular non-theatrical business, by the terms of an agreement made several years ago by Radio Corporation and American Telephone & Telegraph.

Contracts have been signed for the installation of RCA Photophone equipment in the new Samuel Gompers Industrial High School for boys, in the Bronx section of New York, as the first step in the city's test of the potentialities of sound pictures in teaching.

Would Restrict Ticket Sales to Seats Available

BY FRANCIS L. BURT

The film industry this week occupied a prominent position in the Congressional limelight, with taxes and the "S.R.O." sign occupying the center of the stage.

As the House ways and means committee prepared to swing into its hearing on the proposed Mellon admission tax, Senator Robert D. Carey (Rep.) of Wyoming took theatre owners to task with an attack upon the practice of selling tickets when there were no seats available.

Senator Carey, after what appears to have been an unfortunate experience at one of his local theatres some days ago introduced a bill which would make it unlawful for any Washington theatre owner or employe to make a false or misleading statement concerning the availability of seats for any performance or to sell more tickets for any performance than the number of seats available, providing a penalty of not more than $100 for violations.

Hearings on the bill were held by a subcommittee of the Senate committee on the District of Columbia on January 20, at which the Washington theatre interests protested the threatened legislation. Theatre men contended that film houses do not sell "seats" but admissions. They also declared that every effort is made to keep approaching patrons advised as to the availability of seats, most of the houses, during the busy periods, having men stationed outside to constantly announce whether, and where, seats are available or how soon some may be expected.

RCA Announces A New Portable 16mm Projector

Announced as the culmination of four years of development, RCA Victor Corp. and RCA Photophone, at a demonstration on Thursday, introduced a new AC 16 mm. sound-on-film projector.

Manufactured by the RCA Victor Company at its plant in Camden, N. J., and referred to as the RCA Photophone Junior Portable to distinguish it from the 35 mm. senior portable which has been on the market for more than a year, the new machine consists of a projector-amplifier unit and a small loudspeaker unit. The entire equipment is operated from any 110-volt, 50 or 60-cycle AC lighting circuit.

The projector-amplifier unit is 14½ inches long, 13¼ inches high, 8¼ inches wide and weighs 43 pounds. The equipment is not removed from its case during operation, the interior mechanism being accessible for adjustments, replacement of radiotrons, lamps and photocell. During actual presentation of pictures, the case is closed to reduce to a minimum extraneous noise caused by operation.

The projector is equipped with an optical system which projects pictures varying in size from 22 inches wide to 16 inches high at a distance of 10 feet to 67 inches wide by 50 inches high at a distance of 30 feet. The picture size recommended by RCA for good illumination is 52 inches wide by 39 inches high, which is obtained at a projection distance of 23 feet.

The exciter lamp is a 4-volt, .75-ampere, Mazda lamp and the radiotrons used in the amplifier are one UX-868 photocell, one UY-224, one UY-227, three UX-345s, and one UX-280. All power for the operation of the loudspeaker is obtained from the projection-amplifier unit.

The loudspeaker is mounted in an individual carrying case which is 19 inches long, 16 inches high, 9½ inches wide and weighing 21 pounds exclusive of film cases, reels and film. Space is provided in the case for the storage of eight film cans for 400-foot film reels. This loudspeaker is of the flat baffle type, with the dynamic speaker unit mounted behind the screened opening in the front of its carrying case. A sufficient volume of sound is available to meet the requirements of rooms having a cubic content up to 10,000 feet. The 16 mm. film employed for reproduction contains sprocket holes on one side only instead of both sides as are required on 35 mm. film. When threaded in the projector, the sprocket holes are on the right side of the film. The sound track, barely discernible to normal sight, is at the left.

Bennie F. Zeidman has decided to release his "Juvenile Court," in which Junior Durkin, Pat O'Brien, Bette Davis and Junior Coghlan appear, on the open market.

INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS UNITE TO CAPITALIZE ON WIDER MARKET

Study National Exchange Plan; Ready to Act on Labor Costs, Relationship With Studios, Production Outlays and Operation

Inspired by the rapid and impressive development in reconstructing an independent market equaling in size, and possibly surpassing that of silent days, practically all of Hollywood's important independent producers banded together this week and formed a cooperative and protective association through which it is hoped to strengthen their position in the industry, and amicably to adjust whatever problems may arise to threaten their interests. Known as the Independent Producers' Association, the new organization immediately will set to work to draft a constitution in which, it is expected, a code of ethics will be incorporated in some form.

National Exchange Considered

Studio labor contracts, general relationship between independent producers and studios, possibly production costs and operating problems, and other matters of vital interest to members will be taken into consideration for needed action. According to West Coast reports, an exchange system of national scope is being considered, through which all members would release product which is now handled by a hundred or more state right exchanges.

Phil Goldstone is one of the founders and so is M. H. Hoffman, who heads the association; Morris R. Schlank is first vice-president; Al Mannon, second vice-president; Nat Levine, secretary, Larry Darmour, treasurer, and the following constitute the board of directors: Burton King, C. C. Burr, Ralph Like, Darmour, Schlank, Goldstone, Levine, Mannon and Hoffman. Samuel Wolfe, Hollywood attorney, is on the executive staff as general counsel.

"Solid Front" Is Aim

Those who were instrumental in establishing the new organization, it is believed, took cognizance of the generally accepted belief that the independents this year have a bigger opportunity than has been offered at any time since sound forced many small concerns to abandon production.

"A solid front" for independents is the aim of the founders.

Curtailment by larger studios and a pronounced trend toward a "return to independent" days prompted an unusually keen interest in independent activities, which became manifest immediately after the first of January when Motion Picture Herald, surveying the situation at Hollywood, unearthed dozens of new companies and several others in the formative stage. In the issue dated January 9, these activities were reported and showed between 150 and 200 features lined up for 1932-33 season by independent concerns.

It appears that this chap can shoot as well as operate a theatre, comments J. C. Jenkins, in forwarding this snapshot of C. C. Kaufman, manager of the Gem theatre at Calusa, Cal., home from a morning's shoot.

Sets February 1 for Hearing In Warner Receivership Case

Clarence A. Sutherland, of Wilmington, Del., attorney for Jules Endler, of Passaic, N. J., who recently filed a bill of complaint in chancery court at Wilmington asking for appointment of receivers for Warners, presented a motion on Wednesday for a court order to direct the corporation to bring before the court certain of its books and records for examination by Chief Justice James Pennewill. The corporation is represented by former federal judge Hugh M. Morris, of Wilmington.

The question as to whether Endler is a bona-fide stockholder of the corporation and entitled to bring suit against the company was raised by Morris before Pennewill. Morris pointed out that in its answer to the suit, the corporation denies that Endler is a stockholder of record. Endler in his bill said he is the owner of 300 shares of common. After the question, Pennewill deferred hearing of argument on Sutherland's motion and tentatively fixed February 1 as the date for hearing of testimony to determine whether Endler is a stockholder of the company.

Tinker Clarifies Coast Situation

Garbled reports emanating from Hollywood concerning the operating personnel of Fox studios were clarified in New York by president Edward R. Tinker, who again made it clear that Winfield Sheehan, who is on a leave of absence due to illness, still is the production chief and will return to Movietone City when fully recuperated. Pending Sheehan's return, Sol Wurtzel is in charge, but until Wurtzel returns to Hollywood from production conferences in New York with Tinker, Al Rockett is in temporary charge, with Jack North assisting.

Following Wurtzel's departure for New York two weeks ago, John Stone, Sheehan's assistant, took over the reins temporarily, but upon his resignation the post was assigned to Rockett, who is next in seniority. This move brought about a series of garbled rumors in which Sheehan, Wurtzel, Henry King and Raoul Walsh were reported to have resigned in a general studio shakeup.

A group of Fox chiefs and directors, including Walsh, King, Clayton Sheehan and Buddy DeSylva have received notice from the corporation that since their contracts never were approved by the board of directors, a regular procedure at Fox, the company did not recognize their contracts. The company, it is understood, seeks revision of these contracts, but, it was pointed out at Fox, this action does not necessarily mean that the group is no longer in the company's employ.

No Dividend Action Taken On Warners' Preferred

No action on the quarterly dividend of 96¼ cents on Warner Bros. preferred stock, due March 1, has been taken by the directors of the company, it was announced this week.

Dividends on the preferred stock have been maintained on a $3.85 annual basis from August 1, 1930, prior to which the stock paid $2.20 yearly from the initial dividend of $1.10, paid on March 1, 1929, covering the period from September 1, 1928, to that date.

The dividend on the common stock was passed in the third quarter of 1930, after previous payments at $4 yearly from the closing quarter in 1929. Rights issued by the company in 1929 averaged $3.75 and $2 in the following year.

New England Allied Session Feb. 2

Postponement of its annual convention until February 2 at Boston was voted this week by Allied Exhibitors of New England. The meeting was scheduled for Tuesday at the Hotel Statler. Inability of Abram Myers, national counsel, to attend, because of tax hearings at Washington, brought about the postponement.

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR DECEMBER

The period represented in the December box-office quotations was one of five weeks, and rated on a basis of dollars-and-cents draw, Universal's so-called shock picture, "Frankenstein," was the champion of champions. The entire group of six productions rated showed a striking variation in public taste. Following the Universal "scare film," were M-G-M's "Possessed," a drawing-room drama; "Delicious," a Gaynor-Farrell adventure in sentiment; Paramount's "kid" picture, "Sooky"; M-G-M's pull at the parental heart strings, "The Champ": and finally, "Private Lives," another M-G-M production, in this instance a raucous comedy-drama of "the smarter set." Here, then, lies light on the always momentous question, "What does the public want?"—projected from the reliable lamp of the box office. It is to be noted that December's second-place picture, "Possessed," was also a November champion.

CENSORS ATTACKED AT BOARD MEETING

Morris L. Ernst, Noted Jurist, Leads Discussion at Conference of Board of Review; Educational Progress Traced

Developments of motion pictures in the fields of recreation and education were to be recounted at the eighth annual conference of the National Board of Review at the Pennsylvania hotel, New York, January 21 and 22. Included in the conference program were illustrations of the manner of film review and selection by the board's reviewing committee and attacks on censorship of the screen by several well known speakers.

Morris L. Ernst, jurist, principal speaker at the annual luncheon held Friday, led the discussions aimed at censorship. Other phases of the National Board's program were non-theatrical pictures and demonstrations of Erpi's educational talking pictures. The program opened Thursday morning with the demonstration by the reviewing committee.

Thursday afternoon, after the visitors had been welcomed by Judge John R. Davies, chairman of the National Board, they settled down to the main business of the conference. With Dr. Louis I. Harris presiding, they heard such national educators as Dr. Wallace W. Atwood, president of Clark university, Miss E. Winifred Crawford, instructor of visual education in the State College for Teachers of Montclair, N. J., Miss Rita Hochheimer, acting director of visual education of the New York City Board of Education, and Mrs. Marguerite Schwarzman, director of the Children's Laboratories. These authorities and pioneers discussed such subjects as "How the Specialized Motion Picture is Being Developed," "What the Motion Picture Means to Visual Education," "The Motion Picture as a Teaching Device in the New York Public Schools" and "Vitalized Learning in Science."

Thursday evening there was to be a demonstration in the Fox Private Theatre of specialized films for teaching in the Fox Movietone School Series, with Mrs. Grace Allen Bangs presiding. Mrs. Bangs is the director of the woman's division, educational department of Fox, and the speaker was to be Glenn Griswold, vice-president of Fox.

The general question of the education of public opinion regarding the specialized motion picture was to be discussed Friday morning by Prof. Kirtley F. Mather of the department of geology of Harvard University, Mrs. Eva d'B. Hansl, staff associate of the White House Conference, Mr. F. S. Mathewson, superintendent of recreation of the Union County (N. J.) Park Commission, and Mrs. Helen F. MacPherson, Chief Juvenile Probation Officer, Hartford, was to speak specially on "Testing Responses to Experimental Specialized Film," "The Motion Picture and Parent Education," "The Specialized Use of Motion Picture in Public Recreation" and "Children and the Motion Picture."

Lewis Milestone, Leslie Howard, Paul Lukas and other screen "names" were to be present at the luncheon. Morris L. Ernst, noted jurist, was to deliver the principal address, directed against censorship of the screen.

Friday afternoon, following the luncheon, there was to be a demonstration of the educational talking pictures of the Electrical Research Products, Inc., with W. A. Bach, manager of the Non-theatrical department, presiding.

Engineers Decide Upon Washington For Spring Session

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its spring meeting in Washington May 9-12. The board of directors approved the selection after a poll of the membership. W. C. Five-Friends Plan Adopted By Fox Studio Employees

The "five friends plan," under which the Fox studio employees are grouped in fives, each group pledging itself to take care of a family in reduced circumstances, has been launched at Movietone City. The plan was successful in the Utilities Power and Light Corporation, of which D. E. McIntire, studio business manager, formerly was an official under Harley L. Clarke, chairman of the Fox board.

At the meeting on Stage One, attended by several hundred employees, the plan was explained by Victor M. Shapiro and the following central committee in charge was named:

Quin Martin, chairman; Jack Blystone, Jack Gardner, Harry Leonhardt, William Steincamp, Barney Dull, John Stone, George Bagnall, Sonya Levien and Shapiro.

Richey Accepts Business Post of National Allied

H. M. Richey, manager of the Michigan Allied exhibitor unit, has accepted the post offered him as business manager of the national Allied Organization. He has been given a five months leave of absence to take over the new position until his successor in the Michigan unit is selected. The second annual convention of the Michigan organization convenes in Detroit March 8 and 9, and the matter of opening an office for the national body either in Detroit or Washington will not be undertaken until after that time.

Ferri To Arrange Fox Convention

Roger Ferri, of Fox's West Coast studio, is now in New York to formulate plans for the forthcoming annual sales convention in the Spring which will launch the 1932-33 sales season. The company already has lined up 40 features for the new season, out of a scheduled lineup of 48.

Independent Talks Now, Lightman Tells Carolinians

Independent exhibitors are coming back into their own and with the large circuits returning theatres to them either outright or on a partnership basis on the realization of having over-extended operations, the larger companies now are listening to the independents instead of giving them orders, M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, told theatre men of North and South Carolina at their annual meeting at Charlotte this week.

Theatres are not merely places of amusement but are institutions of learning, the exhibitor leader continued. Theatre patrons today read a class of literature that money cannot buy, he said.

"We have got to quit booking clock-made pictures which are thrust upon us and which we know will not draw, and convince producers that it will be more profitable to run a good production overtime," he declared.

Lightman outlined plans for change of the MPTOA structure to give independents operating control. The board will be composed of about 25 independent members, one from each zone and five affiliated circuit members, instead of the present membership of ten, composed of six independents and four affiliated members. These plans will be taken up at the national convention March 15.

Charles W. Picquet of Pinehurst was re-elected president and George Pharr of Lancaster, S. C., was chosen first vice-president. Percy Wells of Wilmington was elected second vice-president. The following directors were named: F. Schnibben, Albert Sottile, H. R. Berry, W. H. Hendrix, E. L. Hearne, H. E. Buchanan, H. F. Kincey, J. E. Simpson and A. F. Sams.

Fox Denies Infringement of Copyright on "Over the Hill"

Fox Film has been named defendant in a suit for $500,000 charging copyright infringement, filed in the United States district court at New York, involving the film "Over the Hill," produced by Fox in 1931. The plaintiffs are Miss Henriette Browne, author, and Corse Payton, actor. They claim to jointly own the rights to Miss Browne's play, "Over the Hills," written 20 years ago.

The Fox home office claims that the film rights were bought by Fox on two poems by Will Carleton, "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse" and "Over the Hill From the Poorhouse," and that Miss Browne wrote a dramatic adaptation of these two poems, without obtaining copyright permission at that time. Fox then owned the dramatic rights. Copyright on both poems expired some years ago, according to the Fox office.

Mary Pickford Selects Story

Mary Pickford has finally located a story for her next picture, following a long search, including the month spent in New York last fall. She will begin preparations within a few weeks for production in the late spring. The story is an original by Frances Marion.

AUSTRALIANS FEAR ADDED TAXES AS NATIONALIST REGIME RETURNS

Picture Interests Threw Support To Opposition in 1928 to Avoid Higher Levies; Now Question Is Whether It's All Forgotten

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

Return of a Nationalist Government to power in Australia, while generally regarded in commercial circles as the forerunner of re-established confidence, with a consequent improvement in conditions, is not hailed as an unmixed blessing by the film industry.

The reason is traceable to incidents surrunding the 1928 elections when the Bruce-Page Government met its waterloo. Then the picture interests of Australia threw their entire advertising and publicity resources behind the Scullin-Labour ministry, hoping thereby to bring about the defeat of the Bruce-Page rule, and, as a direct result, to evade threatened amusement taxation which was one of the planks in the Nationalist's platform. After the election, with the Bruce-Page regime ended, it was widely conceded that the effect of this terrific advertising campaign was a major factor in putting the new government into power; and the point that agitates the industry in Australia today is that the newly elected Nationalist Parliament is unlikely to forget the happenings of three years ago.

Fear Further Taxation

Further taxation on the business is a contingency the leaders don't care to contemplate for the moment, or at least until it appears inevitable. Government revenue from this source in Australia already represents approximately $2,500,000 a year, and how this or any other industry, under existing circumstances, can possibly find more is a problem that will cause many heartburns until the new Government's budget is brought down.

NEWSREEL THEATRE

The first newsreel theatre in Australia has been opened by Greater Union Theatres in the basement of the Sydney State theatre. Sessions run from 60 to 75 minutes, and proceed from 10 a.m. until 11 p.m. The theatre's capacity is 300 seats, and prices are a quarter for adults and half that for children. Newsreels from MGM, Universal, and Australasian Films' local reel, the Cinesound Review, are offered. The Cinesound is being put out as a day-to-day affair to keep the show up to date.

Opening days indicate a successful future, but when the novelty wears off, there's no telling what might happen.

DISTRIBUTOR COMMITTEE DIES

Formed during the reconstruction of Union Theatres of Australia, the Distributors' Committee, a committee consisting of distributing firms with which Union held contracts, and with which the circuit was sharing receipts according to the adjudged value of individual pictures, has crumbled. That it would do so appeared obvious from the start.

How rival distributors hoped to work together for a period of any length, agreeing to take for their pictures what a group of combined renters thought, despite what they themselves thought, was one point disinterested parties could not concede from the day the plan was first mooted.

The collapse has another important outcome. Product of Warner-First National, originally intended to be Union's for the year, now passed to Hoyt's, while, to fill the gap, Union is after the full United Artists product. Whether United Artists will agree to sell yet remains to be seen. Already this company has announced an open-market policy.

CRITICS FAVOR MGM FILMS

Over a period of twelve months, graded criticisms turned in by the reviewers of Everyones, Australian trade journal, place Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as the leader, slightly ahead of Paramount, with Columbia, Warner-First National and RKO following in that order .

Having less than 30 releases for the year, United Artists, Universal, and Union Thetres, releasing British International productions, are graded separately. In the opinion of Everyones critics, they finished in the order named.

The Butterfield Michigan Theatres, large circuit, has taken over a new house recently built by Edward Saether, former Publix district manager, in Traverse City, Mich. It will be opened early in May.

"Cimarron" Leads Film Daily Poll Of 1931 Ten Best

Radio's "Cimarron" won first place in the list of Ten Best Pictures of 1931, selected by the country's leading motion picture editors and critics in Film Daily's tenth annual poll. "Cimarron" received 273 votes of the 339 ballots returned, a new record high for first place.

The following nine in order of the number of votes received were: "Street Scene," United Artists, 200; "Skippy," Paramount, 178; "Bad Girl," Fox, 172; "Min and Bill," MGM, 164; "The Front Page," United Artists, 162; "Five Star Final," First National, 138; "City Lights," Chaplin-United Artists, 128; "A Free Soul," MGM, 114; "Sin of Madelon Claudet," MGM, 99.

Five of the 10 features listed were based on stage hits, it is noted. The number of individuals voting in the poll for 1931 is said to have been the largest since the inception of the balloting.

Stockholders Drop Mandamus Suit Against Consolidated

The mandamus suit, filed against Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., at Wilmington, Del., July 25 last, has been discontinued. It was meant to compel the company to permit stockholders to copy a list of the names of all stockholders in order to communicate and determine if a management change was favored.

The suit, filed by James E. MacPherson, Jr., of Scranton, Pa., and others, was discontinued in superior court on motion of A. J. Stockley of Wilmington, petitioners' attorney. It is understood differences between the parties have been settled in New York.

New Billboard Advertising Styles Will Be Introduced

New types of theatre billboard advertising will be introduced in New York by Richard R. Massey of Chicago, outdoor advertising specialist, who has given particular study to outdoor motion picture billing, Massey announced this week in New York. Between 300 and 400 stands were acquired by Massey for 12-sheet stands in the New York territory. All stands are at eye level on corner locations, and make possible savings of 50 per cent on paper and corresponding economies on bill posting, Massey says.

Futter Gets Own Studio

Walter Futter, producer of short subjects, has leased the Victor studio in Hollywood.

THE END WAS NOT YET

Late Patron Insisted on Seeing Entire Double Feature Program — And He Got It All

The few exhibitors who still fail to instruct their staffs to advise prospective patrons that the last show of the evening has begun—particularly in these days of the wave of the double feature—will find something to think about in a recent experience in the Fox Uptown theatre in Hollywood—an experience more amusing than important.

It necessitated the re-running of a double feature program for which many of the customer-witnesses of the rumpus remained, and when the last "The End" had been shown, the protesting patron had had enough, and the other customers and the theatre employees too much—much too much.

Curtain Rung Down, and Then—

It was at the completion of the night's performance. The curtain had been rung down, and lights were going out as the audience was filing out. Suddenly, from a dark corner in the rear row of seats, a little chap who identified himself as Paul M. Josephs, an attorney, opened his own sound gate to announce that he had paid to see two features and that he had seen only a portion of one of the films. He had come in late, but had paid the full admission price.

Customer Josephs was so insistent, and threatened so much dire consequence if the management refused to permit him to view the entire feature he had missed, that the curtain was drawn up, and the performance was resumed. Many of the other members of the audience, who were amused at the incident and had waited to see the outcome, returned to their seats to receive what they termed their "money's worth."

Repeat Entire Show

J. Taylor, assistant manager of the theatre, suggested that "we'll just show the first three reels of the film."

But Ralph McGowan, manager, however, demurred at this, declaring: "I should say not! We'll make 'em sit through the whole thing."

The audience filed out wearily some time after midnight.

Inquiries in and about New York showed that it is common practice for the cashier, doorman or other employees to announce at frequent intervals the fact that the last showing has begun. In many theatres a placard is posted in a conspicuous place after the final program has got underway. This has been the policy of the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago for years.

In these days of double and even triple features, failure to advise patrons might have the last of them staggering out into the glare of the next day's sun to be greeted by the queue awaiting the noonday showing.

Fox W.C.-Skouras Management Deal Understood Closed

Spyros Skouras has closed a deal whereby he will take over Fox West Coast Theatres under an operating plan covering a period of years, it is understood.

A profit sharing arrangement, plus a weekly guarantee, is the basis of the agreement, it is further reported, the terms also including an option permitting Skouras to buy into the circuit after a stipulated number of years of operation of the houses. Said to be an important feature, in addition, is the provision that Fox Film will be given substantial privilege under the arrangement.

Two previous recent deals brought under Skouras' control Fox houses in Northern New Jersey, various sections of the Bronx and Long Island, through negotiations with Harry C. Arthur, and the Schine theatres in upper New York state, which had been operated by Fox as a part of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc. Five hundred additional West Coast theatres come under the control of Skouras by the deal now reported closed.

It is thought possible in some quarters that Skouras also may take over Fox Midwesco, operating in Wisconsin.

Pantages Heads Company to Market New Sound Device

A new company organized this week in Los Angeles, and headed by Alexander Pantages, will market what is said to be a compact device no larger than an office dictaphone which records voice on a coil of magnetized wire and reproduces flawlessly, according to the company's executives who claim that the wire recordings can be erased and wire used again indefinitely.

Five hundred words on a few feet of wire are claimed and it is said to be less bulky and more flexible than wax cylinders, only taking a two-cent stamp for mailing each record.

Vitaglo Produces Picture of Life at Chicago University

The Vitaglo Corporation of Chicago has produced a three-reel talking film, "Life on the Quadrangles," for the University of Chicago, picturing student life in all its phases, as a means of satisfying the demand of alumni and high schools for information concerning its activities.

Among notables seen and heard in the film are President Robert M. Hutchins and Alonzo Stagg, veteran football coach. Quin Ryan, radio announcer, renders a running comment on outstanding features of the student activities pictured. The university choir sings "Alma Mater" to accompany the title footage. A portable sound projector is operated by the assistant to the dean, and the university is planning to have the film reduced to 16 mm. for use before small groups at distant points. The film was produced at the University and the Vitaglo studios, under the direction of Avery B. Chereton. The film has been extremely well received by the university authorities and various interested groups, it is reported.

Catholic Papers in Tieup

Bert Ennis, Columbia advertising and publicity head, has completed arrangements whereby forthcoming issues of the "Call Board," organ of the Catholic Actors' Guild of New York, and the Catholic Motion Picture Guild News, published in Hollywood, will interchange news. Ennis is editor of the Hollywood paper.

Warner-Western Electric Case Will Resume About February 1

The arbitration proceedings in the Warner Brothers-Western Electric dispute over sound-equipment royalties will be resumed about February 1, it is learned from Western Electric. It is not certain just how much time will be required for the introduction of final testimony.

With this closing testimony placed before the board of arbitration, composed of Nathan I. Miller, Frank Hogan, Judge Hiscock, the four-year legal clash will draw to a conclusion.

Columbia Team Defeats Warners

Columbia Pictures basketball team defeated the Warner team last Saturday in New York by a score of 26 to 24. The girls' team representing Columbia defeated a feminine contingent from Warners, 20-7. The Columbia team includes: Jack Bass, manager; Charles Levy, Danny Heiss, Sol Jaffe, captain; Bernard Brinbaum, George Josephs, Harold Reiff, Arthur Henry, Tommy Kane, David Cohen, coach.

Ina Claire To Europe

Ina Claire left last week-end for a short European vacation. She will see a number of plays as possible vehicles for her next film for Samuel Goldwyn, following the completion recently of "The Greeks Had a Word for Them."

DeMille To Produce Russian Play

The Russian influence on Cecil B. DeMille, which was evident when he returned from a lengthy stay in the Soviet recently, will again assert itself when the producer-director arrives in New York shortly to produce "Squaring the Circle," a Russian play by Valentin Kataef, of Moscow. William Drake will adapt it.

Gallagher Named Shlyen Aid

Joseph H. Gallagher, former Columbia advertising manager, has been named vice-president and eastern manager of Associated Publications, publisher of numerous regionals over the country. Ben Shlyen is president of the company.

Hays Leaves For Coast Soon

Will H. Hays plans to leave New York for the Coast shortly, on his usual annual trip at this time of the year, but has not yet definitely decided the exact date of his departure from New York.

Industry in Spain Seen Demoralized

Trade Commissioner George R. Canty, European representative of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce, notes that "the generally apathetic reception to Spanish 'talkies' and the depreciated peseta, which has been approximately 30 per cent off for more than two years now, are having a demoralizing effect on the Spanish film market."

Canty contrasts this situation with that in France and Germany, where native language films have enjoyed a marked success, and points out that except in a few isolated instances, film patrons in Spain have been anything but enthusiastic over the home product. Film gross receipts, he says, were probably lower in the season just ended than in the closing years of the silent film era.

Only sporadic attempts have been made toward the building of talking production units in the country and silent production has been entirely abandoned. Approximately 350 theatres in Spain are wired for sound as of November 1, out of a total of slightly more than 2,000. The potential total of wired houses is put by one authority at 600, according to Canty, with a reasonable number of the increase likely prospects for American equipment.

Kincey Heads New Firm

The new company, headed by Herbert F. Kincey, Greensboro, general manager of Publix-Kincey Theatres, Inc., will begin operation this month of the 12 theatres in Charlotte, the headquarters, and five other cities. The deal resulted in the transference of Emil Bernstecker to Greensboro and J. Noble Arnold to Durham.

Weiss Closes All Sections

Louis Weiss of Artclass Pictures has closed all territories in the country for a series of eight Harry Carey subjects. Weiss just completed a trip to Chicago and Minneapolis lining up franchises, closing with Joe Silverman of Texas for an added 12 dramas in Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

Closes Several Theatres

Ray Grombacher, veteran independent exhibitor of Spokane, Wash., has closed most of his group of local houses, operating only the Liberty. H. Mitchell has taken over the Granada.

Regal Gets Gaumont Releases

Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, has secured Gaumont-British features for Canada, it is announced by H. L. Nathanson, general manager of Regal. The British division of Regal, under direction of Dewey Bloom, will market the films.

Seven in Work for Warners

January is noted as a busy month of production at the Warner-First National studio on the Coast. Seven films are in production, eight are in preparation and five are in the cutting room.

MEAT, NOT CAVIAR

Showman Presents Idea for the Producers—It Is Old-fashioned Hokum for Isolated Hollywood

By LEO MEEHAN

"It would be a great thing for pictures if every producer in Hollywood would pin a motto on the wall of his office reading: 'I believe in Hokum.'"

The speaker was one of the ablest, most dynamic showmen in motion pictures, a big fellow who has been with tent shows, with three ring circuses, with great circuits of theatres, with 'most every sort of show ever staged. He has successfully 24-sheeted from the Atlantic to the Pacific. So I asked him what he meant by "hokum."

"In theatrical terms," he replied, "it is that indefinable something which describes the application of showmanship in adding color to a commonplace event."

I looked to see what Webster's latest had to say:

"Hokum—Something said or done by an actor to amuse an audience or gain applause."

Simple Themes, Simply Handled

Having studied both the showman's definition and Webster's, I am in complete accord with the showman's idea for producers. More hokum and less sophistication, more simple homilies of speech and action; fewer attempts at parlor sovietism or highbrow boredom with life. Simple themes, simply handled. Less caviar, more meat and potatoes.

Too often Hollywood's picture makers forget that it is their prime business "to amuse an audience." Not, mind you, to amuse exhibitors, to amuse home office executives, or producers, or—and this is most important—Hollywood's favorite critics.

I once heard some one laud a noted motion picture critic in the presence of Mary Pickford. "I think he is a menace to the business," she replied unexpectedly. "If we made pictures to suit his tastes we would all go to the poorhouse."

Hollywood Isolated

Hollywood is pretty thoroughly isolated, and its picture colony knows and care little about what goes on east of the San Bernardino mountains. It suffers from a sort of intellectual inbreeding which is likely to wreak havoc with even the strongest mental strains.

A producer walks out of a theatre after a preview. Immediately he is surrounded by supervisors, directors, cutters, players and others of his own organization, or visitors from other studios. Those are the opinions he gets. Possibly tomorrow he reads the cards distributed to the public. Seldom does he listen to comments of paying patrons on their way home. Characteristically, studio executives and creative minds who attend these Los Angeles previews sit in a specially reserved section—invariably the most deeply cushioned divans.

One of the results has been that the good old word "hokum" has come to fit the antics of Mack Sennett or Hal Roach comedians, in the lexicon of Hollywood. It will do for the works of a Harold Bell Wright or a Zane Grey. Certainly it has no connection—in the collective mind of Hollywood—with such definitions as those quoted in the foregoing. Either the picture entertains Hollywood, or it isn't entertaining.

The showman in question noted a few examples:

"Look over a list of pictures which have registered heavily in recent months with vast audiences: 'Daddy Long Legs,' 'Min and Bill,' 'The Champ,' 'The Spirit of Notre Dame,' 'Frankenstein,' 'The Star Witness,' Way Back Home,' 'Skippy,' 'Sooky,' 'Ladies of the Jury,' 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet,' 'Over the Hill,' 'The Criminal Code,' 'Merely Mary Ann,' 'Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford,' 'Monkey Business,' 'Palmy Days,' 'Touchdown,' 'Donovan's Kid,' 'Seed,' 'The Millionaire,' 'The Smiling Lieutenant.' Tell me there wasn't plenty of real 'hokum' in those pictures? Mother love, fairy princes, loves of country, love of home and family, defense of honor, modern Cinderellas, even pie-throwing pranks by young and old! Man, they had plenty of that stuff which adds color to commonplace events."

Yes, and plenty of those qualities which competent actors have used since times immemorable to make audiences laugh or cry, hiss or yell!

"Dollar Publicity" Cause of Tax Schemes, Says Breen

Loose talk of fabulous salaries and "an industry rolling in wealth," were stressed by Joseph Breen among factors which turn legislators' attention to the motion picture business when they are seeking sources of revenue. In speaking before the Wampas at their bimonthly meeting in Hollywood, Breen, West Coast representative of the Hays Organization, said that "dollar publicity" was the reason motion pictures are now the target of federal and state taxation schemes.

Artclass Completes Third

"Pleasure" third on the Artclass production schedule, has been completed and is ready for release. "Cross Examination," fourth of the 12, is going into production this week.

Fox Purchases New Novel

Fox has purchased "Man About Town," unpublished novel by Denison Clift, as a possible vehicle for Warner Baxter. The scene of the melodramatic story is set in post-war Washington.

Last "Chic" Sale Comedy Set

The final story in the series of two-reel comedies which "Chic" Sale is making for Radio has been completed and will go into production shortly. No title has been selected as yet.

ELITE—OR THE MASSES

Smut Should Be Driven from Pictures, Says Charlie Koehler, In Distribution 25 Years

Twenty-five years in the film distributing business is in itself quite a record, but when that entire period of time has been spent in one city and only approximately two months during that 25 years lost through sickness, one vacation and lay-offs, it resolves itself into an item for Ripley's "Believe It Or Not."

And another queer quirk concerning the entire setup is the fact that this distributor is again working with the man he started out with on January 22, twenty-five years ago.

Ran Film into Barrel

At the time Charlie Koehler, Milwaukee branch manager for the B. N. Judell exchange, started in the business, exhibitors and exchange men ran film into a barrel instead of on a rewind. Mr. Judell was booker of the Western Film exchange in Milwaukee when Mr. Koehler joined the organization as shipping clerk. Later Judell was named manager of the exchange and Charlie became booker.

It was John R. Freuler, president of the Big Four Corporation and Western Film Exchange, whose product the Judell exchange now distributes, who sold Koehler on the idea of staying in the distributing end of the business. Judging from the results Mr. Freuler must be an excellent salesman for Koehler never has strayed from this path.

The Western Film exchange later enlarged into Mutual Film Corporation and during his career in the business, Koehler has served with a number of exchanges including Universal, Pathe, Paramount, Progress, Celebrated Players, Fox and, during the past six months, with Judell.

Catering to the Elite Now

In Koehler's estimation the producers today, in most instances, are catering to the elite instead of the masses. They are exhibiting progress beyond the vision of the everyday person. He feels that this is not only true of the pictures themselves but of the type of advertising released by the film companies. Mr. Freuler, he believes, still has the right idea.

Another criticism of most producers of today, as he sees it, is the fact that in the background of most modern pictures is the inevitable presence of smut. He holds that if double meanings and suggestive scenes are entirely eliminated, the producers will have attained that perfection in the presentation of pictures that again will make business a satisfactory proposition.

Charlie remembers 20 years ago when exhibitors in isolated spots presented "talking" pictures by means of phonograph records. One of his pet hopes is to see the return of illustrated songs, and he believes that the orchestra and organist again will have the place they once held in the smaller theatre.

Dickinson Receivership Vacated at Kansas City

The receivership for Glen W. Dickinson Theatres, Inc., has been vacated in federal court at Kansas City by Judge L. Reeves, who ordered the receiver to relinquish the property. The court had ordered the receivership last week.

"The court realized it had been imposed upon and that the plaintiff's petition was nothing but a lot of lies," said Donald W. Johnson of the Dickinson legal staff. The court ordered plaintiffs to pay damages to the Dickinson corporation for injury to its business.

Ernest Geiler, a stockholder, and Mrs. Regina Frazier, from whom Glen W. Dickinson had purchased theatres in Paola and Osawatomie, Kan., on a monthly payment basis, petitioned for the receivership. They alleged mismanagement of the $475,000 corporation, which owns and operates 30 theatres in Kansas and Missouri. Among other claims were that the circuit was in default more than $300 in rent to Mrs. Frazier, that Dickinson owned all the Class B common stock, which is the voting stock, and that stockholders had no means of recourse as there was no board of directors.

Paramount Buys Late Novel

The recent novel by Cleo Lucas, author and syndicate writer, "I, Jerry, Take Thee, Joan," has been purchased by Paramount as a vehicle for Sylvia Sidney and Fredric March. Dorothy Arzner will direct.

Monogram Reports Exchanges Already Oversold on Quotas

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, has announced that company exchanges over the country are from seven to 53 per cent oversold on the quota they were not expected to reach until April 1, 1932.

A 1932-33 program of 40 features has been started, with two associate producers added to the staff. They are I. E. Chadwick and C. C. Burr. The new schedule, an increase of 12 over the current season's output, includes 24 westerns, 12 melodramas and four specials.

Warners Buy Two for Screen

Warners has bought the screen rights to Maurine Watkins' "The Tinsel Lady," play which will be adapted immediately for the screen and released as part of this season's schedule. "The Fergusen Case" by Granville Moore and Courtenay Terrett, has also been purchased.

Invents Trick Process

Roy J. Pomeroy, inventor of photographic processes, has declared that by the use of a new application in trick photography, it is impossible for the average person to detect overlapped scenes.

JUNIOR SHOW RESULTS

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE motion picture newspaper items that have appeared in the press of the country during the past week present an exceedingly interesting map of current conditions as they are affecting the local exhibitor. Like the weather vane, steady in a strong wind, they point directly to a newly aroused community interest in local motion picture entertainment. In towns and cities, in state after state, the stories are important. School principals, ministers and priests, women's clubs, men's groups and philanthropic societies are registering a new interest in the screen as it affects their locality. The activities of these groups have fallen into three classes of procedure:

1. The development of municipal censorship as it has been demonstrated, for instance, in Worcester, Mass., where a group of citizens have set up an autocratic censorship resulting in a good many internal difficulties.
2. The sponsoring of independent motion picture entertainment in a hall rented by citizens, or in a school auditorium, or hotel, resulting, of course, in hurtful competition to the exhibitor.
3. The cooperation with the exhibitor who demonstrates his willingness to be as helpful as he can, this method resulting in mutual goodwill, increased business for the theatre and a protection to the industry as a whole.

Here, for instance, is an incident which illustrates what happens when community interest in pictures is not intelligently and helpfully met by the local theatre manager. In Stamford, Conn., the Parent-Teachers Association formed a Committee for Better Films. Instead of organizing all local groups into a strong working organization, willing to cooperate with the theatre manager, they undertook a competitive enterprise and with the auditorium of the Parish House as their theatre, have under way a regular series of programs for children as well as for adults. While the seating capacity is limited to 360, repeated showings will be given in order to accommodate the demand that has arisen for selective entertainment. This adventure has won the commendation of many prominent citizens and is strengthened by an imposing list of names of club people. The result is better pictures for the community, but a loss of business, of prestige and of goodwill for the legitimate motion picture theatre.

Constructive Cooperation

But there is another side to the story which holds much of encouragement to those of us who are working earnestly to build up intelligent community support for the motion picture exhibitor. Out of a stack of clippings on this subject submitted by two clipping bureaus, the grand majority tell the story of constructive cooperation between clubs and theatre man, with an imposing total of results. The city of St. Louis in Missouri heads the list of outstanding successes in this work. In St. Louis the clubs got together and organized a Better Films Council made up of representatives of: Missouri Federation of Women's Clubs, Child Conservation Conference, College Club, Conference of Jewish Women, War Mothers, Women's Christian Temperance Union, Wednesday Club, Good Will Club, Board of Religious Organizations, Catholic Alumnae, St. Louis Council of Parents and Teachers, St. Louis County Council of Parents and Teachers, and the St. Louis Tercentenary Shakespeare Club.

These groups represent an enormous audience total. All of the theatres in St. Louis have benefited from the organized effort of the clubs. The result is a spirit of happy cooperation and a very happy spirit at the box office.

Canton, Ohio

The Canton Chapter of a national organization of Kiddie Clubs was formed last week at a meeting in the Palace theatre, with membership open to any child from 4 to 12 years of age. The principal purpose of the club is to foster clean and suitable entertainment for children. At each meeting there is to be a speaker on some educational topic of interest to children. Meetings are held on Saturdays at 10 a.m. in the Palace theatre; an endorsed picture is to be shown, with group singing, essay contests with prizes, and other events. George J. Reister, the manager of the Palace, is the pilot steering this ship on its successful adventure.

Boston

The Exeter Street theatre in Boston, cooperating with Chapter A., Massachusetts P. E. O. Sisterhood, of which Mrs. William Helms of West Newton is president, will show a series of pictures beginning with "Skippy," and these will be sponsored by all of the chapters of this organization, composed of more than sixty thousand women, throughout New England. This group is particularly interested in presenting motion pictures of educational interest to young people.

A department that has for its definite aims:

1. To encourage children to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and money for the poorer kind.
2. To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education.
3. By winning support for high type pictures to offer an incentive to producers to make more of the same kind.

Memphis, Tennessee

Three Memphis theatres have arranged to show films approved by the Better Films Committee of the Nineteenth Century Club as the first application of the Family Night Program, adopted by the club in cooperation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi. Announced for February first, the Linden Circle theatre will show "Devotion"; the Cameo, "Penrod and Sam," and the Lemar, "Touchdown." These theatres also have arranged bookings on "Penrod and Sam," "Sooky," "The Champ," "Ambassador Bill," "Rich Man's Folly," "Delicious," "The Dreyfus Case," and "Heartbreak." Other theatres, cooperating in this movement and pledging to book endorsed films, are: The Memphian, Ritz, Rialto, Madison and Capitol. Three theatres pledging to join in the movement in February are the Royal, Peabody and Chelsea, with Souzore coming into the activity as soon as its double feature policy will permit it. The club groups are advertising the endorsed picture theatres by distributed shields and placards.

Topeka, Kansas

Six thousand members of the Junior Capital Club attended a special birthday party presented to them by Harry A. McClure, Topeka manager of the Fox theatres, at the State theatre, on Saturday morning. This occasion marked the twelfth anniversary of the birthday parties of the club, of which there are sixty thousand members. Every member of the registered sixty thousand has been a guest, or has had an invitation to be a guest, at one of these birthday parties. On this occasion, the mob of children saw "Sooky," which was preceded by a half hour's stage show and a special birthday celebration in which the locally wellknown Uncle Dave acted as master of ceremonies. The birthday celebrants were admitted by a special card.

Fremont, Ohio

The Parent-Teachers Association of the Lutz School had for its recent forum discussion, "What can we do about the movies?" The principal of the Lutz Schoo!

COOPERATING ON JUNIOR PROGRAM

gave an interesting viewpoint stressing the necessity of better pictures for the youth of Fremont. A special program was arranged in the school to show parents and students the necessity for selective entertainment. This, we hope, will be followed by an enthusiastic theatre cooperation.

Westwood, New Jersey

Four hundred children attended a free moving picture performance conducted at the Pascack theatre Thursday, in response to the request of the Better Films Committee of Westwood. This group is endeavoring to have pictures suitable for children shown at Westwood theatres during the weekends and particularly Saturday afternoons. Mrs. Halleck D. Fry was in charge assisted by Miss Bessie Liverright, chairman of the Better Films Committee, Mrs. C. J. Ahrens, and representatives of various Westwood organizations and churches whose cooperation had been enlisted.

Peoria, Illinois

"Only the Brave" was the feature picture at the show sponsored by the Better Films for Children committee at the Madison theatre at 9 o'clock last Saturday morning. The program also included acrobatic dancing by members of Mrs. Arthur L. Epstein's classes, and an Indian ceremonial by the boys of the Y.M.C.A. and northern scenes taken by the Caterpillar Tractor company's field forces. A "Mickey Mouse" cartoon supplied the comedy. The boys of the Y.M.C.A. served as ushers. Mrs. Roy Wheeler had charge of arrangements.

Schenectady, New York

The Parent-Teachers Council of Schenectady has published a list of selected motion pictures to be shown in Schenectady theatres during the present two weeks, which are believed to be suitable for children. The council is especially interested in weekend showings, as it is then that the greatest number of children attend the pictures. The members expect eventually to publish their weekly selections among pictures booked for theatres, for the following weekend. The present selections were made with the cooperation of the exhibitors, who supplied the necessary lists of bookings. The features announced are understood to be for children over 10 years of age and suitable for family audiences.

Buffalo, New York

With a forward looking bit of vision, and with some very fine and practical common sense, Buffalo planned to help its unemployed by encouraging the residents of every square block to engage one man for the block to do its odd jobs, the cost to be divided by the willing subscribers. This "Man-a-Block" campaign was made possible by the distribution of fifty thousand buttons bearing the words "Our Block Has a Man" and was accomplished by means of the motion picture box office. It is to the credit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association that the Mayor's Committee in this constructive work met with its outstanding success. The theatre owners were asked: 1. To instruct the ticket seller to distribute the buttons to children at matinees; 2. To ask the ticket seller to make sure that every child buying the ticket knew the purpose of the button. The result was an actual distribution of fifty thousand buttons. But reaching beyond this was the very important result of accrued goodwill and respect for the motion picture theatres of Buffalo.

Dover, Delaware

Manager Benjamin Shindler of the Strand theatre in Smyrna, cooperating with the Smyrna Rotary Club and Warner Price, chairman of the committee on community service, gave a special show for children last week which was attended by several hundred boys and girls, not only from Smyrna but from several nearby towns. Mr. Shindler has been a pioneer in special programs for children and has made his theatres in Dover, Delaware, known throughout the industry for this work. This reaching out to include the smaller communities is the spreading of a big idea.

Historical Subjects Of Patriotic Appeal

February, always an outstanding month in the patriotic annals of Americans, what with Washington's Birthday on the 22nd and Lincoln's on the 12th, becomes doubly sgnificant to exhibitors in the booking of pictures. The nationwide observance of the Washington Bicentennial comes this year. And of particular importance is the following listing of subjects of a patriotic nature, with the close cooperation afforded by this department and the Junior Show:

Warner Bros. Pictures, 321 West 44th St., New York City
"Washington, the Capitol and the Man"
"Alexander Hamilton"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Dist. Corp., 1540 Broadway, New York City
"The Flag," 2 reels, technicolor

Ameranglo Corporation, 226 West 42nd St., New York City
"Cradles of the U. S. A. (Washington)"

U. S. Department of Interior, Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C.
"The Story of the Flag," one reel.
(Incidents leading to the making of the first flag by Betsy Ross and its adoption; also development of the flag of today.)

American Legion Film Service, 777 N. Meredian St., Indianapolis, Inc.
"Old Glory," one reel.
(Historical picturization of America's growth including development of the national emblem.)

Fox Film Corporation, 444 West 56th St., New York City
"When Our National Songs Were New"
"Hats Off" (A story of the American Flag)
"The Growth of the U. S."
"The Constitution of the U. S."
"The Government of the U. S."
"The Declaration of Independence"

RKO Radio Pathe, 35 West 45th St., New York City
"Eve of the Revolution," three reels.
(The Boston Tea Party, Boston Massacre, ride of Paul Revere and battles of Lexington and Concord.) Yale Chronicle Series.
"Alexander Hamilton," three reels.
(Hamilton as aide to Washington in the Revolutionary War. The first Secretary of the Treasury.) Yale Chronicle Series.
"Yorktown," three reels.
(Cornwallis forced to surrender to the united French and American forces in Yorktown in 1781.) Yale Chronicle Series.
"Declaration of Independence," three reels.

H. S. Brown, Inc., 806 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
"George Washington," one reel.
"Betsy Ross," five reels.
(The first love of Betsy Ross, played by Alice Brady.)
"American Shrines of History," one reel.
(Showing Independence Hall, Valley Forge, Lexington, etc.)
"The Man Without a Country," six reels.
"The Heart of a Hero," five reels.
(Tale of Revolutionary days dealing with the dangers and worries of the brave Colonists. More interesting than historic. Visualization of the life of Nathan Hale.)

U. S. Firms Slump In German Market

American export activities in the German film market seem to have slumped considerably recently, according to records of German distributors on product available for German exhibitors.

Only 49 of the 188 films available are foreign productions, with 25 of the 49 from the Paramount studios at Joinville, France, and the United States. MGM is releasing nine and Universal five. The 139 German films scheduled come from 25 companies, Ufa leading the way with 21. Other companies include Deutsches Lichtspiel Syndicate, 15; Sudfilm, 10; Bayerische, 10, they being the only firms to run into two figures. Universal is also making nine German productions.

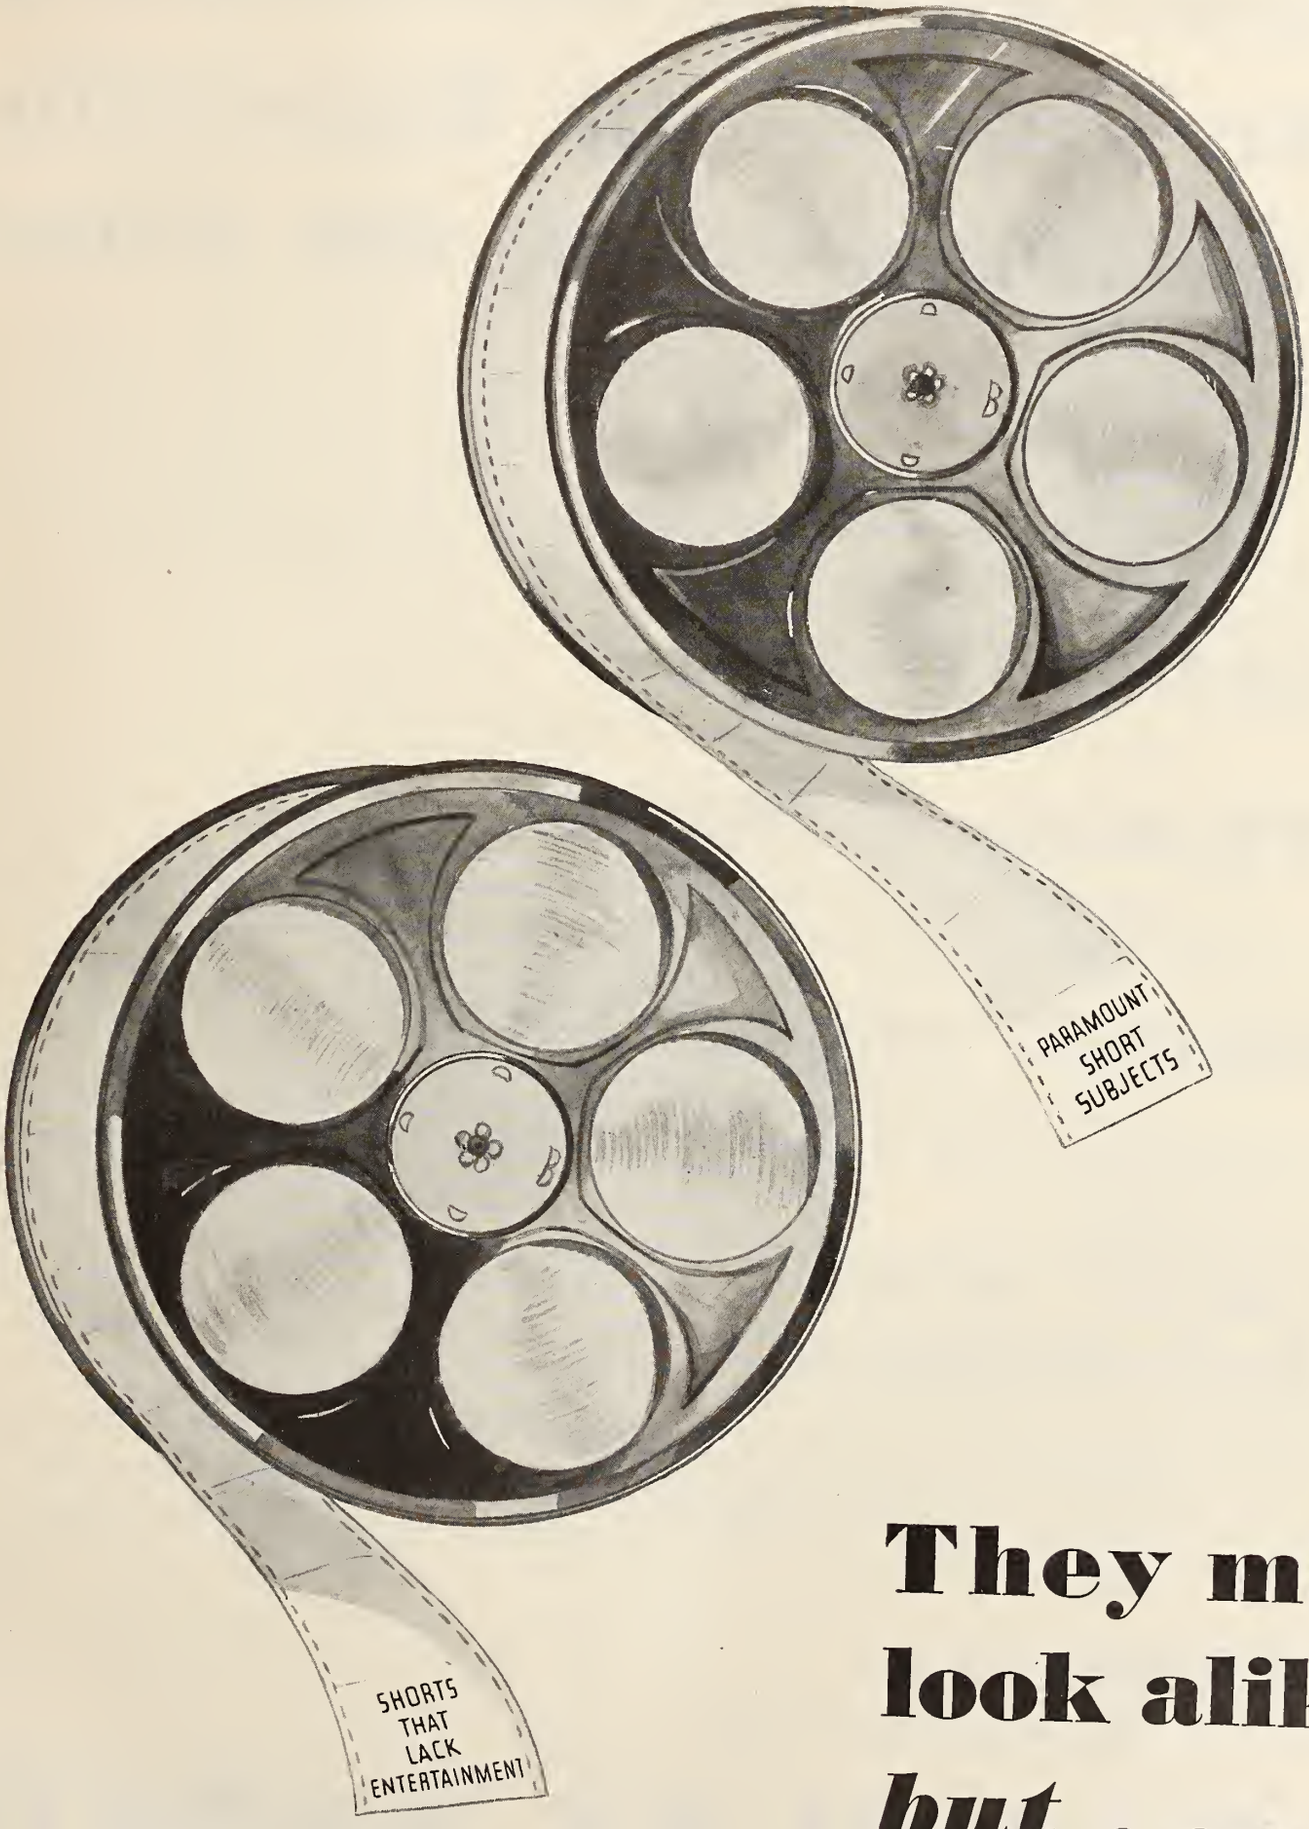
Waide Heads New Company

Merrill Waide is president of the newly organized General Pictures, Inc., with which are affiliated Natural-color, Inc., Opticolor Corporation, and McKay Sound-on-Film, Inc. Other officers of General Pictures are Herbert C. McKay, vice president; Carl E. Anderson, treasurer; Harrison Osborne, general counsel; Sam Efrus, sales manager. Directors are Carl E. Anderson, Chester Breining, Charles Hosford, James McConnochie, Robert McConnochie, Harrison Osborne, T. W. Phillips, Jr., Florence Vincent and Merrill Waide.

New Name for F & M

Fitzpatrick and McElroy circuit in Michigan, now being reorganized, will be renamed Mobile Graphic Theatres Corporation. New capitalization is expected to be $350,000 as against the old amount of $1,700,000. John J. Sterling, president, predicts that stockholders will get back their money.

"Sensation" Colbert's Next



Stuart Walker, Paramount director, has arrived in New York to direct Claudette Colbert in "Sensation," at the Eastern studio. Melvyn Douglas will play opposite.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total grosses from 183 theatres in 30 key cities over the country for the calendar week ending January 16, fell off $309,145 from the previous calendar week, ended January 9. The 183 houses recorded a total of $2,415,761 as compared to the previous week's figure of $2,724,906 for 185 theatres in 30 cities. Only one new individual high total was recorded for the week, at the Majestic in Providence, playing a double feature program, while seven new low individual figures were noted. The compilation for the previous week indicated eight new "highs" and four new "lows."

There's a Vast Difference in The Quality of Entertainment Printed on the Film!

Film all looks alike, sure! But there is a vast difference in what's printed on it! Short subjects too. • Some are just film and nothing more. Others (PARAMOUNT SHORTS, for instance) offer satisfying, after-the-feature entertainment. Wise movie patrons are quick to judge—don't let them go away disgruntled. Keep them happy; give them quality entertainment like...

One Twitch of Slim's Eyebrow Is Good for a Real Tummy Laugh !!

You know your audiences! You know what they like and what goes over their heads! You know there's not a straight face in the house when Slim Summerville's million-dollar funny face flashes onto your screen. Picture to yourself

SLIM SUMMERVILLE

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"DANCE TEAM" should prove sure-fire at every box office in the country because it has everything you could ask for in the way of names, acting, direction and entertainment. In addition there are some grand selling slants to help you create desire to see the picture. Five or six thousand patrons of the Roxy theatre in New York seemed to agree with me the other night when they roundly applauded the final fadeout after mingling many laughs and tears in this story so full of human interest and so true to life that you sympathized with the two hoofers all the way through their ups and downs.

The title can be built up to impressive proportions for your box office by merely stressing the stars and their "Bad Girl" success; plus "human" story about a girl and a boy who fought the toughest racket in the world—success in show business—came out on top and then—see the picture and find out for yourself.

In "audience value" it is genuine entertainment of the sort that sends the customers home really contented and with a feeling that they have had an evening of grand pleasure. Sensible care has been exercised to avoid injecting too many show-business expressions that might possibly go over the heads of the average audience. Such references are restricted by sticking close to the story, and are always understandable. While you find a tear-jerking spot here an there, they are not too numerous and come where they do the most good; the laughs predominate and your audience should be completely won by this wise-cracking kid who honestly believed he was the greatest guy in the world.

Minna Gombell is billed but plays so small a part that it is not advisable to sell her as a featured member of the cast. All others give excellent accounts of themselves and support the stars admirably.

Nothing objectionable for either the kids or Sundays; here is a picture you can spot wherever you feel it will do best for you and you can go out and promise them anything you please in the way of marvelous entertainment. You'll deliver the goods without any chance of a comeback, not counting the folks who will come back to see it again.

"FORBIDDEN" will be found 'way above par entertainment and box office in most spots because it is real absorbing screen fare of the sort that rates top billing for any house. While socalled "expert" opinion may brand this one as long, drawn-out suffering on the part of the stars, the average audience will not. True, it might have been better to keep the three central characters from growing too old and it might have been possible to give it something of a more happy ending, but if they had done that it might have resulted in a far less enjoyable picture.

The title is not so hot from the viewpoint of selling but it can be worked up to mean something at your box office. Don't follow the New York Rialto's style. Don't convey the thought that she was so darned anxious to sin. On the contrary, her first thought was intense love for this man she met on her first vacation. The style best suited to local, individual taste should be the style adopted in your own campaign via the newspapers or any other media you use to sell a good picture with a title that is not too strong for your community.

Once you get them in you'll have many word-of-mouth boosters for your show. The picture possesses plenty of audience pull and should prove more than just satisfying in most theatres. The performances of Barbara Stanwyck, Adolphe Menjou and Ralph Belamy are first-rate and worthy of a rave in connection with this picture.

Best played away from the kids or Sundays, but otherwise we heartily recommend this one to any theatre looking for a genuine, entertaining picture, which is packed full of human emotions and played by three sterling performers who give the picture the benefit of their fine acting from start to finish. Just watch your step with that title.

"TWO KINDS OF WOMEN" is another crackerjack Paramount picture with the sort of title that is hardest to sell in the majority of communities and leaves an entirely wrong impression wherever it is seen, making it necessary for most showmen to sell away from it and get over their merchandising thoughts by other means.

Seeing the picture before you get your campaign set will help you considerably and will point out the slants best suited for backing up your newspaper ads and other selling angles. Miriam Hopkins once more gives a thoroughly enjoyable performance and should soon reach the top in her screen career. Since she first started she has improved considerably and in proper roles she ought to be among the best bets before long. Other names that can be sold above this title are Wynne Gibson (remember her in "Ladies of the Big House"?), Irving Pichel and Phillips Holmes. Others are OK but not important enough.

Audience strength is this picture's long suit. Whatever it may lack in b.o. pull with its title will be more than offset by the excellent entertainment of the picture itself. So your sole task, it would appear, is to get them interested via an intelligent campaign. If they buy a ticket they won't look for you after the show to register any kicks. They may look for you to say what a nice show you gave them.

NG for the kids and for Sundays, but you can spot it elsewhere and really do a nice business. The HERALD's informative review will give you the facts about the story and credits. Refer to it in case you can't see the picture yourself before your advertising starts.

"WAY BACK HOME" may be rather in doubt for the big cities but it's certainly going to be a mop-up for the smaller towns and country houses. Not only a mop-up but a clean-up too. The Seth Parker picture is perfect for the small town b.o. and should duplicate the best you've ever played in those houses.

The title is all box office in every rural community where the radio has been bringing them this character so true to their own lives. And believe it or not, you'll find characters in every small town to match the cast. Just get behind that title and sell it strong. Tell them it is a story about their very own neighbors and keep the radio slant right up in your top lines. Cash in on this nationwide sketch of the air.

In "audience value," the larger cities may turn up their noses, but all others will enjoy every moment of it. There is something really human about old Seth and his neighbors, with a dash of the ten, twenty and thirty stock company appeal to boot.

Toughest obstacle to overcome is the lack of names. Phillips Lord (Seth Parker) has no marquee strength other than his radio reputation. The others of the cast are OK on the screen but weak for the box office. So your work is cut out for you. But don't let those drawbacks stump you; you can sell this picture if you back it up with a campaign suitable for a picture of this kind.

Great for the kids and OK for Sundays or any other day. Showmen who know how to sell a picture like this will reap a harvest of dollars for their theatres and besides give their audience a peach of an evening of entertainment.

CHARLES E. LEWIS

Cheaters at Play

(Fox)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Fox presents what was thought to be a fairly pleasing crook drama under the caption of "Cheaters at Play" with a light dash of gangsterism to furnish the necessary menace and suspense in building a logical climax. More than 80 per cent of the action takes place aboard a steamer sailing for America. It is here that a reformed crook meets an ex-police chief and a son whom he had not seen for 20 years. These three characters played by Thomas Meighan, James Kirkwood and William Bakewell become involved in a battle of wits wherein many fine tricks in advanced thievery are exposed, and in doing so, many liberties are taken with logic to obtain the end in light screen entertainment.

At the Criterion theatre in Santa Monica, as it happened, each time Charlotte Greenwood, comedienne, appeared on the screen and delivered her lines the audience was heard from in emphatic terms of laughter. Her part, however, is counterbalanced by the performance of Thomas Meighan and William Bakewell who furnish the serious side of the story, characterizing the parts of the reformed crook and a son who follows in the footsteps of his father. Both deliver their parts well, it was agreed.

Barbara Weeks, employed to furnish the feminine side of the romance makes a pleasing appearance. While playing the part of the gangster's "moll" she looks the part, but when she delivers her lines, she does it with restraint.

Much credit went to the author of the dialogue, as every line denotes freshness in wit and at all times is appropriately placed.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Based on story, "First Cabin" by Louis Joseph Vance. Directed by Hamilton MacFadden. Screenplay by Malcom Stuart Boylan. Photographed by Ernest Palmer. Sound. Joseph Aiken. Art direction, Gordon Wiles. Release date, February 14, 1932.

Freaks

(MGM)

Shock Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Private lives of side show freaks are exposed and rather gruesomely dramatized for the edification (or education) of those morbid persons who enjoy gazing upon unfortunate, misshapen, cruelly deformed humanity, in MGM's production called "Freaks." It is very distinctly one of the present line of "shock pictures," to this writer the most shocking of them all to date, because it depends for its interest, its thrills and its drama upon actual physical deformity.

In contrast to pictures like "Frankenstein" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," it deals with and uses the real thing, not playthings. The playgoer who sees Boris Karloff in the role of the monster, or Fredric March as the hideous Mr. Hyde, know full well they are seeing only imaginary figures, created by the actor and the make-up man. Not so with these "freaks." They were deliberately gathered from the four corners of the country and presented for what they are, deformed or deficient beings.

This may, or may not, make the psychological reaction of the public entirely different. Probably it will be agreed that the side show has been a source of large revenue, and attractive to millions of people since time immemorial. Possibly these same people who flock to freak shows at Coney Island, or Venice, or at the circus will be greatly entertained by seeing these freaks as they allegedly live behind the scenes, off their little pedestals and away from the "lectures" by the side show "professors." This writer must confess that he was not.

That the production is bold and novel in conception and execution is unquestioned. And it is done with the usual finish which characterizes MGM pictures. The question of the taste which prompted it, and the still more important question of the moral effect it will have upon the industry with a large portion of the public—these are quite other matters. It is evidently aimed at the great god Box Office as a bull's eye and it may well reach its target. On the other hand, if a feeling of revulsion greets it, the picture may serve another good purpose: a warning to producers against offending the finer sensibilities of a vast number of people, and consequently acting as a dam to stem this rising tide of gooseflesh melodrama.

Although playing a despicable character, bordering on the pervert, Olga Baclanova gives it a refreshing beauty and grace. Wallace Ford and Leila Hyams too, are competent in thankless roles. Rosco Ates—you guessed it—stutters, and makes some vulgar cracks when he marries one of the Siamese twins. As to the freaks, they are not actors, but freaks, and they do as well as may be expected of them.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Tod Browning. From screen play by Willis Goldbeck. Photographed by Merritt Gerstad. Release date, January 30, 1932.

Two Kinds of Women

(Paramount)

Drama

Phillips Holmes and Miriam Hopkins share the lead in this dramatic effort, concerning the transformation of a wealthy young man of New York, with a great deal more money than he knows what to do with; and the transformer from the west, in the person of Miss Hopkins, as the daughter of the righteous senator who sacrifices his political ambitions to insure his daughter's happiness.

The assembled patrons at the New York Paramount seemed mildly entertained, though hardly gripped, by the filmed play, adapted by Benjamin Glazer from the stage production by Robert E. Sherwood, titled "This Is New York."

In support are Wynne Gibson, as the wife Holmes contracted, we understand, in a not altogether sober moment; Irving Pichel, as the long-suffering senator; Stuart Erwin, newspaper reporter in brief moments of appearance; James Crane, Miss Gibson's partner, who insists that she "shake down" Holmes to cover his gambling debt; and numerous others of minor importance. The cast as a whole was thought to have handled itself, for the most part, in an able manner, with the characterization of Pichel, who plays a dominant part in the picture, conceded to be on a par with, or in certain sequences surpassing, that of the two leading players.

Miss Hopkins comes to New York, for the first time, with her father, who is to deliver an address on the wicked influence of New York on the rest of the country. She meets Holmes, and a friendship develops rapidly into a romance, with Holmes seeing the light and promising to be a man. He admits his marriage, and the necessity of buying the girl off, but Miss Hopkins declares she will stick by him.

Unable to get money from his father, she insists on going to the senator, who has meanwhile been informed by the press that his daughter is engaged to Holmes. He refuses and Miss Hopkins goes to Miss Gibson with a plea that she release Holmes, promising payment later. Accidentally, after Holmes had been called to the apartment, where a party is in progress, Miss Gibson falls through a window. Crane is responsible, but Holmes is accused. Pichel arrives at the police station, having made up his mind to defend the boy, though it means renouncing his political future. Crane's guilt is uncovered, and the three leave the station, bound for the west.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by William C. de Mille. Based on the play, "This Is New York," by Robert E. Sherwood. Screen play by Benjamin Glazer. Photographer, Karl Struss. Release date, January 6, 1932. Running time, 73 minutes.

Sally of the Subway

(Action Pictures)

Comedy-Drama

The very inpecunious grand duke of the principality of Saxe-Thalberg becomes involved with a group of jewel thieves and works himself out of the mess and them into jail in a rather pleasing and at times amusing manner, to roundout the sum, but hardly the substance of the seventh on the season's schedule of Action Pictures.

Jack Mulhall makes a rather engaging grand duke and Harry Semels a noisy, anxious and amusing aide for the duke. Dorothy Revier offers the notorious Sally, jewel crook and best bet of Huntley Gordon, leader of the thieves. Blanche Mehaffey fashions the almost incidental romantic interest with Mulhall in an attractive and capable manner, it was generally conceded. Crawford Kent offers the manager of Wallington's, victim of the thieves and John Webb Dillon and Bill Burke contribute supporting roles as Gordon's henchmen.

Mulhall is roped in to be Gordon's agent in duping Wallington's for some $30,000 on the black pearl matching racket, an old gag among the jewelry confidence people. Mulhall meets, and rapidly falls for Miss Mehaffey, hired by the manager to be fired when irate customers must be appeased in the interests of good business. She suddenly perceives the net into which the innocent and interesting duke has fallen, and tips him off. He beats up Gordon, is himself neatly knocked out, and goes to the store to confess his sins. The manager puts in a call for the police, while Mulhall looks rather ill and confused, and Semels approaches apoplexy in its worst stages.

Meanwhile, however, Blanche has done a little special detective work herself and marches into the office with Gordon and Miss Revier in tow, not to mention several policemen. Semels calls the German Embassy, and discovers

BUILDING PATRONAGE

NATIONAL SCREEN SERVICE sent to our desk last week an attractive brochure or manual titled "Building Patronage" It treats most intelligently on that problem exclusively in terms of screen exploitation.

This book brings to our mind a conversation we had not so long ago with a prominent exhibitor We put the question to him "of what he considered the most valuable and convincing method of public appeal in selling his entertainment." Unhesitatingly he replied, "My screen" In the same breath he was complaining of depressed times and depreciated theatre attendance.

Soon thereafter we had occasion one evening to step in his theatre. It was just at the moment his announcement of forthcoming attractions was flashed on the screen.

In face of what he had so shortly before told us of his belief in screen advertising, we were rather surprised to note the brevity and time-worn character given to attraction announcement. We regret to state that it savored of the very cheapest trailer service possible to buy

Here was a man who frankly stated that what he had in his own house, free to use to the limit, was what he considered the BEST medium of putting over a sales talk to his patrons. And how lamentably he failed to do it.

The Friday, Saturday and Sunday attractions were announced. Two holidays followed the next week. Not a word or reference to the holiday period was put over. No special appeal to the multitude who were to enjoy a four-day vacation. Not a pertinent word of the time. No invitation to spend the evening in his theatre after an auto trip to the country. No special inducement to get some of the money that horde of vacationists had to spend.

Nothing out of the rut. Just the cold name picture and star name announcement, and then a short picture scene trailer and on with the next show. The apparent lost opportunity was all but pathetic. Even we, with our rather accepted indifference on those scores since getting out of theatre management, breathed a sigh of mental distress.

This condition reminded us of Charlie Ringling's reply to a question once put to him at an advertisers' convention. We've told this once previously, but its apropos and will bear repeating.

Mr. Ringling was invited to address a convention of commercial advertising managers. During the course of his remarks he was asked by a merchant advertiser, who said, "Mr. Ringling, we use practically the same type of publicity you show folks do—newspapers, billboards, circulars, special letters, etc., etc. Now, in times of depression, industrial panics, and money shortage what character of your advertising do you dispense with?" Ringling, with a twinkle in his eye, replied, "Well, we go gunning for the man who can give us the most convincing type of NEW and novel advertising, add a couple more bands and calliopes to the parade, and a clown at the end of it for the people to follow to the show grounds, and go on our merry way."

Showmanship is no different today than it was then, and that was nearly thirty years ago, soon after the birth of motion pictures.

If there was ever a time when showmanship was needed as a dominant factor in this business it's right NOW! Every motion picture has a definite and different angle of public appeal. The secret is to discover that and then shout it in vision to the eager throng in your theatre, who MUST and WILL read it.

This National Screen Service manual that we've mentioned is an encyclopedia for the theatre manager who does not want to devote his time to digging up original and individual ideas to use on his own screen for his own business. If you haven't received a copy, write to National Screen Service, 126 West 46th Street, New York, or 1922 So. Vermont Avenue, Los Angeles. I'm sure they will send you one.

Take my tip, it's worth the trouble, and it will help you improve your advertising batting average.

Panama Flo

(RKO Pathe)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

Helen Twelvetrees in another "Her Man" characterization goes through "Panama Flo" as a biting, scratching, clawing, shooting tough baby. She's not a bit tougher than redheaded Charlie Bickford who has the featured part opposite her. Never noted for pulling his punches, Charlie hands "Flo" Twelvetrees as good as he receives.

The result, it was generally thought by a Hollywood audience, is thrill-packed with fast action, suspense and good drama of the sort the fan public is reputed to be crying for.

Garrett Fort handled the dialoguing and turned out a tight, swift story which makes up in red blood for whatever it may lack in finesse. "Panama Flo" is another picture produced under the hand of Harry Joe Brown. A rough and brutal piece, but pretty generally convincing.

Jungle scenes weren't always convincing, comment indicated, but the photography handled by Arthur Miller measured up generally well. Ralph Murphy shows a flair for directing the Twelvetrees brand of stuff. Musical and sound effects weird and effective provide many unusual and lifelike touches to the unfolding of the story.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Directed by Ralph Murphy. Art director, Carroll Clark. Story and adaptation by Garrett Fort. Assistant director, Robert Ross. Photography, Arthur Miller. Recordist, L. J. Meyers. Film editor, Charles Craft. Musical director, Arthur Lange. Costume designer, Gwen Wakeling. Release date, January 29, 1932.

Western Melodrama

Plenty of action, lots of the real west, a good sized cast and the sort of players that will cause any youngster to have the time of his life, are the prime features of this western, with more than a little melodrama thrown in for good measure.

Bill Cody, Andy Shuford, William Desmond, Franklyn Farnum all add their large or small bits in true western style. The pioneer days are the time and real Indians have been introduced for one of the old time cowboy and Indian westerns, which have almost come to be forgotten. There are not, however, nearly as many fights as one would be led to expect, or desire.

Desmond, accompanied by Cody, returns to the Indian camp where he had deserted a native wife at the moment that she is being married to a member of the tribe. Seeing Desmond, she refuses to go through with the ceremony, killing herself instead, according to tribal custom. Desmond returns to town and attempts to dispose of the post, but is prevented by the arrival of the orphaned daughter of the former owner. Cody, sensing crooked work afoot, works with the girl and they succeed in saving the place.

The Indians, believing either Cody or Desmond responsible for the suicide of the girl, put them to the test, which Desmond cannot face without flinching. Trying to escape, he is killed, while Cody marries the girl and the two adopt smiling, smooth-acting Andy Shuford, a survivor of an Indian raid, who had been cared for by the Indians.

Produced and distributed by Monogram Pictures. Written and directed by Harry Fraser. Adaptation by G. A. Durlam. Photographed by Archie Stout. Sound by Balsley and Phillips. Release date, October 10, 1931. Running time, 60 minutes.

Riders of Golden Gulch

(State Rights)

Western

A simple story, more or less according to formula, with a plentiful supply of the western stock in trade: fast action, gun and fist fighting, shooting and the fast riding that forms the chief vertebra in the backbone of the western film.

Ever present, and ever pleasant as a background is a goodly portion of that splendid mountain and range scenery in which the cameraman rightfully delights. The son of the banker returns to his home town after three years and makes a bold attempt at bringing to book the crook who had treated his father so shabbily in time past. Of course, he makes good in his attempt, and in the process of accomplishing that end he manages to fall in love, also successfully, with the daughter of the present banker, another victim of the clever crook's machinations.

The youngsters, it was thought, should enjoy the work, and stunt performing of Buffalo Bill, Jr. Mary Dunn makes an attractive heroine and other half of the romantic interest. More or less unimportant supporting roles are handled by Yakima Canutt, Edmund Cobb, Jack Harvey and Peter Morrison.

Produced by West Coast Studios. Directed by Cliff Smith. Story by Yakima Canutt. Dialogue by Harry Sauber. Edited by Wm. Austin. Supervised by Gene Marcus. Photographed by William Thompson. Running time, 52 minutes.

SHORTS

Running Hollywood

(Universal)

Only Fair

Here is a collection of incidents, unfortunately lacking in coherence and rather devoid of the necessary humor which goes to make a comedic effort a comedy. The Thalians, numerous players whose names once graced marquees, form the cast. First setting is Buster Keaton's home, where Claude Gillingwater is appointed mayor of Beverly Hills by Will Rogers. Neither Rogers nor Keaton appear on the screen, however. Arthur Lake is named chief of police, and a group of crooks hold up the party and steal the trousers of the gentlemen. When the ladies appear, a chorus of screams concludes the two-reeler. Charles Lamont directed.—Running time, 19 minutes.

The Jazzbo Singer

(Columbia)

Monkeys Shine

One of the new Monkey Shines series, with trained primates of various ages enacting the roles in novel, highly amusing style. The yarn is, of course, a take-off on "The Jazz Singer." The angry father tosses his son out into the cold, cruel world. Son plays in an amateur show, in the Jolson manner, if you please, and fame and fortune fall into his lap. Good laughs in the lines, as supposedly rendered by the monkeys, are well spotted through the number. The end is really funny. They will laugh, and enjoy it.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Grandma's Pet

(Universal)

Fine

An Oswald animated cartoon, based on famed "Little Red Riding Hood," and one of the cleverest numbers Oswald has cavorted in for some little while. Whoever adapted it paid not too much attention to classical legend, and injected a running fire of lines and situations, both amusing and clever. A laughable number.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Voice of Hollywood

(Tiffany)

Weak

This is not up to par with the usual run of this series, even from the standpoint of fan interest, usually high in this type of short. Franklin Pangborn plays the announcer with most of the shots of well known stars taken at various Hollywood openings. Pangborn sings a song, but he didn't have to.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Horse Cops

(RKO Pathe)

Good Cartoon

A neat number of the Aesop Fables series, with some fast music bits well synchronized adding much to the effect. Any audience should enjoy this on any film program. Running time, 10 minutes.

Speedway

Fair

One of the numbers in the Bill Cunningham Sports Review series, but having little of the unusual or interesting in it. It deals with the automobile racers of the fast tracks and has a bit too much repetition to be really effective. Two auto race spills are pictured, but they have been seen before.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Screen Souvenirs

(Paramount)

Enjoyable

Interesting, novel, enjoyable is this fifth of the series of antiques from Paramount's library of almost forgotten things. Clips from old newsreels are interesting for their memories, an ancient bit of motion picture melodrama is pure enjoyment for its manner, its style. A Rialto audience had a great time when the short was screened. Clever accompanying dialogue does its part.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Fox Hunt

(Vitaphone)

Amusing Cartoon

The animated fox has a great deal of fun outwitting the pursuing animated animals in this number of the Looney Tune series. Synchronization and musical accompaniment are well arranged, and the short is amusing and fairly clever.—Running time, 8 minutes.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

A Stitch in Time!

WE have been kidded in a good natured way by some of our members because we are constantly calling attention to things like roof leaks, torn carpets, broken seats, etc., etc. Some of the boys asked if we realized how little time the average manager has to look after these hundred and one "little" details.

That last question left us puzzled for a while. Is it possible that the care of expensive equipment and structures is delegated to some minor employee of the theatre? If so, then whoever so delegates this responsibility is mighty lax in their duty.

While it is true that a manager's first thought is to fill the seats as often as possible, it is also true that he has an expensive investment to look after and the care of the theatre and its equipment is just as important as filling the seats and making money.

Every dollar spent on maintenance and replacement of the theatre's equipment is charged off as operating overhead. At least that is the practice in most independent and circuit outfits. If negligence and indifference causes an expenditure of a thousand dollars or more to redecorate a beautiful ceiling in your auditorium because of roof leaks, then it's costing you that much extra money to run your house.

Many circuits have found it advisable to reprint or send out bulletins conveying our messages along these lines. They realize the tremendous amount of money expended each year that might possibly be saved through care and attention in catching little things before they become big.

So, if you think our periodical warnings and suggestions are funny, send us a picture of your broad smile when you discover that you have a fat repair bill on your hands that care might have avoided.

We are rather pleased with the early reaction and comment on the Advertising and Exploitation series of which the third appears in this issue. Opinions are, naturally, varied and some agree with what has already been said on the subject while others take exception.

It's O.K. with us either way. The fact that you are finding the series interesting enough to follow is sufficient reason for making us feel that we've started a worth-while discussion.

Have you a thought on the matter yourself? If so, send it on and we'll pass it along in the series. The meeting is an open one and every member or reader can offer his or her views for publication.

E. S. C. Coppock of the Paramont Theatre on Staten Island, N. Y., suggests that we urge our members to mix a bit with their various local organizations with a view of promoting benefit shows and theatre parties.

The suggestion is an excellent one and we cheerfully comply with Mr. Coppock's thoughts on the matter. He has personally found the benefit angle a mighty profitable one and has made them count for much added revenue at the theatre he manages.

He elaborates on the dancing school slant by also suggesting that theatres present a massed dancing school day when all the leading schools in your community stage a big show on the stage of the theatre. Houses having facilities for handling such an idea on a large scale should most certainly give it their closest consideration and attention. It's a great bet for business as every youngster appearing in the dancing revue can be counted on for a dozen or more friends and relations. All good paid admissions.

What's sauce for the goose is NOT always sauce for the gander.

Some managers having gone in for big stage weddings and other forms of business builders find, on moving to another town, that these same activities are poison in more ways than one.

Temper your selection of such activity to suit local reaction even if you must feel your way slowly before making a definite move. This is especially true of stage weddings and the "live-baby" pig giveaway. Two managers can tell you from experience how they got into a mess of trouble by sponsoring these gags.

We hope we are not selling you away from such activities because they have been found mighty successful in the past where showmen know how to handle them without risking any attacks from outside sources.

So, in everything you undertake, turn it over well in your mind and make sure that no one will raise any kicks after you get an idea going. There are always some of the right folks in town who can give you the correct steer and advise on what will start a kick-back and what will get by.

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Yea verily dear brethren, here is the sad plight of one of our kind who upon arriving at his treatre Christmas morning was knocked "cuckoo" by finding a present from the boss. Contributions to buy him some daily statements, weekly statements, house reports and other circuit requirements to make his remaining days on earth happy (??) will be accepted by the committee.

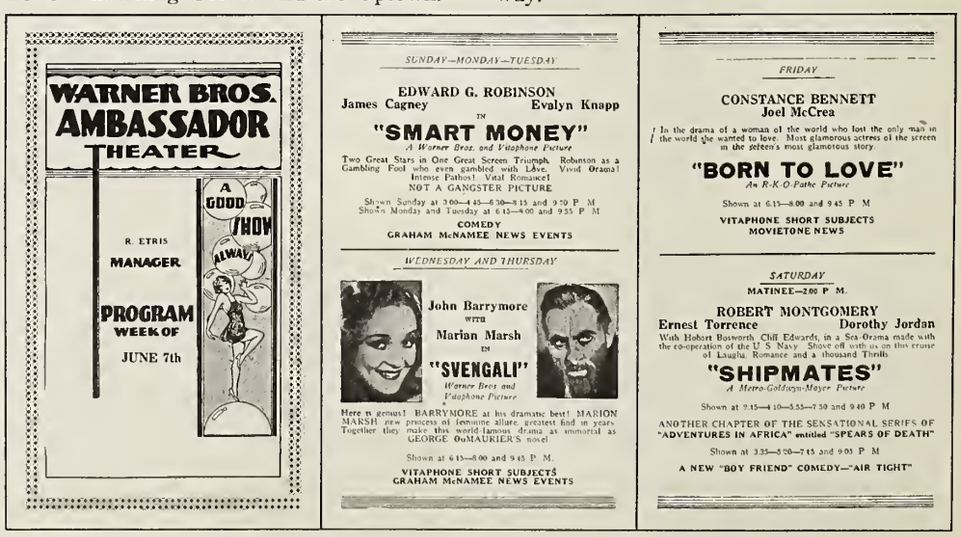
LOUIS ORLOVE BUSY AS EVER PROMOTING SHOW SELLING GAGS

Milwaukee neighborhoods these days are hotbeds of promotional activities and North Avenue, where Louis Orlove holds forth at the Uptown Theatre, is no exception to the rule.

For the past month or so he has been indulging in special shows; tie-ups with a large drug concern on the occasion of a Mickey Mouse party; a tie-up with a hardware firm for the give-away of a gas range; and a Monday feature of a Ladies Matinee Club, such as the one put over by Joe Rosenfield, manager of the Modjeska in Milwaukee, and explained elsewhere in club pages.

Regarding Orlove's Mickey Mouse Club, which is one of the largest organizations of its kind, attention is directed to a pip of a letter recently sent out to advise members concerning winners of a club drawing contest. In addition to naming the winners, it was stated that some original Disney sketches would be awarded to seven other members and that everyone should be on hand for the next meeting. Attention was also called to winners' photos to be published in a local newspaper and a plug was put over for the coming Sunday show.

Orlove goes after business out in his Milwaukee neighborhood in a most aggressive way and it's always a pleasure to hear about what he's doing to keep attendance up to the mark. Like many managers these days, he has resorted to the art of promoting give-aways of useful household articles at no cost to theatre, and practice of same has been helping the box-office over tough spots. He is one of our members who stands in solid with the majority of business men in his neighborhood and this fact stands him in good need. We'll be looking for further news concerning Orlove and the Uptown.



Will This One Help?

"Dear Chick: Can you suggest a program layout that is neither a miniature newspaper or an advertising house organ. Dignity preferred."

That's the request and here's the nearest program we could find to suit the requirements specified in the letter. If it does not meet with approval tell us and we'll make another try.

As long as we're reproducing this particular program we might just as well pass a few comments about it ourselves. We like it. It's the type that has always impressed us when we received it from a neighborhood house even if we never quite turned one out as good. But then, maybe our own programs had to suit the class of people we were catering to. That does make a difference.

Note the way this theatre's attractions stand out and how Etris stresses starting time of the feature, stars in the cast and an occasional short subject warranting the extra plug. Altogether a nice piece of work.

We haven't much to disclose at this writing about one of our newer members, Bruce Meyers, manager of the Juneau Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., except that a front he designed some time ago gave him a corking three days business on "Broadminded," and that he's six feet tall, has brown hair and blue eyes, and that he's still a single man.

At any rate, as near as we can see from a rather faint snap shot, this front was attractive, with a huge cutout of Joe E. Brown's head dominating the entire lobby entrance. Looks as though Joe's head had a mouth almost big enough for someone to walk into. Frames with stills were placed underneath the head and at either side of entrance.

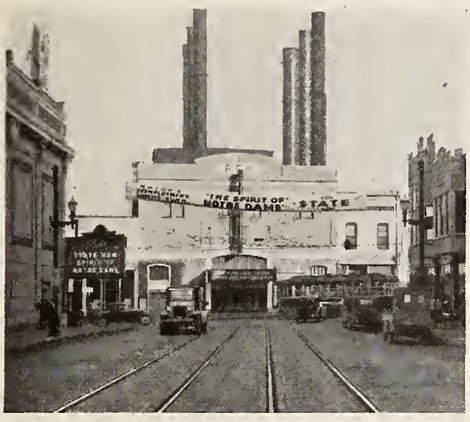
Meyers started in with Warner Bros. as an usher and has grown to consider show business as the one endeavor he wants to follow for the balance of his life. We will be interested in receiving other evidence of his work at the Juneau.

STEARN IS ALREADY SETTING FAST PACE IN A NEW LOCATION

Since leaving Pittston to take charge of the Capitol Theatre at Williamsport, Pa., Harry D. Stearn, when it comes to grabbing space in a newspaper, certainly hasn't let any grass grow under his feet. In just one issue of a leading paper last month, he couldn't have missed being represented in more than two or three pages.

On one page a full length three column display notice called attention that last minute Xmas shoppers would find many gift suggestions on the Gift Guide page and that any name in ads on this page would be honored with a guest ticket to the Capitol. Turning to this page, we find it solid with two inch column-width ads featuring all variety of merchandise. In addition, there was a full page on "Sooky," a cartoon strip on same and numerous other stories and readers.

Nice work Harry, for a new arrival, and we and all your fellow Club members are glad that you've gotten off to such a fine start in your new location. Keep up the pace and be sure to let us know what else is going on in show-business down your way.



MICKEY GROSS RAN INTO DAY AND DATE TOWN COMPETITION

A drive for the Unemployment Fund was in full swing when a campaign was started on "Spirit of Notre Dame" by Mickey Gross, manager of the State Theatre, Racine, Wis., so rather than clash with city authorities in any way Mickey cooperated with the Mayor in such a way that both fund and theatre shared in the glory.

He arranged a special performance and had 150 newsboys and 50 girls selling tickets from special booths placed at intersections of prominent downtown streets. This was done well in advance of opening and during the run of the picture the booths were kept well away from the theatre so as to not interfere with the box-office sale.

The Mayor showed his appreciation of the above by granting Gross permission to hang three mammoth banners across streets in the city's most prominent locations, giving this particular picture advertising that had not been permitted in years. The photo on this page shows one of the locations secured.

Mickey also made a tie-up with the local telegraph office whereby 10,000 telegrams were distributed to homes in Racine. Printing cost was defrayed through giving the local taxi company a line at the bottom with telephone number and suggestion that a taxi be used for transportation to the theatre.

He used a "collegiate" auto for a street ballyhoo and had it driven around to football games, schools and the main section of the city. Heralds were distributed whenever the car stopped at street intersections.

Other efforts included special nights for local schools and colleges, at which the school songs were played; a personal talk on the picture at every show for five days prior to opening; college atmosphere in the lobby, and the distribution of 5,000 heralds and several hundred poster cutouts.

Well, Mickey, shake hands. We're glad to meet you again, but just why did we have to depend upon Joe Weil to give your old gang a slant on what you have been doing for show-business? Next time you put over one of your interesting and effective campaigns, how about resuming contact with Club headquarters? We'll be on the lookout.

CLUB HEARS AGAIN FROM FISHER, 'WAY OVER IN SINGAPORE

Every so often we receive some interesting news from Irving Fisher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Singapore, Straits Settlement, and this instance is no exception to the rule. We are glad to inform his friends that he's hale and hearty and still carrying on with his aggressive brand of showmanship.

That attractive house organ, the Capitol News, is still being issued and we see that much ado was made in connection with the engagement of "Viennese Nights," a picture which has apparently been going very well across the seas. An extra large ad topped off an effective newspaper campaign and the accompanying photo will give you an idea of how the theatre front was dressed for the occasion. Note the huge cutout, and the bannered "tram-car" in the foreground. The value of street cars as an advertising medium is apparently also in vogue in Europe as well as in this country.

Other advertising recently used by Fisher included a throw-away in the form of a foreign check to effect that Marlene Dietrich would pay the sum of $20,000 to Bearer. "Dishonored" in red ink was printed across the face. In connection with "The Wedding Night," quite a formal looking invitation was gotten out along the line that Miss Clara Bow requested the recipient's presence at the Capitol Theatre for the occasion. Under Bridegroom was listed the name of Skeets Gallagher, acting as proxy for Ralph Forbes; under Best Man, Charlie Ruggles. Time of ceremony was given and it was requested to bring only price of admission and that presents were not in order.

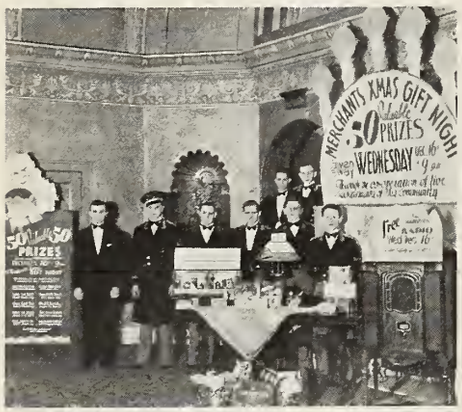
It's gratifying to hear from Fisher again and we're glad to be able to pass along news of his activities to other members of this Club. Naturally our current releases are 'way ahead of his but there is always the possibility of adapting his suggestions to other pictures. We will be looking forward to his next communication.

Ezell Dickering

It is reported that Claude Ezell, operator of four theatres in San Antonio, Texas, is dickering for a number of Publix houses in Texas. He is in New York City at this writing.



Going Vaudeville

Warner Theatres in Eastern states are going in for wide booking of vaudeville and stage presentations, according to a recent report from Walter Meyers, head of this particular bureau in the New York office.

LAMM PROMOTED BIG XMAS GIVEAWAY WITH HELP OF HOUSE STAFF

The entire house staff of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, helped Manager Julius Lamm promote the fine collection of merchandise shown below in the accompanying photograph. The occasion was advertised as Merchants Xmas Gift Night and 50 valuable awards were made.

The event took place about a week before Xmas and was greeted with a near-capacity crowd. All the merchants were very well pleased with the way the affair was handled, which, as Lamm states, is the most important part of any promotional activity. A promotion as large as this one has to be handled strictly on the up-and-up or it is very apt to leave a bad impression among participants. In other words, says Lamm, never promise a merchant anything that you can't live up to.

The other photo shows the big Xmas tree that Lamm personally promoted through the cooperation of the local Exchange Club, which defrayed all expenses connected with the display.

That certainly was a corking give-away that Lamm promoted and he and his staff are to be congratulated for pulling off such a big event. It took a full month to complete the transaction. His advice concerning the handling of such an affair is of the kind that can be followed by every one of us and we can only add that the principle of living up to promises can be well applied to any business transaction.

ASSISTANT MANAGERS!

Managers who are members of the Club should take steps to enroll their assistants in our organization as soon as possible.

It will give them an added interest in their work and help you to impress upon them the many responsibilities that go with theatre management.

Assistants so enrolled at the request of their superiors are entitled to all the advantages of the Club but do not receive membership certificates until they have been promoted to a manager's berth.

Hundreds of our most active members joined while they were assistants and found our pages most helpful in acquiring a keen understanding of the manifold duties in theatre management, advertising, exploitation, etc. It's the real school of showmanship and provides a much-needed incentive for them to advance in the business.

ENOCH MADE TIEUP WITH MILK DEALER FOR AN ESSAY GAG

What with holding elaborate Xmas parties and arranging tie-ups with a milk distributor, the holiday season has been a busy one for Robert Enoch, publicity director of the Strand Theatre, Parkersburg, West Va.

More than 2,400 kiddies attended the theatre for the Xmas morning show, when they were treated to an especially arranged program, and given toys, candy, fruit, ice-cream and cake. Originally the Strand had planned but one show, but due to the large number attending, two shows were necessary.

The tie-up made with a local creamery company included the distribution of several thousand milk bottle heralds (cut to fit over top of bottle) all along the milk route. Other stunts used to boost attendance included the writing of essays on "why Pasteurized milk was safest" and distribution of tickets granting bearer one quart of milk each day for seven days. These tickets were distributed at the theatre and became ratified in the usual fashion. The winners of the essay gag received a cash award of $5 each night, a committee of three prominent business men acting as judges.

Starting off the New Year by making a contribution to this department is a display of the proper spirit, Bob, and we hope you'll keep up the good work. Please accept our thanks and let your fellow showmen know what else is doing down your way.

Again An Owner

Milton Byrer, who at one time operated four theatres in Akron, Ohio, and lately in charge of the Cameo Theatre, Cleveland, has taken over operation of the Windameer Theatre in the latter city.

COOPERATION FROM SCHOOLS FEATURED WORK OF BLOOMBERG

Cooperation from schools featured a campaign made on "Spirit of Notre Dame" by Irving Bloomberg, manager of the Stanley Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J.

He arranged for a big high school rally to be staged in the theatre several days in advance and the school board allowed him to place 17 x 22 inch announcements on the bulletin boards of the schools. The football team attended the show as guests of the theatre and special college music was played along with songs of Notre Dame. School cheer leaders led the audience in songs and cheers from the stage.

For the first time in its history the local Board of Education permitted distribution of 5,000 heralds in the stadium during one of the big games of the season. Other heralds were distributed in front of a parochial high school and at a professional football game. The school athletic director also gave a talk on the picture in the school auditorium.

Merchants along the board walk and in the main shopping district also came through with many attractive window displays, one of which is shown in the accompanying photo. Note that the window is solid with copies of the Knute Rockne Magazine and tie-up copy on the picture. A local taxi company was also tied-up for the placing of advertising copy on bumpers, and the theatre front was dressed with a profusion of school and college pennants.

Now that we have a line on Bloomberg's work we hope that he will become a regular contributor to this department. How about this, Irving? Let the Club hear about what you have planned for the New Year.

While Honeymooning

George Tyson will handle de luxe theatres for Warner Bros. in Pittsburgh, Pa., while Johnny Harris is honeymooning with his bride-to-be, Miss Lucile Williams, and Earle Bell will take care of suburban and out-of-town houses. The Big Event will be pulled off January 22.

Broadway Merry-Go-Round

Publix has made a number of changes in its Broadway, N. Y., line-up. Leo Flynn has been assigned to the Criterion as assistant manager and Leo Trainer succeeds to Flynn's assistant managership at the Rialto. Dave Weisler, former treasurer at the Rialto, becomes a sound checker pro tem., and S. L. Barutio and Martin Rosen, respectively, remain manager and house manager.

"IT'S NEW BUSINESS EVERY TIME YOU CHANGE YOUR PROGRAM"—DOOB

Here is Number Three in the series on: "Is Advertising and Exploitation Necessary?" The first was from Gabe Yorke, head of Advertising for Fox Films. Second from Frank Whitbeck, formerly of Fox West Coast. The third is from Oscar Doob of Loew's Theatre. Like the first two, Oscar Doob is well qualified to discuss a subject of this kind. A brief review of his past experiences will convince you of that fact even as it convinced us. Before associating himself with Loew's Theatres in his present capacity he was publicity director for the Kunsky Theatres in Detroit; previous to that he was in the publicity department of Balaban and Katz Theatres in Chicago, which department he joined after concluding several years as one of the "ace" exploiteers of the original Paramount field group that made some exploitation history about ten years ago. Backing up all of his active theatre experience we find that he originally served as a newspaper man in Cincinnati, Ohio. Oscar Doob is acknowledged to be one of the smartest men in his field and one who has made great strides in modern show-selling. His views are well worth reading. Go to it.

By OSCAR DOOB

OF COURSE IT IS!

"Is exploitation and advertising necessary?"

Of course, any theatrical advertising man would answer that question with a loud, "Yes!" He'd be a chump if he didn't.

We are in an unusual business. There are very few, if any, like it. First, a theatre is in a NEW business every time it changes its program. Second, we ask the public to pay in advance for our merchandise, sight unseen. Third, if they don't like what they have bought, they can not return it and get their money back. We carry nothing on our shelves; we ask our patrons not only for their money but for hours of their time. We compete with every other time-consumer, from comfortable armchairs, radios, bridge, to sports, automobiles and shaded park-benches.

How anyone can say that such a business can get along without aggressive advertising and exploitation, I can not see.

YOU MUST SELL QUICKLY!

The chief reason why theatrical advertising must be in greater volume and more spectacular than other forms of advertising is the time element. We are compelled to sell great masses of people QUICKLY. We can't wait for word-of-mouth comment. We can't pursue a conservative, slowly-building campaign. Being compelled to SELL a different business (a new show) every few days makes it necessary that advertising budgets be a larger percentage of the gross business than if our product were a staple article that could be given months in which to gather sales momentum.

As I understand it, a "hit" is a picture which, regardless of any other merit or demerit, draws persons in large numbers to the box-office.

A picture with the qualities of a "hit" would EVENTUALLY become a hit without advertising. But by the time the picture, through word-of-mouth comment only, became a hit, the theatre would go into bankruptcy and the producer would have no money with which to start creating another hit.

In other words, "hits" do not need advertising—providing the owner or exhibitor of the "hit" isn't in a hurry and can afford to wait until the good word passes around naturally and brings the crowds eventually.

By the same token, the more efficient the advertising, the more logical and appealing natural "hit."

AN OPEN LETTER!

Oscar Doob,
Director of Advertising,
Loew's Theatres, Inc.
New York City.

Dear Oscar:

You're one bird who's hard to crack for a trade publication article and for three years it's been my aim to get your by-line on one of the pages of this section.

At last we've succeeded. Even if it did take a kind of funny question to do the trick. But because it was funny to you doesn't mean that it's that humorous to everyone else. No kidding, Oscar, there are showmen all over the world who have heard the old argument about not spending money to advertise the big hits and it takes comment from men like yourself to set them straight. They are traveling on the wrong road when they say that advertising the hits is unnecessary.

And Oscar, you'll note that I did not delete your references to M-G-M's product, and that's a concession.

Yours for bigger receipts,
"Chick" Lewis,
Managers' Round Table Club.

WE BELIEVE IN IT!

Executives of the Loew circuit believe in exploitation and advertising. If there ever was a group of theatres, in these tough times, so blessed with "hits" as is the Loew circuit, I never heard of it. (Here's the spot to plug Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures, God bless them!) Yet with all the Loew hits, Loew executives are as keen for exploitation and advertising as any "hitless" circuit could possibly be. We never believe a picture gets its maximum business. We exploit and advertise a Garbo-Gable or Shearer-Montgomery picture as if we were scared to death it would flop. Because we feel even these sure-fire "hits" shouldn't be left to themselves to take the natural course. We want to "milk" them; possibly create new Garbo-Gable fans; reach non-moviegoers; create new followers, and develop new selling angles. All of which must be done QUICKLY, and only advertising and exploitation can do it with speed.

Advertising will not make a "hit" out of a flop; but it may change a flop into a near-hit. And many a potential "hit" has been made a real "hit" by advertising. For instance, "The Guardsman"—an artistic triumph but an uncertain quantity as garden-variety entertainment—could have been a flop. Intelligent advertising and exploitation from the moment it was first exhibited gave "The Guardsman" a chance to become a hit. Having merit, it made good on the advertising and clicked.

Not long ago, a certain picture made a tremendous hit on Broadway following a huge campaign. It looked like a "natural" and exhibitors figured all they need do was to "announce" it. Outside of New York the picture was a sad disappointment—yet 99 per cent of those who saw it thought it great. It was a natural "hit"—but without aggressive advertising it never blossomed. It slowly improved as it hit the second and third runs!

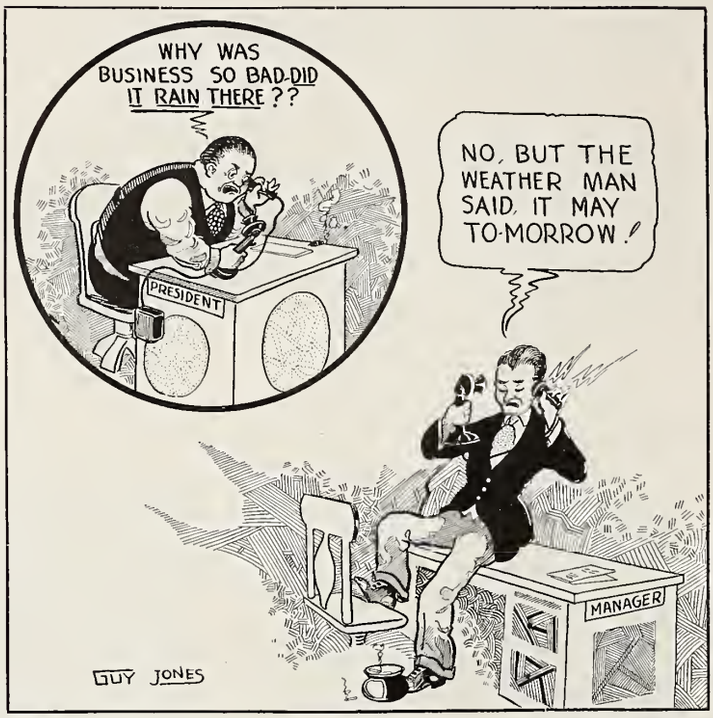
ADVERTISING SAVED A FLOP!

Recently a picture had three pre-release engagements in widely separated cities and had miserable openings. Only the regular advertising and exploitation was given it. Feeling the picture merited better business, the sponsors quickly put out a big national campaign for the later openings. The business was more than enough better to pay for the extra advertising and the picture a moderate success. Advertising didn't make a hit; but it rescued a flop.

Advertising cannot make the public buy what it doesn't want. But it can find the maximum number of customers who might want what you have.

Advertising discussions can go on forever. The person opposing advertising is usually the one who expects miracles from it—a $500 return for a $5 investment. Or he is one who doesn't differentiate between intelligent, thoughtful advertising and the other kind. There are ads in page-size space that won't sell; there are 50-line ads that do sell. There are exploitation stunts that actually drive people away from the theatre; there are other stunts that get business.

Doob Says:



"Many a potential 'hit' has been made a real 'hit' by advertising."

"Advertising cannot make the public buy what it doesn't want. But it can find the maximum number of customers who might want what you have."

Keeping Up With The Times!

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Earle Eveland is an exception to the rule in this business that most showmen either first see the light of day in a theatre or start in show business at an early age. He followed the teaching profession for five years and has filled the offices of Clerk of the Common Court and assistant cashier of the First National Bank in his town before turning his attention to show-business.

Earle Eveland

However, while serving his term in the Court of Appeals an opportunity arose to purchase control of a motion picture theatre and that's what started the ball a-rolling. We refer to the owner-managership of the Twin City Theatre, McConnelsville, Ohio.

For the past ten years he has acted as assistant bank cashier and served on the executive committee of the Morgan County chapter of the American Red Cross. He is also a trustee of the Muskingum Valley Chatauqua, an independent organization which recently celebrated its silver anniversary. Contrary to some exhibitor's opinion of Chatauquas, Eveland does not have any trouble because he works with it. Furthermore, he states that after a week of such entertainment, patrons are always glad to come back to his theatre where they can see a good show.

At this writing he is adjusting business affairs so that full time may be given to his theatre; at least until some other field engages his interest. He is an active member of many local organizations in his town, belonging to the Masons, Odd Fellows, Rotary Club, etc., and has held offices in several of these bodies.

GEORGE DELIS WAGED BIG CAMPAIGN WHEN SELLING SCREEN DUO

Steubenville, Ohio, got an eyeful of Sue Carol and Nick Stuart when these two screen personalities were booked as an added attraction by George Delis, manager of the Capitol Theatre.

In arrangement with a newspaper, a shopping tour for the two stars was routed among leading merchants and a full page co-op ad resulted from this move. As you can see by the accompanying photo, the Mayor himself okayed the arrival of the stars by presenting them with a huge "key" to the city and lent his presence to a parade led by the High School Band.

Other phases of the campaign included the placing of a large cutout of the stars in the theatre lobby; a big advance story in the paper one week in advance; a daily broadcast over the local radio station; advance trailers during every show; 200 one-sheets and 200 two-sheets posted all over city and within a radius of 20 miles; window cards reading, "Welcome to Steubenville, Sue Carol and Nick Stuart"; promotion of flowers and candy for Miss Carol; promotion of an auto for her use while in city; announcements on menus in all restaurants; use of street car signs, pennants and tire covers; visits to prominent clubs by stars, thus securing stories in paper; visit by Miss Carol to oldest woman in County Home for Aged, when a photo was taken and later reproduced in paper; special display of Carol and Stuart stills in prominent stores; special front for theatre, and the plugging of Sue Carol Sundaes and dishes at all stores and restaurants.

"Frankenstein" Sold Big!

When advertising and exploiting "Frankenstein," in addition to bill-posting, window cards, special displays, street car signs and newspaper advertisings, he used a teaser campaign two weeks in advance. Several thousand envelopes, with a cut of a "monster" on same and containing three matches, were widely distributed all through the city. Copy read, "The Monster!—Has The Strength of 10 Men But Fears Fire—Carry This With You Always—See Him in Frankenstein at the Capitol." Two three sheet cutouts of the Monster with green lighted eyes were placed in the lobby one week in advance. A big twenty-four sheet cutout of the Monster with green lights in eyes was placed on top of the marquee. A special front and a special mechanical man were also used.

Another photo shows the interior of the Capitol's auditorium filled to overflowing with youngsters on the occasion of a "potato matinee." There is also a shot of several big barrels of potatoes, but if we attempted to reproduce the two the combination would all look like potatoes, so we'll just mention that the show was a success from every angle.

Regarding Delis' campaign in connection with the personal appearance of the screen stars, all will admit that it was most complete, and it goes to show what can be accomplished on such an occasion. His suggestions will undoubtedly prove valuable to other members who may wish to extract every ounce of publicity and advertising when working under similar conditions.

RUBBER MATS SAVE CARPETS!

Each year we sound the same warning but if it prompts you to act on the suggestion then we don't mind repeating.

During the winter months you can just about ruin your carpets and spoil the appearance of your entrance foyers by not providing corrugated rubber mats to catch the wet snow and slush that is tracked into the theatre from the street.

The cost of such mats depends on the space to cover from the street to the auditorium and even where the area is large it pays in the long run to provide these mats for more than just the carpet preservation angle.

They catch the snow, dirt and slush from the feet and guard against slipping and accidents on the tile or marble floors of the lobby and foyer. Considering the many years of service you can get from these mats is sufficient reason for going to the expense.

THE OWNERS of these and other leading theatres throughout the world voice their hearty approval of Per-fu. . . . There must be a reason. . . . There IS a reason.

Per-fu, and Per-fu alone, gives you positive assurance that your lobby is void of any stuffy disagreeable odors that are so noticeable to patrons upon entering the theatre from the fresh outdoor air. Per-fu creates an atmosphere that is pleasantly scented with the fragrant aroma of fresh cut flowers. REMEMBER the first impression is a lasting one.

A chromium plated rheostatic controlled electric disseminator—of very pleasing appearance—to dispense the odor of your choice sells at $5.00. Per-fu in any one of nine (9) odors at $6.00 the pound.

BENEFITS!

Your various local organizations are probably running short of ready cash because everyone of their members are in the same boat. Which makes it a good time to concentrate on a string of theatre parties, benefit shows and organization tie-ups for the sale of tickets and filling of empty seats on your off nights.

We gave some details on the benefit show slant in the issue of December 5th, page 75. Consult that item and if further information is wanted just drop us a line.

In some communities we have definite information that theatres increased business by several hundred dollars in extra receipts through such benefit shows. They can be spotted as often as necessary and even at the rate of one night a week providing you have enough active organizations in your community to get behind them.

JONES GETTING OUT SNAPPY HERALDS AND PROGRAMS AT NO COST

After glancing through several programs and program-heralds gotten out by Charlie Jones, manager of the Fox-Village Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., we venture the opinion that these are the result of painstaking work.

Both programs and heralds are self-supporting through carrying ads of neighborhood merchants. Blue ink is used in the printing and the only variation in make-up between the two mediums are the pages listing the different numbers of the current show. Each issue carries a good flash on account of the amount of white space surrounding cuts or mats.

We would like to get a further slant on the type of work being done at the Village by Jones and hope that he will favor this department with other interesting contributions. In the meantime, we'll pass along the compliments of the season.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

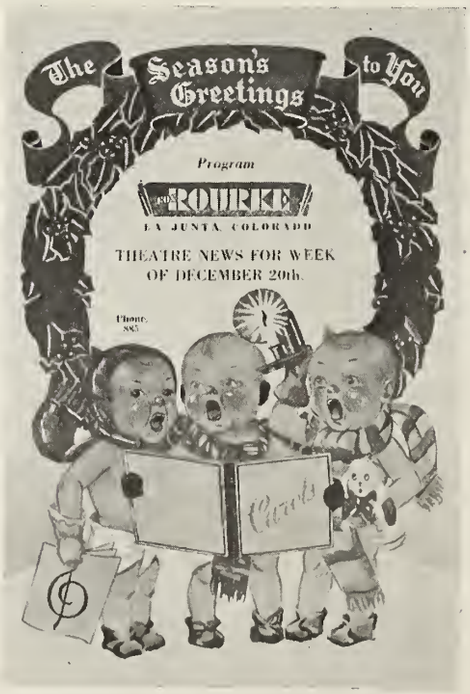
Roy H. Rowe was born in Burgaw, N. C., on May 29, 1905, and was educated in the University of North Carolina. At this writing we find him holding down the job of manager of the Palace Theatre, a Publix house in Raleigh, N. C.

Roy Rowe

He began his career in show-business at the age of 24 years because he liked the looks of the game, and prepared for it by taking a course in the Publix Managers' Training School. Following graduation he was assigned to the Strand in Spartansburg, S. C., and later on filled managerial posts at the Imperial in Greensboro, N. C., prior to taking his present post. The Palace is a 756 seat house and caters to college students and general patronage.

Show-business claims his entire attention and at present there's no thought in his mind of ever leaving this field for another; in fact, if he had to start all over again, he'd do the very same thing. So far he's been true to Publix, never having been connected with any other circuit.

ROSEN USED UNIQUE ANGLE AS CAMPAIGN FEATURE ON PICTURE



Among the stunts pulled on "Local Boy Makes Good" is one from Lew Rosen, manager of the Warner-Strand Theatre in Syracuse, N. Y.

Combing over selling angles for this picture Rosen wondered how many young fellows of 21 years of age in his town had made good. He took the question to a local newspaper and the move resulted in an announcement to readers to send in 200 word accounts of qualifications of those they thought entitled to the honor. It was also stated that a committee would pass upon the facts and select ten leaders at a dinner to be held at a leading hotel.

Many letters testified to the amount of interest taken in the affair by local people and the dinner turned out to be an elaborate event. Speeches were made by the "Boys" who had made good and by some of the most prominent men in the city. A suggestion was made that the affair be carried out annually.

It's been some little time since we've had the pleasure of recording an account of one of Rosen's stunts and now that he is again represented in this department it is to be hoped that he'll continue the good work. That was an interesting exploitation slant he took on the above picture, and a variation of the one used by Ed Hart down east of him in Utica. Hart picked out six elderly men who had made good and ran photos of the rear portion of their heads and shoulders in a local paper, asking readers to identify the six with the further aid of information concerning their activities, hobbies, etc.

ATTRACTIVE COVER!

Above is a reproduction of the front page of a program issued for the Xmas season by E. C. King, manager of the Rourke Theatre, La Junta, Colo. It was a four color affair and nicely reflected the spirit of the occasion. Copy on the other pages was run off in green ink.

ROOF LEAKS!

A close watch should be maintained after a snow fall to detect roof leaks. They will show up during snow even before rain. Where theatres are built with hanging or false ceilings, an inspection ought to be made every morning to see if any dampness or water is coming through.

If you catch such leaks in time it will save you expensive redecorating of the main ceiling and side walls of the theatre. Such redecorating is a big task due to the usual height of the ceiling and its difficulty to reach with ordinary extension ladders. The expense of a temporary scaffold certainly warrants extreme care being exercised in this respect.

Also be careful that your gutters and leaders are clear of refuse and not clogged up in any way so as to interfere with the free flow of the melting snow or rain.

HART HAS A NOVEL WAY OF ADVERTISING HIS STAGE BAND ACT

One of the Club's recently elected members, H. E. Hart, general manager of Smith and Hart enterprises of Auburn, Ind., has a gag which has undoubtedly been the means of cementing a strong bond of good will between his firm and the proprietor of a local music store.

When a dance band is presented it is generally billed over everything else in newspaper ads and every song number is listed by title. Underneath the list attention is called that persons desiring to purchase sheet music for the above may do so at the music store or secure same by communicating with the theatre management.

Community singing has been featured in Smith & Hart houses in the past with unusual success. However, this form of entertainment does not appear to go over so well when using a band, and the management is again seriously considering use of the organ to augment the occasion.

We are mighty glad to have Hart with us as an active contributor to this department and hope that he continues to let us know what is doing in show-business out his way. He and his associates operate the Court and Empire in Auburn; the Crystal in Butler; the Strand in Warsaw; the Royal in Garrett, and two dancing pavilions to boot. With all these houses to draw upon for show-selling stunts, the Club should be in for some interesting information. We also hope that he will encourage his various house managers to pass along any dope that will be of interest to the other fellows in this organization.

Change in Tampa

A change of managers of two Sparks theatres in Tampa was recently announced by Jesse Clark, district manager of Sparks Florida west coast houses. Al Weiss, Jr., former manager of the Victory, has been placed in charge of the Park, while George Peck was moved from the Park to the Victory. Peck, known as the dean of Tampa showmen, formerly managed the Victory when it was operated by Publix.

Labine Slated

Louis Labine is slated for management of the Warner Strand Theatre in New Britain, Conn. Pending his arrival the house is in the hands of Bernard A. Grogan, manager of the Warner-Strand, Hartford.

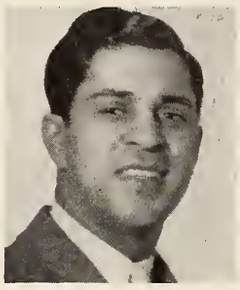
COSTLESS SHOW-SELLING PROVES TO BE DAVIDSON'S LONG SUIT!

Something Doing All The Time Is Recipe For Extra Business

About three years ago we paid a visit to Chicago and among the many showmen we met we were most enthusiastic over a certain young chap who certainly possesses more than the usual amount of originality and pep.

He could grab a hold of most anything under the sun, be it groceries, butcher shops, yea, even an undertaker's establishment and put it over with his chief stock in trade; exploitation. If our memory serves us right, that was the word upon his office door; Exploitation.

But this chap tackled Exploitation from angles never before directly associated with the word. To him it means super-selling while to others it was just a lot of noise over something or other.



But as an independent dispenser of Exploitation the market was unfortunately limited, and so it was with much regret that we learned about this Exploitation Shop closing down for numerous reasons.

But that didn't stop the specialist from specializing. (With apologies to Chic Sale.) The field and the need for real exploiteers were too great to permit him to fade out of the picture, so it was not long before we found him slightly removed from his own happy hunting grounds, Chicago, but nevertheless still dispensing his usual fine brand of show-selling. He had hung up his hat in Detroit, a city famous for many other things besides automobiles. As a true statement of fact, the theatre field is far more congested than the automobile business and if you doubt this statement for one single moment just inquire of any showman from Detroit and especially a few who have had to buck the line of this over-seated community.

So to achieve any measure of success at all, you just had to be a damned sight better than good. You have to be an almost miracle man. And that's what we think of this chap we met three years ago in Chicago.

Step up folks and make the acquaintance of one of the leading lights of this world of exploiteers a young chap so full of wim, wigor and witality that you expect to see him blow up any minute, and, seriously, a dynamo of ability and action; Dave Davidson, Director of Advertising and Publicity for the Publix Michigan Theatres in Detroit.

Now that we've blown off all that steam and valuable space about this mugg, it behooves us to back it up with some facts to bear out our flattering statements, otherwise you might think that all this is a lot of the well known show-hooey, but believe us, it's the truth, sohelpme.

Dave Davidson

When an organization makes a bid for business via showmen like Dave Davidson they are backing up their expensive theatre investments the right way.

Here is a man with a wealth of knowledge and experience along the lines of exploitation, advertising and publicity and furthermore, possessed with a personality that makes him a "natural" to crash tough newspaper editors and merchants who hate to give.

He is so well known throughout the middle west that it will be like a good old reunion for his many friends to read this brief bit about his numerous activities. Those who just don't happen to know him will become better acquainted by reason of this report about some of his recent "costless" merchandising.

Davidson and his modern show-selling methods must not be lost in the shuffle and it will be our task to keep a check-up on him and publish something about what he is doing as frequently as we can get the dope.

"CHICK"

OPENING A NEW HOUSE!

Glancing through some note we made about his activities during the latter part of nineteen thirty-one we were particularly impressed with the smashing campaign he gave the opening of the new and beautiful Eastown Theatre. Besides the usual opening gags consisting of parades, talking pictures on the street, balloons floating in the sky, and about a dozen other routine (to him) things, he came through with a tabloid paper of some sixteen pages and all crammed full of interesting facts about the new theatre and it's policy and a large percentage of ads that made the entire issue of 50,000 absolutely free to the theatre.

That's promotion and costless exploitation if there ever was any. We are reproducing the front cover of the tabloid and we only wish that space permitted us to show some of the inside pages so that you too could get an idea of how the ads were surrounded with show-selling copy and cuts about the theatre, the attractions and the stars.

We doubt whether a single copy of these tabloids were consigned to the waste basket before reading. It was like a magnet and compelled the attention of whoever received a copy. And fifty thousand copies can't be wrong. No sir. You'll also find a photo of the front on the opening night just to give you the faintest idea of what was going on in East Detroit on that memorable night. They won't forget about it for a long time. Take our word for that.

Good Sound Showmanship Is Necessary For Real Profits

PROMOTING GIVEAWAYS

A glance at another photo on this page reveals some high-powered promotion from the merchants for gifts representing a heck of a lot of dough in these days of scotch ideas and none-too- much-business.

No cheap junk in this group, nor in any of the others which he was instrumental in getting donated for giveaway nights and might we take the liberty of adding at this moment that the business for the giveaway nights brought many an extra thousand over a period of several weeks.

But the best part of this little incident (?) in the life of Dave Davidson is the fact that not only did he get the merchandise from the merchants but made them kick in for printing costs and photos too.

Is that high-powered? You answer it yourself.

To sum up this particular gag; it ran for five nights, Monday to Friday, and attracted considerable attention and business to the b. o. To help publicize it the following mediums were used; trailers, circulars, coupons, lobby posters,

A PLAY FOR THE KIDS!

The youngsters are not overlooked in the Davidson scheme of things and many examples of business promotion for their especial benefit are always on tap. One of the gags which particularly appealed to us was the coloring of stars on circulars for which the best ones were awarded some free admissions. This was run in conjunction with their large and peppy Mickey Mouse Club.

The coloring idea is by no means new, but Dave sort of injected his own slant by trying the slant close to the Club and thereby helping that angle which helps along business in general. Outlines of Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper and Robert Coogan were incorporated on circulars with instruction on how they should be colored. On the bottom of each circular the Mickey Mouse member signed his name and club number.

A similar circular was worked out for the introduction of Brooke Johns, the well known banjoist and Michigan Theatre M. C. who helped at the Mouse club meetings and became a sort of idol for the kiddies.

All of these slants are productive of actual results and attracting of attention and business to the theatre aside from the kids themselves. Every circular that entered a home with the child stood a darned good chance of being read by the adults and further impressing them with the thought that a great neighborhood institution in the form of the theatre running the idea was within easy reach. You might label the adult slant institutional advertising because most any advertising idea that does not sell a particular attraction can be thus labeled.

CIRCULAR TIE-UP!

Another one of his business building ideas, and one that involved plenty of work, was a tie-up with a circular distributing outfit whereby he edited a page in a tabloid news sheet sponsored by a group of shops in Detroit. He worked out all the items, contests, etc., for the page he was handling and at absolutely no cost whatsoever to the theatres.

You can visualize the tremendous wedge this was when we tell you that these tabloids, 25,000, were distributed house-to-house every other week and were always welcome wherever received.

He made his page in these tabloids so interesting that great returns and response were received from those who participated in the various gags he worked out. Some of them included a "Who? Contest," "Patch Puzzles," "Guest Tickets," "Limerick Contest," and "Word Contests." These different contests were all legitimate and attracted no end of attention to the tabloid and the theatres.

His page, in addition to these activities, also carried many interesting items about Hollywood, the stars and current attractions on the theatres he was plugging within the distribution area of the house-to-house circulation.

Work? You bet, and plenty of it for a busy man who has some ten theatres to look after in the line of publicity, advertising and exploitation, which is a man's size job in itself. But it's the slants that require such extra effort that bring home the bacon. Dave certainly plugged hard for this tie-up and had the satisfaction of knowing that he was getting some valuable publicity for several of the theatres in his section.

ORIGINALITY PREDOMINATES!

One thing that can be said for Davidson's activities is that they are certainly original in many different ways. Even the time-worn gags look new when he gets finished playing around with them and so are "new" in their strength and pull.

We could fill another couple of pages with other activities of this dynamic pep-man, but already it begins to sound like too much of a plug and we don't want to make him buy larger hats. Not that we would think of accusing him of such a condition, but when our enthusiasm starts running away with us there's no telling where or when we will stop.

So, for the present, and you may rest assured that you'll read more about him on these pages, we will bid him adieu and wish him all the success he deserves for his hard work and constant plugging. He's another one of the real showmen that Publix can be proud of. He's a credit to them and to the publicity and advertising men in which field he takes no back seat.

No "junk" here. Every giveaway a valuable and expensive item!

For Sweet Charity

Benefit shows for charitable organizations in Clarksdale, Miss., will be continued for an indefinite period, according to a recent announcement by officials. This type of show has been in effect off and on for a year and it was thought that January 2 would see the end of them.

MINISTERIAL HEAD SPONSORED WEDDING FOR J. F. O'HERN

No less a personage than the president of the Ministers Association backed and officiated at a public wedding held recently at the Olympia Theatre, Chelsea, Mass., by Manager J. F. O'Hern.

On the fateful night the entire house staff dressed in evening clothes, the cashier donned an evening gown, the doorman appeared in full dress and plug hat and all the ushers were decked out in tuxedos. Flowers dressed the stage and a special set was secured without cost for the occasion.

All gifts for the bride and groom, including the bride's wedding gown and bouquet; a floor lamp; wedding cake; electric clock; shoes, hosiery and lingerie; electric toaster; a closed car for the whole evening, and even the wedding rings were promoted at no expense to the theatre. The entire cost to the house, including trailers, organist and incidental expense did not exceed $20. Publicity and space secured consisted of a full half page co-op, two front page stories in local paper in advance, and a story in a Boston paper.

Summing up, the stunt doubled Tuesday night trade for the house and earned a lot of good will from both newspaper and cooperating merchants. It's been a number of weeks since we've had occasion to mention one of these affairs and we're glad to start the ball rolling again with O'Hern's contribution. We hope he will see that other news concerning his activities find a way to reach these columns.

BORLAND SHOT KIDS ENTERING HOUSE TO PLUG A NEW SERIAL

To start of a serial, Hugh S. Borland. manager of the Gold Coast Theatre, Chicago, Ill., arranged with a film service reporter to take motion pictures of the horde of youngsters who attended the first episode.

For this occasion he issued a special herald describing the serial and calling attention to the picture-taking stunt. It was further stated that the pictures would be shown the following Saturday. An offer of a bar of one of the popular brands of candy was an added inducement for the kids to turn out en masse.

The above stunt was also used to excellent results on the occasion of a Hallowe'en Party held by Borland, when he presented "Huckleberry Finn" and another episode of the serial. It went over great with the youngsters and as the cost of such a stunt is but little, compared with the big kick it gives kids to see themselves in a movie, he is passing along the suggestion to others.

This Round Tabler was in charge of the Armitage Theatre when we last heard from him. Now that he's in a new and lively post, we'll look for a renewal of his activities as a regular contributor to this department.

More Responsibility

Elmer C. Rhoden, division manager of Fox-Midwest Theatres, has been given supervision of an additional 112 theatres in Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. This increase in responsibility, it is said, distinguishes him as having under single control the largest group of theatres assigned any one man in this country.

FOUR BOYS AND A GARAGE-THEATRE!

High School Boys of Grand Rapids May Some Day Become Magnates in Show Business

Deviating from this department's usual output of accounts about how shows are sold, we are presenting a little story about four Grand Rapids, Mich. boys who are undoubtedly destined to some day make names for themselves in show-business. We write of Albert Hefferan, Irving Folger, Donald Blietz and Jerome Hartger, all high-school boys with another term to go, and operators of what has come to be known as a most unique motion picture theatre—The Owl.

Albert Hefferan

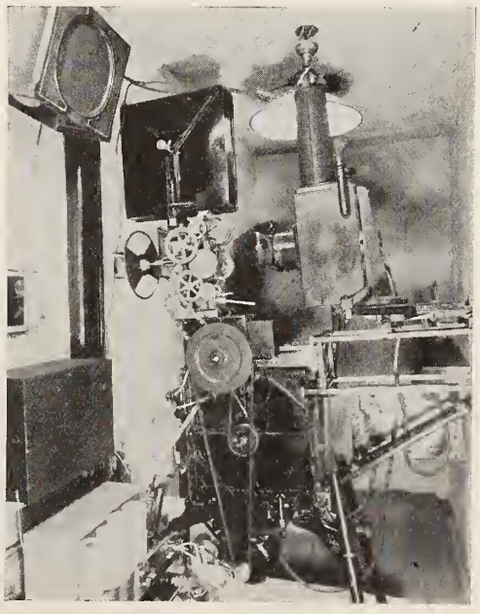
What began as a boyish hobby on the third floor of his parent's home, where young Hefferman started to experiment with a 16 mm. projector, has grown into a theatre that has never seen or heard of red ink. The Owl grew from the third floor back to its present quarters in a garage that seats 60 people at the rate of 25 cents per copy for adults and 15 cents for children. It has a section of "orchestra" and an elevated "stadium" tier of boxes in the rear. An S. R. O. sign over the entrance has become a necessity rather than an occasion.

The Owl is operated along the same lines as any other theatre regarding delivery of film and show routine. The same film truck that delivers choice first runs to deluxe theatres in Grand Rapids stops in front of the garage and unloads a couple of second-runs for a two days' showing, collects its delivery fee and moves on.

Pictures of the "program" class are looked upon by the boys as most productive for their trade, which consists of people from the immediate neighborhood or a few curiosity seekers who have made a special trip to take a look at the odd little theatre. The features are bolstered up with two reel comedies, novelty shorts and travel films, the latter secured free of charge from tourist agencies.

Prior to installation of sound-on-film equipment the boys displayed considerable ingenuity in introducing sound effects. They installed a double turntable capable of playing 10 and 16 inch records over which they cued their silents during a rehearsal. This equipment was augmented by an amplifier and loudspeaker. It is still used when a satisfactory talkie is not available.

As trade changed so changed their theatre. More seats were installed when neighborhood patronage increased, a new screen was added and the interior made more attractive with novel lighting effects and drapery. Expansion called for a new financial set-up and aid came from a number of boosters among family and friends, who formed a small syndicate.



Among the holders of "stock" is an uncle who occupies an important executive position in a local bank, and whose business sagacity helps his youthful proteges over many a tough spot. A lawyer also belongs to the board of strategy and his services have already been called upon to defeat the aims of a greedy electrician who sought to overcharge the youngsters when a pair of standard projection machines were installed. Others are called into conference when new equipment is needed, but as stated before, the house while showing small profit at times has never known the "red," consistently playing to capacity.

Interior View of Owl Theatre, With Entire Staff in Background

The theatre is operated principally on Friday and Saturday nights, since the boys must have some time to keep up their school work. Fridays are generally given over to school-mates and other young people of the community, while Saturdays are held in reserve for adults. The only passes given out go to the "stockholders," who accept them in lieu of "dividends." On these Saturday evenings a large number of expensive autos parked in front of the garage, are in strange contrast to the general scheme.

The gross runs to approximately $25 when all seats are filled. Film rental for a second run amounts to about $10 for a two days' showing, and the delivery service to $1.50. About $3.50 goes for advertising, so after subtracting these items it will be seen that the boys net about $10 for the show.

Albert Hefferan, by virtue of founding the Owl, is the president, general manager and chief projectionist of the plant. Furthermore, the theatre is housed in his garage and much of his original equipment still functions in the booth. However, direction and management is more or less evenly divided between the four boys.

Irving Folger, on account of being something of a mechanician and having a yen for inventing things, is an able assistant in the projection room. It is Irving who produces many novel lighting effects and other ideas that places the Owl apart from the American boy's average miniature theatre. It is Irving who makes the silent films sound like up-to-date talkies.

Little is seen of Donald Blietz during shows for reason that he's the stage manager. However, remarks and returns at the box-office reflect his ingenuity in his end of the business. Deftly Donald manipulates the various draw curtains, controls the maze of switches on the board, all arranged quite in keeping with the accepted style in regular theatres.

Intrigued by the tune made by the clink of real money at the wicket, Jerome Hartger spends a portion of his time in the box-office raking in the shekels, but when the seats are filled he runs true to showman form by doubling at one of the theatre's most prized possessions, a six-octave, fifteen-stop, reed pipe organ.

The photos on this page show a view of the projection room, the interior of the "auditorium," and a small cut of the impresario, Al Hefferan. The interior shot shows Jerome Hartger sitting at the organ, with Don Blietz standing nearby. The two boys over by the bench are Irving Folger and Albert Hefferan.

As to what field the other boys will eventually choose for a business career, we're not quite sure but we have it from Hefferan himself that there's just one business for him and that's show business. He is eighteen years old at this writing and just as soon as he finishes high school and college he intends entering theatre management in a serious way. He hopes to make it a life-sentence. We predict he will make a name for himself.

HENGER'S WEIRD TRAILER PROVED EFFECTIVE!

HERE'S WHAT GREETED THE EYE IN HENGER'S LOBBY!

A novel advance trailer played an important part in a campaign made on "Frankenstein" by George Henger, manager of the Midwest Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla.

It was a real creepy, eerie presentation. For ten seconds before the trailer was thrown on the screen the house was darkened. During this period groans and moans, produced on a special disc, came from behind the screen. Then, while the house was still dark and the screen still blank, a deathly green head and the hands of the "monster" were projected on the blackness of the ceiling, played across the screen and up to the ceiling on the other side. This effect was made possible by means of a special slide projected with the aid of mirrors. With the disappearance of the head and hands the sound trailer was flashed on the screen to the accompaniment of back stage shots. This stunt was the culmination of a six weeks' advance trailer campaign, during which time Henger put a "monster" warning on the end of every short subject shown.

One of the accompanying photos shows a ten-foot head of the monster with green electrically lighted eyes, used as an advance display in the lobby and later moved to the outside. Several hundred of the accessory teaser 1/3 sheets were used about the town as additional advance material. The other photo shows another attractive display of cutout figures of monster, etc., with wall and cell effect.

An appropriately bannered truck with a huge replica of the monster laid out on the flat bed was used for a street ballyhoo, and an ambulance stationed outside the theatre made occasional hurry calls to and from a local hospital. Nurses were in attendance in the lobby during performances.

According to all reports, more than one gay Lothario in Oklahoma City stayed home to play bridge with the wife rather than explore dark alleyways during Henger's campaign on this picture. At any rate, his trailer idea will serve as one for other Round Tablers to pattern to their own needs and we are obliged to this showman for making it possible for us to pass it along.

As far as our records go this is the first opportunity we've had to acquaint Club members with a sample of George Henger's work. We hope the future will bring forth further evidence of his activities in showbusiness.

ROSENFIELD LADIES MATINEE CLUB GOOD AID TO BOX OFFICE

A stunt known as Ladies Matinee Club has been the means of increasing Monday matinee trade at the Modjeska Theatre, a Fox unit in Milwaukee managed by Joe Rosenfield. This idea was started with the intention of using it for one month, but it proved so profitable that it is being continued for an indefinite period. Here's how it works:

Cooking Tie-Ups!

A woman cooking expert gives a fifteen minute cooking demonstration every Monday. At the close of her lecture 25 baskets of groceries, promoted from distributors of several nationally advertised products, are given away. Three especially baked cakes and an assortment of cooking utensils, are also included among the awards. The theatre also has a tie-up with a beauty parlor for the give-away of cards good for a marcel or finger wave. Every fourth week, a major award such as a gas range or washing machine is included in the deal.

As the scheme took root it was astounding how both women and men fell for the idea. Women came back week after week and brought their friends along and the club has increased the Monday matinee trade over 200 per cent. Everything is promoted without any cost to the theatre and put on under the guise of a cooking school it dignifies instead of cheapening the house in any way. Incidentally, a numbered membership card was issued to each woman who attended the matinees.

We have had occasion to note in other correspondence from Milwaukee members of the Round Table that there are several neighborhood "advancement associations" in the city, among which is the Mitchell Street unit in the Modjeska's zone.

Civic Activity!

When the local business men celebrated the widening of the main shopping street, Rosenfield saw to it that he was placed on the committee and it goes without saying that the theatre benefited from the crowds that came out to take part in the festivities. Ruth Roland was in town at that time in a F & M unit and she was prevailed upon to make a personal appearance as a guest of honor. Pictures secured of her shaking hands with the Mayor were planted in the paper the following day, along with a good publicity story.

"Smiling Lieutenant" was being shown during the celebration and he used a street bally of a man dressed up to represent Chevalier. The man walked up and down the street, mingling with a crowd of approximately 50,000 people. One of the new autos, appropriately bannered, was also promoted, and in addition the usher staff carried around banners which read, "Modjeska Theatre—Service That Excels."

Rosenfield's Matinee will be interesting to many Club members, we are sure. The stunt has proved so popular out his way that four other deluxe houses have adopted it as a means to increase Monday trade and to build future patronage. Many manufacturers of nationally advertised groceries have lady demonstrators going around from town to town. They are generally experts in culinary art and it would seem that any one of them should welcome an opportunity to exchange a short lecture for an occasion to place their goods before a flock of women. If you haven't already attempted the promotion of such a club, why not sound out the possibilities of such an organization for your theatre. You have Joe's word that it's a bang-up way to attract the ladies, and men, too.

Tell Us More, Joe!

Its been quite a long time since we've had the pleasure of recording some of this Round Tabler's activities and now that he's on the active list again we hope that he will keep right on sending along these interesting contributions to his fellow showmen. The accompanying photo shows him at his desk, facing his Round Table membership certificate. He's signing something—maybe endorsing a bonus check, who knows! Let the Club hear from you again, Joe, just as soon as you can find the time.

BURNS STAGED NOVEL PROLOGUE SHOWING TEAM IN REAL ACTION

A football prologue, using members of a local squad on the stage, was put on in conjunction with the showing of "Spirit of Notre Dame" by William T. Burns, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Roslindale, Mass.

Just before the showing of the picture, the director of competitive sports of the city of Boston Park Department made a short, snappy talk regarding the activities and sportsmanship of the town team and took this particular occasion to introduce each player to the audience.

After all the players had been introduced, the players in their uniforms formed into regular line-up. Then the speaker said, "The boys will now show you for the benefit of those who have never seen a football team as they look in scrimmage formation facing their opponents." The boys then went through a few formations.

At the conclusion of the various formations, the lights started to fade with the title of the picture coming on the travelers. Then the boys formed a straight line directly in front of the travelers. When in this position, the travelers were drawn with the boys walking off as the picture of Rockne showed on the screen and his voice giving final instructions to his team, was heard.

The above stunt proved very effective, received favorable comment and it's another one for Club members to file away for use next fall, or maybe adapt to some other sports picture.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

All the way up the ladder from usher to manager would briefly serve to cover the career of Lafayette Moore in this industry, but in order to give his fellow Club members a better slant on this Round Tabler we'll go into a bit of detail concerning his past.

Lafayette Moore

He was born in Jacksonville, Fla., November 14, 1903, and received elementary education in that city and in the Florida State College. At 22 years of age he happened to be located out in Los Angeles and decided that show-business held more attraction for him than any other field.

Starting as an usher in the Million Dollar Theatre he was later promoted to the post of chief usher at the Paramount Theatre, and then on to jobs of chief doorman and assistant manager at the Orpheum and Criterion theatres respectively.

After four years on the coast he returned to Florida, resumed connection with Publix and attended the 9th session of the Managers' Training School. He was re-assigned to the Florida Theatre, Jacksonville, joined Walter Morris in Baltimore at a later date and eventually was named to manage the Warner-Trenton theatre in Lynchburg, Va.

Moore put in several years service in the U. S. Navy and was with that branch of the service during the late war. He is married and the father of one child. He says he is in show-business for keeps.

SID. GRAUMAN RETURNS!

Here is one of the ads which heralded the return of Sid Grauman to active management of the theatre he built in the Movie Capitol.

Since sending this ad to the engravers we learn that Grauman has smashed all records for business with MGM's box office clean up "Hell Divers" and his mighty prologue, and he's no slouch at producing them. In fact he's built up his greatest reputation on the strength of the stage shows that once led all the Hollywood theatres.

Having witnessed a couple of Hollywood openings I have an idea that the good old Chinese Theatre must have provided a multitude of surprises for the rubber-necks who turned out to see this premiere. We once mentioned, in a dispatch from the coast, that every time a movie magnet got indigestion they decorated Hollywood Boulevard, and if you've ever visited that town you'll know we're not exaggerating . . . much.

But to get back to the ad. Do you like the way it has been worked out? Can you duplicate it within reason for the next big picture opening at your own theatre? Think it over, an ad like this CAN be worked out.

HALL PLUGGED WILL ROGERS FILM WITH COLOR SKETCH GAG

Competition in coloring played a part in the selling campaign made on "Ambassador Bill" by W. H. Hall, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Texarkana, Texas.

The newspaper announced the gag on the front page by using a sketch of Will Rogers in one of his humorous poses. In fact, the sketch was drawn by the newspaper's artist.

Copy underneath the sketch read, "The Press artist whose sketches have been reproduced in The Press during recent weeks wants to see just how well his little friends can color the picture. He is offering a prize of a genuine cowboy suit, supplied by L. Schwarz-Co. for the best coloring and most artistic arrangement of the sketch. Either water colors or crayons."

The cowboy suit was promoted by Hall at no cost to the theatre. Guest tickets to see the picture were given to the winners. The newspaper gave the gag plenty of advance publicity as well as current with picture.

Front-page publicity was also secured daily on the Want Ad Column tie-up. The heading read, "Be Our Guest at the Strand." This is another Publix theatre. Each day names appeared among the classified ads. The persons finding their names were entitled to one ticket to see the current picture.

A neat bit of tie-up work, strongly testifying that Hall knows his way around the newspaper offices in his town. There is also evidence that he knows how to sell a merchant on the value of tying up with a theatre.

JOE KLIGLER FOUND DOING BUSINESS AT OLD STAND IN BRONX

The Missing Persons Bureau of this organization has finally discovered the whereabouts of one Joseph W. Kligler, who was last seen or heard from at the Daly Theatre, a house in a section of New York City known as the Bronx. Frankly, Mr. Kligler is still at the Daly Theatre; in fact he hasn't even been very far away all this time. His absence from this department has been due to an ailment common to all go-getting managers in this organization, the pressure of box-office against the brain.

However, with the New Year's usual crop of good resolutions to unlimber his wrist, it is disclosed that he and the Daly recently celebrated a Fifth Anniversary. Evidence of this great event is offered by a photo on this page, showing a five-tier cake surrounded by five candles.

Now that you have again returned to the fold, Joseph, all is forgiven; providing, of course, that your remorse for having strayed away is genuine. We will not set down the date the stern recorder of this department noted on your card when the last contribution concerning the Daly came in for fear it might cause embarrassment. Enough to state that you can atone by regularly letting us know what's going on up your way during 1932. Let's go, Joe!

DON'T BE A SLACKER—JOIN NOW!

STANDLEY H. RICH is in charge of the Rich Theatre in Montpelier, Idaho. His card states that his house hasn't any chain or circuit affiliations so as far as we know he may be owner as well as manager. Rich has 486 seats to keep filled and his fellow Round Tablers would like to know what methods he employs to perform this feat. That's a tip-off, Standley, so do your bit for the boys by sending along the information.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PHILLIP RAND has had charge of the destinies of the Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho, for a long time. Well we recall Mr. Rand's name as a charter member of the old Exhibitors' Herald famous group of showmen known as the "Herald Only" readers. For this reason we believe we can count upon him for great loyalty and are therefore mighty glad to list his name as a new member of the Round Table Club.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FOREST E. ROBB hails from Cascade, Idaho, where he operates the Cascade Theatre, an independent house that seats 300 people and is equipped with the latest in sound equipment. He is also a new member of this great organization of showmen and now that he is one of our gang we'll be looking for show news from his section of this country.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN J. MEDFORD is the manager of the Princess Theatre down in Oxford, N. C., and we're glad to announce that he, too, is now a full fledged member of the Round Table Club. According to his application John can operate a typewriter and so we'll be looking for a letter telling us and all his fellow Club members about what he is doing to put over shows in his town. Just what are you doing these days to promote attendance, John? Let your brother showmen know.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED SPINELLI has the job of helping Irving Fineman manage the State Theatre in the Ozone Park section of the borough of Queens, New York City. Fred is an assistant manager at this writing but there's no telling when he'll make that next step up the ladder. There's considerable competition out his way, which should be productive of many a live show-selling idea We'll be keeping an eye on this new member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

KERMIT HIGH manages the Carolina Theatre down in Wilson, N. C. and we're going to depend upon this new Round Tabler to keep this organization informed on what's going on in show business in his town. There's an active contingent of Clubmen in his state and we hope that Kermit will contribute his share of interesting gags to pass along to brother showmen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN R. BOWMAN is located out in Albion, Ill., where he manages the Majestic Theatre, an independent house seating 350 people and wired with an up-to-date system of sound projection. We have an idea that Bowman not only manages this house but is the owner as well, although information in this respect is lacking on his application for membership. Now that he's one of the gang, we hope that he will become an active contributor to this department.

JOSEPH J. GREENE has the job of managing the Rialto Theatre in Bushnell, Ill., and we're taking this opportunity to announce that he is another newly-elected Round Tabler. Meet all the boys in our gang, Joe, and just as soon as you can find the necessary time between shows, jot down and send to Club headquarters an account of that last successful campaign you worked out in your town. Get the "spirit" and help keep this department filled with interesting show-tips.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TOM JOHNSON hails from out Tulsa, Oklahoma way, where he guides the destiny of the Main Street Theatre. We are also in receipt of his application for membership in this ever-growing army of showmen and we're very glad to include his name on the Club roster. He is an aggressive theatre man and it will not be our fault if his brother members in this organization do not find out what he's doing from time to time in the show-selling line. Let your Club hear from you, Tom, at the first opportunity.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

KENNETH E. McMAHON is in charge of the Rialto Theatre in the city of Rochester, N. Y., and he's still another showman in line for introduction to fellow Club members. It took a trip to Albany, where he met Lloyd Lighthouse, manager of the Albany Theatre, to remind him that he had never filled out a Club application blank, but at this writting he's a full fledged member. He has been engaged in the art of selling shows for the past ten years and we feel sure that he will pass along many a helpful hint to his brother Round Tablers. Let's go, Ken.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MILTON BOMES holds forth at the Hollywood Theatre in East Providence, R. I., and a hearty Club welcome is also extended to this newly-elected member of this organization. There are a number of Round Tablers down your way, Milt, so when you meet give them our very best regards. Let us know what you are doing in show business, and if you have a good tip that will help a brother showman sell a show, just pass it along to headquarters and we'll see that it's broadcast.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES W. WORK states, "why shouldn't he become a member" of this great organization of showmen. "No cost to it," he continues, and "you get a big return." James is house manager of the Mission Theatre, a link of Pacific National's in San Diego, Calif., and he's been there for over a year under circuit supervision of Dwight L. Hill. Work has also been associated with Jack Rosenberg, of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, and R. J. Jerebek, of the Seville Theatre in Chula Vista. We're glad to have this seasoned showman with us and hope he'll do his bit to keep the ball rolling along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

AL J. WAGNER manages the Blue Fox Theatre in Grangeville, Idaho, a unit in the Al Wagner circuit of houses. We are mighty glad to extend the Club welcome to this new member and since he is in a position to gather up a lot of interesting information that will be of value to his fellow Round Tablers, it is to be hoped that he will regularly send along his ideas on selling shows out in his section of the country. Shoot them in, Al, and headquarters will do its part.

P. B. SHAVER is the manager of the Henry Theatre, Henry, Ill., and he, too, is in line for an introduction to his fellow showman-members of this ever-increasing organization. He operates an independent house which is equipped to give an up-to-date presentation of sound pictures. His fellow members will want to know what he's doing to keep those 400 seats filled and if he'll let us know from time to time, we'll see that this information is passed along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWARD BOMES stands at the helm of the Liberty Theatre over in Providence, R. I., and now that he's one of the gang we'll be expecting to hear about what's going on in show-business over in his town. What was that last stunt you pulled, Ed, that brought the shekels to the box-office? Let us know so that we can pass along the tip to the other boys.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES DENNY turns out poster art work for the Black Hills Amusement Company, Rapid City, So. Dakota, and was proposed for membership in this organization by C. C. Cassady of Zaring's Egyptian Theatre in Indianapolis, Ind. He is one of several poster artists recently admitted to this Club and that fact that they are now eligible as Round Tablers should be evident to other men who ply this craft. We are very glad to include Denny's name on the Club roster and trust that he will do all he can to contribute to this end of this department. Unless we are greatly mistaken, readers will soon get a glimpse of samples of his work.

THE EMBLEM OF PERFECT SOUND

J. C. JENKINS,
MOTION PICTURE HERALD,
HOLLYWOOD, CAL.

My dear "J. C.":

Here's a suggestion I hope you will accept before you and your faithful "April Shower" shake the dust (?) of Hollywood from your feet and "her" well-worn tires. If you are not already familiar with the RCA Photophone system of recording, you can get an eye full and an ear full of information from John Klenke, assistant manager of recording operations whose headquarters are at No. 7000 Santa Monica Boulevard. Why don't you hop into "April Shower" and go over there. John would be glad to show you how the new ribbon microphone and ground noise eliminator work and also give you a lot of inside dope on the RCA Photophone system of recording. The two recently developed devices I mention above—the ribbon microphone and the ground noise reduction equipment have been responsible for some of the finest recording ever turned out of Hollywood. After you talk with John, have him take you over to the RKO-Pathe, Educational, Tiffany, Tec-Art or Mack Sennett studios and see how these devices work in actual production. You will be amazed. The ribbon microphone is said to be the most sensitive and delicately constructed apparatus of its kind and the ground noise reduction apparatus handles extraneous noises perfectly. And the way RCA Photophone reproducing equipment handles the so-called "noiseless" recorded pictures is something to shout about. Here's what J. P. Neist, owner and manager of the La Tosca Theatre on South Vermont Street, Los Angeles, says about it: "I believe that RCA Photophone recording is superior to other systems as I am consistently pleased with every picture employing the Photophone process." You can't beat that, can you? So long, "J. C.", I wish I could say "I'll be seeing you."

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH

JENKINS' COLYUM

Hollywood

DEAR HERALD:

Rain, rain, rain. It keeps it up incessantly day and night and we are marooned in our room like a Shanghai rooster on a floating henroost.

The streets are veritable rivers and you wouldn't believe it if we told you that the salmon are running up Wiltshire, Sunset and Hollywood boulevards, and that a porpoise flopped its way into Sid Grauman's Egyptian theatre. We wouldn't blame you if you didn't. It sounds too fishy.

This weather reminds us of a remark Noah made on the evening of the thirtieth day when he said, "Well, gentlemen, this begins to look like a wet season." Then old Cincinnatis spoke up and said, "Yes, and if this keeps up much longer it is going to delay my spring plowing," to which a Californian replied, "Well, this is very unusual."

The only way to keep the press in your trousers out here is to not wear any: that's why there is such a demand for fig leaves.

People who have regarded Hollywood as a place to be shunned should revise their opinion. We find Hollywood not nearly so bad as she has been pictured. Both of her churches seem to be doing a fairly good business in spite of the competition they have in Aimee and Bob Schuler, and that speaks well for Hollywood.

Her traffic officers seem to be a nice lot of fellows but somewhat inquisitive. We were driving down Hollywood boulevard yesterday with a bunch of cars when all of a sudden they all stopped. We couldn't see what they stopped for, so we drove on. A cop was standing on the corner and he waved at us. We supposed he knew us so we waved at him. Then he ran out and stopped us and said, "Hey there, Rube," and then we knew he was mistaken, and we said, "You must be mistaken officer, our name isn't Rube, it's Abner." Then he said, "Don't you know a signal when you see and hear one?" And we replied, "No, sir, officer, we don't; we never played football in our life."

He then glanced at our Nebraska license plate, shook his head and said, "No, of course you don't, none of 'em do, but whyinhel do they send 'em all out here?" We looked at his uniform and said, "Say, officer, are you the Marine who won the war?" This seemed to make him kinda sore and he replied, "Well, the war is just starting if you don't get that old scow out of here." Just then a fella somewhere jingled a bell a coupla times and that flock of cars came rushing by us and we told the cop we'd be seeing him and we drove on. The very idea of him referring to April Shower as "that old scow"! The city authorities ought to teach 'em to be a little more courteous.

The streams out here seem to be pretty well stocked with suckers. Two fellows are said to have worked a scheme whereby they have raked in quite a bunch of cash on a promise of a return of 30 to 1. One man is reported to have invested $62,000 on that kind of a basis but the complete returns aren't in yet, and it is said an investigation has been started by the authorities. If Barnum had lived in Hollywood instead of New York he would have made it two every minute instead of one.

Speaking of moratoriums, we note that Congress has approved one of those animals. This quite likely means that in the end we will have to shoulder all the debt of the late war. Hurrah for Congress, and now let's be a big hearted Charley and give 'em Plymouth Rock. Let's give 'em the Washington Monument. Let's give 'em Bunker Hill. Let's give 'em the White House. Let's give 'em Salmon, Idaho. Let's be a REAL Santa Claus while we are about it and give 'em the wholedamworks. We don't need 'em anyhow.

We note by the press that Japan has taken Manchuria, and since she is one of the signators to the League of Nations, if she insists on taking Hongkong we hope the League will say to her, "Naughty, naughty, papa spank."

There have been three jokes perpetrated on the human race, and the League of Nations is all three of 'em.

So far we have met only a few of the stars, but we are expecting to be swamped with invitations as soon as they know we are in town. We hope however, that the girls will all get together and arrange the schedule so the dates won't conflict. It would be awfully embarrassing for Polly and Marie to invite us out just as we're going to call on Louise. Something ought to be done about this right away.

In our vagabondish wanderings hither and yon over this mundane sphere we have encountered every clime from 40 below to 110 in the shade. We have climbed the tallest peaks of the Rockies and we have stood at the 200 feet level below the sea. We have traveled the wind-swept plains of the Panhandle and the vine-clad slopes of the Ozarks. We have stood at the graves of Wild Bill and Calamity Jane on "White Rocks" and viewed the city of Deadwood in the canyon far below. We have seen the crocus bloom in the snowbanks on Terry's Peak. We have been in Wind Cave far down in the bowels of the earth and, with many others, in total darkness, have sung "Lead kindly light, amid th' encircling gloom." We have been "robbed and left for dead and have herded sheep on the plains of Poran and have been a guest in the tent of Father Abraham" (some of you will understand this). We have been held up in hotels and cafes and voted the wrong ticket when we ought to have had better sense. We have attended national conventions and watched the maneuverings of shyster politicians. And now we are marooned in the Mecca of millionaires and hoboes, where the millionaire shivers in fear of the kidnapper and hijacker and the hobo is all but shot should he step aside from the beaten path and pluck a sunkist orange from the tree of plenty, and, after all is said and done, we're still strong for Nebraska, by George, where there is "Equality before the Law." There, how's that, Ernie?

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

New York Roxy

Week ending January 21

Another widely diversified and colorful stage-show is currently playing in "The Cathedral." This week, James Dunn takes top honors, with Reri and Fred Waring next among the headliners.

The title of the show is "Five Races," with the red, yellow, brown, black and white represented as they appear.

(A) Princess Wah-oo-ah, native Indian singer, is featured.

(Incidentally, she did no more than sit on a rock in the background, as the 32 Roxyettes did all the work.)

An outdoor scene is the setting for the fine dancing of the ensemble, who are beautifully dressed in abbreviated Indian costume and red and white "war bonnets." The orchestra, in the pit, softly accompany them with "Indian Love Call." Their first dance is more a precision routine, but their second and last was a well-done interpretative Indian dance.

(B) The Honorable Mr. Wu and Company perform their bit in an Oriental atmosphere. Their act opens with Mr. Wu's entrance in a ricksha, followed by girls and men in Chinese costume. After a conversation between the coolie and himself, in their native tongue, the coolie surprisingly sings "Mother Machree" with a fine Irish brogue. A young man and girl follow with a real American ballroom waltz. Mr. Wu offers a good characterization of a part in the Chinese play, which is titled "Roar China."

(C) Reri, the vivacious, exotic Polynesian, offers her flowing undulations with complete abandonment in a scene wistfully remindful of the "paradise" of the South Seas. Reri's music is played by Her Native Tahitian Boys. As a background to this enchanting scene, girls seemingly ride up to the musicians on surfboards.

(D) James Miller, radio and motion picture singer, known as the "Black Caruso," and the Four Flash Devils ably uphold this part of the bill. Miller beautifully sings one number, to good applause. The Four Flash Devils offer the usual tap dancing routines, doing them no better than hundreds of other hoofers.

(E) Features Patricia Bowman, premiere danseuse of the Roxy, with the Ballet Corps and the Roxyettes. The pure white costumes and wigs of the combined ballet corps and the Roxyettes are beautifully set off with a simple black drop curtain, in front of which they work. Miss Bowman, in a white and glittering silver costume, does her nymph-like ballet routine with her usual ease and grace.

The next part of the program features Mr. James Dunn, in person. Naturally, after witnessing this third great picture he has made, the audience threw reserve aside and proclaimed him in the manner which he deserves. Dunn appeared just a little nervous. He is introduced by Fred Waring, who gags with him a bit and then leaves him to sing "Who's Your Little Whoozis?" Dunn closes his performance with that never-to-be-forgotten scene from "Bad Girl," where he pleads with the famous doctor for his services.

JOE STOVES

For the past seven months, this young fellow has been the featured organist at the Valencia theatre, a suburban house in New York City, and one of Loew's de-luxers.

His community song-stunts have become a main feature of every show. All in the audience sing and are his staunch boosters.

Joe has been a featured organist with the Loew circuit for the last eight years and in this entire time has been in but four deluxe houses. He is a Nashville boy, getting his education in schools of this city and also a B.A. degree at Vanderbilt University. He started his musical education in Nashville, too, but completed it with Fritz Heitman of Berlin and Carl Straube of Leipzig. Stoves is an accomplished musician, who not only plays classics in a masterly manner, but red-hot low-down blues as well.

Roxy Announces Early Return To the Air in Club Address

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel announced, in an address at the Woman's Forum in New York last week, that he would return to the air in "a few more weeks." He devoted his talk to a discussion of Radio City and the theatrical enterprises which he will direct.

He said there would be no pictures shown in the Music Hall and nothing but pictures in the film theatre. He added that he hoped to make the picture theatre "the art center of the movie world."

Houses Are Managers': Bernhard

Joseph Bernhard, Warner theatre head, told 34 managers who attended the Ohio Warner theatre convention in Cleveland last week that "theatres belong to the managers." The meeting was held to outline plans for a theatre business drive lasting through February and March.

STAGE SHOWS

Cincinnati Albee

Week ending January 15

This bill is clean as the proverbial hound's tooth, being free from risque or suggestive action, quips or dialogue. Dancing predominates, but not of the common garden variety. Moreover, there is plenty of sentiment due to the co-headliners, Dorothy Stone and Pat Rooney, 3rd.

The opening spot is assigned the Nelson Family, late of Ringling's circus, who are particularly adept in their acrobatics, tumbling and pyramid building, although the mother, in evening attire, has little to do except supply the scenery. The troupe excels in foot acrobatics and back somersaults.

Harry Rose, billed as "The Jester," follows in a song while racing up and down the stage, then acts as master of ceremonies, introducing Carl Freed, labeled as "The Clown Prince of Music." Freed, who plays the harmonica, clarinet and jewsharp at intervals, also does a number on two ordinary soup spoons. He is assisted by two unbilled lads in soft shoe dances, a girl with a French accent who does practically nothing at all, and another unprogrammed chap, all of whom participate in the hokum. A burlesque stage band and some travesty on magic are the highlights.

Dorothy Stone, scion of that brilliant trouper, Fred Stone, occupies center position with her partner, Charles Collins, who in real life is Friend Husband. Dorothy, petite, graceful and agile as ever, if not more so, sings and dances with inherent abandon. Her first number drew plenty of palm whacking, although Collins, who does a soft shoe dance while filling in the wait of a costume change, really got the bigger hand. Going to full stage, the couple did a duo dance which brought prolonged salvos and applause.

Rose remains on the stage to kid the orchestra and do an operatic aria in "Italian" which he humorously translates into English as he progresses.

Pat Rooney, veteran trouper, with his son, Pat 3rd, in closing position, were given loud ovations. The younger Rooney has improved considerably since seen here previously, while time has not robbed the father of his pep, vim and ability to shake his feet. Solo and duo dances were occasionally interrupted by some smart patter.

Harry Rose sings "Broadway Lullaby" as a finale to the bill.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending January 19

Fanchon & Marco's "Limehouse Nights" marks the tenth anniversary of the "Ideas," launched at Loew's Warfield theatre and shown in San Francisco exclusively for months before being made a circuit attraction. It was produced particularly for San Francisco and is a pretentious effort, with a story running through it that savors strongly of melodrama.

A London street scene, with its pall of fog, fades into the interior of a music hall into which slumming parties enter. Don Carroll sings "Limehouse Blues" and the Five Double dance teams in exaggerated coster attire offer a typical English dance.

The Wing Wah troupe does an exceptionally fine turn, the work of a girl contortionist arousing genuine enthusiasm. The exhibition of plate spinning on wands, while going through gymnastic maneuvers, is especially well received.

Sailors of different nationalities do dance turns, these including English, German, French, Scotch, Italian and American, with each nationality giving a sample of its particular brand of comedy. An English music hall pair offer some unadulterated London comedy that gets over in hit-and-miss fashion and the dance teams do a chair dance that is a real novelty.

Throughout the show there runs a story having to do with a sailor, a beautiful dancehall follower, a Chinese and a diamond bracelet, and the finale is a stirring dance of the Apache type by Armando and Lita, but wilder and more stirring than any of which the Paris Apache has ever dreamed. It ends with the death of both.

The show is elaborately staged and is fast moving, with more of a plot than is usually found in the "Ideas."

Baltimore Hippodrome

Week ending January 15

Fuller Brothers and Sister started with their novelty, an act of balancing and acrobatics. Grace Doro on an accordion gave an imitation of a train starting and at the piano offered a musical novelty showing how "Wabash Blues" was played by different people imitating a player piano, music box and harp. She finished with "It's the Girl." Jones and Hull came next in their comedy slapstick. Mannie King and his company followed with "A Parisian Night," the company including a beautiful blonde (a la Jean Harlow), as hostess and violinist, another man vocalist, a piccolo player and two Apache dancers. Next came Sue Carol and Nick Stuart, film players. They drew big applause, Miss Carol singing "Let's Do the Breakaway." Marion Wilkins with her four young men came next, in dances.

B & K Offers Big Names

Balaban & Katz, Chicago, is offering, at the Chicago and other houses, stage shows featuring, for successive weeks, Eddie Cantor and George Jessel, Dennis King, Cab Calloway. The stage show, "Girl Crazy," moves from the Oriental to the Tivoli.

Leaves Music Department

Josef Zimanich of the Publix music novelties department has resigned to go with National Screen Service, following a year under Boris Morris.

San Antonio Majestic

Week ending January 13

Ann Pritchard and Her Five Boy Friends opened the stageshow program with some neat tap dancing and songs.

In the deucer Art Henry and his partner appear in the "unfinished act." Their routine is made up of an Irish jig; fast crossfire; face-slapping; clowning on two musical instruments and funny chatter and songs which seemed to go over and win them some laughs. The young woman has a pleasing voice.

Cherry and June Preisser, billed as Dixie's dancing daughters, held down the trey spot and both are as pretty as a picture. Their Indian dances, along with other song and dance numbers, went over great. The smallest sis did "It's the Girl"; she drew equal praise for her handsprings and somersaults.

Toto, the clown, was the laugh riot of the show. He and his company who assisted with the props, and his other musical turns along with a takeoff on "The Merry Widow Waltz," were winners.

Jersey City Jersey

Week ending January 14

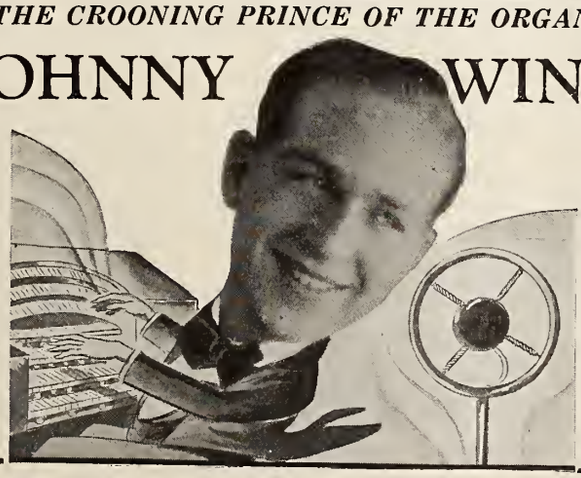
The breath of the big tent is permeating the atmosphere around this Loew deluxer this week. Spring is in the air and Frank Bradna's colossal circus is on the boards. The kids of Jersey—yes, and the grownups too—are having a great time, watching the funny antics of all the clowns, the acrobats, the animals, and of course the bareback riders and trapeze performers. The house is doing good business.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending January 14

A scrim showing various fine feathered birds opens Fanchon and Marco's "Fine Feathers" Idea, while a girl sings a selection in a splendid manner. The chorus members are attired in garbs resembling a bird with feathery skirts and fitting headgarbs. The first episode is completed with a combination of regulation and burlesque toe dancing by Edna Covey.

The Novelle Brothers tumble about the stage while playing various tunes on their violins. "One of them, "The Cat and the Fiddle." Their offering is completed with a cooing skit, one brother taking the part of a female bird and the other the male. They whistle their chatter throughout and get a big hand.



For the next number the chorus are attired

Kessler is enlarging his headquarters at his present address . . . 1452 Broadway. . . . That "Crosby-Columbo and Vallee" tune of M. Witmark & Sons is a natural for singing audiences and orchestras that feature singers. . . . Tom Kennedy, who wrote the RKO signature song and is known as "Voice of the RKO," is still doing plenty big things on the air. . . . Tom sits across from Danny Parker, who has charge of organlogues, in the RKO offices and though he has always liked to hear an organist play, had met only a few of them. . . . Now . . . due to all the RKO organists coming in to see Danny . . . Tom knows nearly all of them and whenever he gets a chance, goes out with Danny to hear them. . . . Music publishers please note . . . Roy Gordon has been featured organist at the Fortway theatre, Brooklyn, since last August. . . . Anyone else claiming he is the organist at that house is an imposter. . . . I mention this because one such fellow has been making the rounds of publishing offices and obtaining slides and music, supposedly for the Fortway house. . . . Kenneth Lea is featured organist at the Capitol, Elyria, Ohio. . . . Edna Lyman, niece of Abe Lyman, famed band maestro, has been selected to follow Albert Hay Malotte, internationally famous organist, into the Warner Western, Los Angeles. . .. Ted Meyn, new organist at Loew's State, Cleveland, is now broadcasting every Saturday, from 12 to 1 a. m. over Station WHK. . . . Jamie Erikson, for many years a favorite in many San Diego houses, is now featured organist at the Hollywood California Egyptian. . . . Billy Muth, the new organist at the Des Moines Paramount, is getting lots of billing and the critics are proclaiming him as an outstanding feature. . . . Billy features "Dreamy Southern Melodies" and I guess he's got 'em. . . . Detroit theatregoers have a great line of entertainers in store for them for the next few weeks. . . . Such stars as *Daphne Pollard . . . Alice Joyce . . . Tom Moore . . . Irene Rich . . . Eddie Cantor . . . George Jessel . . . Roscoe Ates . . . Ted Lewis . . . in gowns, which, when they stretch out their arms, give the appearance of the sides of a cage. They encircle a girl dancer attired in yellow, who with her male escort offer a series of neat acrobatic bits of dancing.

Ross Wyse and Company, consisting of two men and a woman member, offer a song, dance and comedy skit. They tumble about, crack jokes and sing funny ditties in a manner that satisfies.

The chorus' finale is unusual in that it presents them in parrot costumes, striking in their brilliant hues. They perform atop six-foot ladders and make their way about the stage in a truly adept manner. The background is that of a large parrot perched on his swing.

New York Coliseum

Week ending January 19

There is a great show of six acts at this house for the first half, featuring Blanche Calloway and Her Joy Boys. The next to closing act, Charlie Jordan and Johnny Woods, billed as Radio's Ballyhooligans, takes first honors, their act getting twice the laughs and applause of any other.

The opening act is Gwynne, the Aristocrat of Deception, who with the assistance of two men and two women, offers exceptionally well done feats of magic. The act works 10 minutes and uses full stage. Next is Rogan and Trigger, one nicely dressed, the other a dead pan. Their act opens with one of them doing a bit of tapping while the other just looks dumb. It appears to be an average number two act until the boys start their regular routine of comedy acrobats. This gets plenty laughs and earns the boys an encore. They work in one for 12 minutes, with encore of curtain speech. They are on 14 minutes. A good act for any house.

Ruby Norton offers "Famous Blondes" as her contribution to a good show. Clarence Senna, her accompanist, also works as master of ceremonies for her act. Miss Norton opens with the singing of "Broadway Lullaby," and follows with a rather mediocre impersonation of Mme. Jeritza, in which she sings a bit from the opera, "Faust." Her next impression is of the great Sophie Tucker. Miss Norton does her best work in this impersonation and gets a whole-hearted response from the audience for it. She closes this bit, naturally, with the singing of "Some of These Days." As herself, she concludes with that popular song, "River, Stay 'Way from My Door."

Robert Emmet Keane, working in place of Lyons and Snyder, opens his hilariously funny monologue with his unbilled feminine partner making a speech against liquor. He interrupts and offers a discourse on the evils of all liquids except liquor. Even if it wasn't as good as it is, he would still have received a great hand from the apparently thirsty customers. They also offer a story in song on the dress question.

Jordon and Woods poke fun at all the popular radio broadcasts. They do it with impersonations of the stars and announcers, using as props, nothing more than two "mikes" and a piano. The boys work hard to put themselves over and certainly succeed. They stopped the show cold; the audience would not stop until they encored. Even then they could have stayed on forever. This reviewer has never caught an afternoon show or even a night show when an act received so much applause.

Blanche Calloway and her 15 Hot Shots of Rhythm, on for closing, offered the same hot dancing, music and singing that have made her brother, Cab, famous. Blanche is a beautiful girl, a real showman and good entertainer. Her band of 12 is composed of versatile and showmanly musicians, who assist greatly in putting the act over. She leads the band, in an accomplished manner, and with all the particular antics and motion of "Cab." Her singing is good, and of course she sings "St. Louis Blues," and "Minnie the Moocher." The act is a distinct novelty and does very well at this house.

Feature picture is "Strictly Dishonorable." Show caught Saturday afternoon, January 16. Business good.

Denver Denver

Week ending January 13

Fanchon and Marco's "Carnival" Idea, while lacking in one or two of the acts, makes up the deficiency by the colorful settings and the snappy line, and some of the acts are above par.

The carnival idea is carried out in the amusement park setting, with the stage band all dressed up in circus band suits and hats. The girls in the first routine wear sort of Mardi Gras costumes, with frills all over, and the routine closes with the girls running the prop merry-go-round while Raynor Lehr, as master of ceremonies, does the ballyhooing. Cropiey and Violet, a roping and adagio team, combine the two and make an unusual and good act. Both do a little roping and Cropley tosses Violet around and rolls over and over across the stage, all the while holding her upright, with her feet in his hands and she twirling the lariat all the time. The second routine by the line is a tap toe dance. Raynor Lehr did several request dance numbers. Louis K. Goody and his huge bear, with the two wrestlers, were good comedy for a few minutes. The third line were dressed as drum majors and did a fast routine with their batons. This is one of the best trained lines seen in several weeks. The Andresens work with a 20-foot pole, one end resting on the male members shoulder and the girl doing her gymnastics on the other end. An excellent balancing act. The girl also danced twice across the stage on her hands. The closing flash was with the girls in their drum major uniforms and with each member of the act doing a turn.

Detroit Hollywood

Week ending January 13

Laughter ruled the first half bill at the Hollywood, with Toby Grimmer from WWJ doing a monologue of Negro stories to get the audience in good humor for what followed.

Eddie Weber and Virginia Ray, offering an act entitled "Is She Dumb!" prove that the cash customers still love sheer nonsense. They cut up and clown all over the stage, with a line of fast chatter, several dance numbers and other articles of entertainment. They work fast and cleanly, ending up with a slow-motion dance that is worth seeing twice.

Naro Lockford and company leave the crowd laughing with their "Dance Humoresque." They open with a golf skit in wihch Naro tosses Violet Schafer about in great style. The girl is a clever contortionist, as well as an adagio worker of no mean ability. A rope twister who dances leads up to the finale in which Naro, assisted by three huskies, offers a burlesque adagio that is a riot.

Eddie Loughton as master of ceremonies and director of the Hollywood Merrymakers performs in his pleasing manner.

Betty Bowker on Radio

Miss Betty Bowker, well known in musical and radio circles in San Antonio, is now featured over radio station KMAC in a thrice-a-week commercial program. She accompanies herself at the piano in a cycle of songs.

ORGAN SOLOS

"GUSS" FARNEY (Salt Lake City Capitol) offered an organ novelty last week which was a direct plug for a coming attraction. He presented it in such a clever and interesting manner that the usual "curse" of plugging features just wasn't there.

Farney took the audience on a musical airplane trip to the film studios, where they meet and sing to a few of the film celebrities, whose faces appear on the screen. Scenes from the film are placed upon the screen as audience sings and it is concluded by a shot of Wallace Beery playing the piano, while Farney accompanies him at the organ. Farney, orally, tells the audience that they must return to the theatre, and takes them back via air (with a film of a plane as background) as they sing a final chorus of a popular tune. The added effects and Farney's showmanly handling of this solo brought good applause and was a great plug for the feature picture.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) for New Year Week offered a novelty organ presentation which he termed "New Year's Resolutions." First on the program was "Harvest Moon." This was followed by a clever parody to "Long, Long Trail"; next came a brand new one entitled "Love Gave You to Me"; then a special arrangement on "Auld Lang Syne"; next "Now's the Time to Fall in Love," and for his closing selection, a burlesque on "My Blue Heaven."

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing Keith) celebrated his third anniversary at this house by building a community-sing around this event. The audience "went for it in a big way," with heavy applause after every number. This chap is, without a doubt, one of the most popular organists in the East.

His program opened as usual with the playing of "Voice of the RKO" and an interesting talk. Then came the singing of the following songs: "Call it Madness," "Rest of the Crowd Goes Home," "Time on My Hands," an original and very clever parody on "Little Mary Brown," and a final chorus of "Anchors Aweigh."

CHARLES DARRIN (Mansfield Straughn Hall), who features original community singing novelties at this theatre, which is located within the grounds of the Ohio State Teachers College, recently offered another of his original concoctions, built around the popular ballad, "Just a Memory." After the introductory slide, he played the verse in strict slow tempo, incorporating many pleasing registrations. A chorus followed, enhanced by a scrim tableau with a male vocalist singing the lyric. Novel variations on the melody prepared the audience for a singing chorus, which received a significant reception. This audience of college students is ideal for an organist who features community singing, and it has been an easy task for Darrin to build a big popularity for himself.

EDNA LYMAN (Los Angeles Western) is now in her third week here. She succeeds Albert Hay Malotte, in what is considered the "plum" of Pacific Coast theatre jobs. It is unfortunate that Miss Lyman lacks the musical ability and that quality of assurance so essential to a job of this proportion. She possesses one of the sweetest voices ever heard, perfect for this type of work, and when she forgets "fear" of the audience and improves her registration, she will have a popularity she will be well proud of. At the performance caught Miss Lyman offered "Kiss Me Goodnight, but Not Good-bye." Her singing is evidently the reason for her engagement, and the matinee audience was generous in their applause. To one who recalls that the organ in this house is the largest and finest in this city, it is difficult to forget the desire to hear something besides flutes, strings and vox humanas. We sincerely hope that Miss Lyman will feel more freedom as time goes by; meanwhile, those who appreciate a splendid, soothing voice will get much enjoyment from her work.

CHAUNCEY HAINES (Los Angeles United Artists) offered a very musical sketch of California composers and their accomplishments. It was somewhat drawn out, though this writer personally admires the artist's playing. Beautifully played in spots, presented in a showmanly manner, the number still lacked spontaneity. This organist really knows his organ and the solo proved to be another case of playing ability overshadowing mediocre material.

OVERTURES

PHIL FABELLO (New York Coliseum) capably directed His Entertainers in an outstanding overture this week, which he introduced, via mike, as 'A Medley of 1931 Hits." Smartly played tunes (which the audience were told to guess or remember the names of) were cleverly lighted with effects in keeping with the mood of each number.

Credit for the very good arrangement of numbers goes to Billy Moore, saxophonist of this fine aggregation. Fabello features his men and works hard to give the audiences an entertaining overture each week, and invariably does. There is a certain intimacy that Fabello has created with the audience that, in this reviewer's knowledge, no band has equalled.

CHARLES B. STONE (Cincinnati Albee), who has just taken charge of the pit, is not only a finished musician but a thorough showman as well.

Disregarding precedent, Stone does not make an announcement preceding the overture, but, with his 15 men arranged in a semicircle so that each one faces the audience, he gets down to business immediately when the platform is raised, and does it in a manner which clicks instantly.

In addition to the ensemble numbers in this week's overture, a particularly appealing violin solo is featured, the entire program being designed most effectively to bring out the talents of the men, both individually and collectively.

The first show audience didn't hesitate very long in expressing their approval of Stone's first local appearance. Stone promises a number of musical innovations.

FRED WARING (New York Roxy) and his Synco-Symphonic Orchestra. This orchestra includes Waring's original Pennsylvanians together with 30 or more additional musicians. The present combined Roxy orchestra is called the largest and greatest of its kind ever assembled for a motion picture theatre. An orchestra of this type makes it possible to offer any or all styles of music, allows greater flexibility, and can give better support to theatre programs. Consequently this orchestra cannot be construed as either a symphony or a jazz orchestra, but it is a combination of both.

The overture for this week is "Selections from 'The Student Prince'." Dressed in white dress jackets and seated on a stepped platform which shows them to good advantage, the orchestra offers the most popular of the show numbers. Waring, himself, leads in a masterful fashion from a lower dais.

Stuart Churchill, one of the three drummers, sings, in a beautiful voice, "Deep in My Heart," as the orchestra softly accompanies. This part of the program received very good applause. The Girl Friends follow with harmony and "Harlem" singing to the comedy melody, "Crazy Song." The reception accorded them was also good.

JOE FULCO (New Orleans Loew's State) and his orchestra get a nice hand on the two numbers offered in their overture, "Cuban Love Song" and "Bend Down, Sister." The orchestra plays conventional orchestrations of these popular numbers which bring into play its various soloists.

ERNEST HAUSER (San Antonio Majestic) presented a concert overture with the RKO-lians in "A Bouquet of Roses." "Moonlight and Roses" was his first rendition; then he went into "Roses of Picardy" and "My Wild Irish Rose." Just before the vaudeville started, Dave Smason, another master violinist, took up the baton and put the musicians through during the stage show.

ALFRED RICCI (New York RKO 86th) and his RKOlians presented a snappily arranged overture of popular tunes, introducing it as "A Medley of Popular Songs." The reaction of the audience was distinctly favorable and was certainly justified. A feature of this overture was the harmonizing by three of the boys of the popular comedy song, "A Hot Dog, A Blanket and You," and the trio arrangement played with muted brass instruments.

Ricci shows great ability at directing. He is natural and personable and has an aggregation of good musicians.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee Wisconsin) and his Wisconsin theatre orchestra, aided by Jack Martin at the organ, present "Our Musical Album." Selections include "Just a Song at Twilight," "If I Had You," "The Song Is Ended," "Son of the Desert Am I" and "Who Am I." The last named was sung by members of the orchestra while a dancer went through her steps on the stage. The two preceding selections were sung by a male soloist.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 108

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 114.—(A) Just why does a crater form on only one carbon with a d.c. arc, and on both with an a.c. arc? (B) Just why are the craters smaller on a d.c. arc than is the one of a a.c. arc? (C) Electric current will not travel through air, except in flashes and at very high voltages. It will not leap from one carbon tip (projection arc) to the other over an air gap of even one sixty-fourth of an inch. Yet when the carbons actually contact and are separated again, current will flow, even though the separation be as much as one-fourth of an inch or more. Explain this matter fully.

Bluebook School Question No. 108 was: (A) Tell us what the projectionist who secures the best results from disc records must do. (B) Describe the method of starting the amplifier equipment when using disc records. (C) Describe the method of testing records. (D) If speed in excess of 90 feet is demanded, what precaution is necessary at changeover?

Gosh! You nearly swamped us with answers this week. Must be a lot of you pretty certain of your onions in the matter of records. The following made acceptable answers, an asterisk following a name indicating an excellent reply:

Lester Borst*, C. Rau and S. Evans*, Henry Edwards*, Roy Arntson*, James Hendershot, Dave Prinn*, William Bogert, Walter Lomax*, N. D. Garling*, H. D. Cole, Alfred Bann, Bill Doe*, Charles L. Goldman*, W. D. Samuels*, William Alexander, Leroy Bates, G. E. Doe*, Sam Madden, George Porder*, John Truax, T. Van Vaulkenburg*, Tom Davis and William Joupe, Frank S. Roberts, Tom Habbler, Dave Sanger*, Howard H. Smith*, T. L. Oleson, John Dagg, Tim O'Day, Thomas McGruder*, Phil C. Evans, John Ralson, Tom Gibbs and Dave Saunders*, H. T. Jones, James Daniels, Larry Tipton*, D. T. Wylie*, Dan Jones, Frank Mathews*, Thos. Atterbury, Tom Habbler, Tom H. Gordon, Rex U. Lang*, Frank F. Famaer*, J. D. Orlander, T. B. Kay, Ben H. Robbins, Larry Anderson*, D. L. Williams, D. L. Harper*, T. M. Stanhope, J. L. Sanderson, H. D. Schofield, Bob Danning, Phillip Davis, L. Mooring, Frank Oliver*, Rex U. Lang, Dan K. Hammitt, L. D. Mooring, P. R. Simmons, L. T. Love, P. G. Carnakis, George Richards, Pete Itt, Lon Jackson*, H. T. Goldfarb, P. R. Findley, Mike Devoy and Dave Raltson*, A. J. Jones, T. H. Catlin and G. R. Roberts, P. L. O'Mally, Jack Sargent, Jake H. Karlin, Dan Singer, Bob and John Leroy, T. H. Delano, S. T. Young, D. L. Parsonlee, Robert Singer and Tom Cotty, Frank Martin, George L. Clark, H. T. Winters*, Richard L. Rogers and P. J. Hill.

In this case I think I shall print the answers of various ones to various sections. Our old friend, G. E. Doe, made the best answer to Section (A). He says:

"There are many things he must do, first of which is to keep all parts of the equipment functioning as perfectly as possible. He must keep the records well protected from dust and dirt and wipe them off carefully each time after they are placed upon the turntable. He must be sure his needles are all of the same diameter, of the same length and same type, and that they are all in perfect condition. He must make sure that the start and changeover cues are right for his particular kind of equipment. He must be certain that the needle rests upon the start mark, and that the film-start frame is over the aperture. He must be sure the records are all correctly marked for turn-down. He must always be sure that the arm swings freely and that the needle point rests upon the record with neither too much nor too little pressure, and that the turntable runs smoothly and with even speed. He must be able to effect changeover at exactly the right point. He must not leave records lying around, but remove and store them immediately after use."

(B) I think Messrs. Rau and Evans did at least as well as any one with this one. They say:

"To start the Western Electric amplifier equipment when using records, first of all (1) see to it that starting switches are in the 'off' position; (2) see that the battery switch is ready for use; (3) close a-c. supply switch; (4) close filament circuit switch and let filaments warm up for at least five minutes; (5) close switch of plate current circuit; (6) close horn safety switch, making certain that relay switch on fader panel is set for disc reproduction; (7) make sure that the film-disc transfer switch is set for 'disc'."

[Note: After all, that question was hardly a fair one, as worded, because there are so many different sorts of equipment, the routine of which varies considerably in the procedure now under discussion. When I formulated that question I did not at the moment think of that phase of the matter. Apologies.—F. H. R.]

(C) We will award the answer of Lon Jackson the prize for excellence in this item. He says:

"The careful projectionist who has real pride in his work will monitor his records before using them in a show, as follows: Place record in position on turntable, with needle exactly on the starting mark. Set fader, or whatever control volume, at its normal running position. Start projector and count turntable rotations (a bit of white paper under edge of record at starting mark will assist in this) until sound starts. Then, using a china marking pencil, mark the 'turn-down' on record, as per count."

(D) Lester Borst wins out on this one. He says:

"If a subject is being projected at speed in excess of 90, and the turn-down marking on the record was made at 90, then unless the projectionist be very much on the job, it is not unlikely that a blank screen, or at least a tail piece, may show, for the reason that, whereas the working projector is running at excess speed, the pickup of the incoming one will be only normal."

Soviet Makes Rapid Strides In Developing Talking Film

The government of Soviet Russia has had engineers working on the development of talking pictures since 1926, according to Acting Commercial Attache Douglas Miller at Berlin, and at present the Meshrabpom Film Company has 10 studios with nine recording sets installed.

In addition, there are said to be a number of other studios in the country. The soviet government claims that in 1932 they will have 50 recording sets installed, all working on a principle designed by soviet engineers. The soviet is also working on foreign versions, and the manufacture and installation of reproducing apparatus is said to be progressing rapidly.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.
